The National Convict Labor Good Roads association will meet in Grand Rapids Wednesday morning, July 23.

Among the speakers who have accepted invitations to be present are, Isaac B. Potter of New York, president of the National Convict Labor Good Roads association, president of the American Motor league, ex-president of the old time L. A. W., and one of the pioneer good roads advocates of the country; E. L. Powers, editor of the Good Roads Magazine, New York, and Sidney Gorham of Chicago, an eminent lawyer, orator and prominent automobile club member.

The National Convict Labor Good Roads association, under the auspices of which the convention will be held, is organized and incorporated under the laws of the state and has its headquarters in that city. It has about 500 members in Michigan.

George Eitel, 35 years old, of Pittsburg, Pa., telegraph inspector for the Pennsylvania railroad, was struck by the southbound flyer on the C. R. & I. Thursday and instantly killed. Eitel was inspecting the wires along the tracks and was riding a velocipede when the flyer bore down on him. He jumped and attempted to drag the machine after him, but the engine struck him. His companion, F. A. Sellars, also of Pittsburg, escaped. The body was taken to Kalkaska. Eitel was married six months ago.

Ten thousand dollars for the loss of her singing voice is the sum demanded of the Saginaw Valley Traction company by Retta M. Sorenson, a talented vocalist of Saginaw, in a suit for damages filed against the company. Mrs. Sorenson in her complaint charges that while attempting to board an interurban car at Carrollton for Saginaw last October, the motorman started too soon and she was dragged several hundred feet. She declares she suffered such strains and internal injuries that she had been unable to sing since and that her voice is permanently ruined.

The board of trustees of the Michigan Employment Institution for the blind at a meeting last week, voted to admit patients from outside the state into the institution. This action is subject to the opinion of the attorney-general as to its legality. Those from outside the state will be required to pay their own board and maintenance but otherwise will have the same privileges as Michigan patients. It is believed that this action on the part of the board will more than double the attendance at the institution as there are only two or three similar places in the United States and none of these are so complete.

In line with the movement recently inaugurated by the postoffice department, to co-operate within its limitations with all highway officials looking to the improvement of roads in the various states, the clerks in the division of rural free delivery are sending notices to local highway officials warning them that rural delivery will not be continued on roads not kept in good condition. Reports thus far received show greater activity than heretofore in the reconstruction and repair of highways in various localities, especially on rural route roads.

Driven insane by the intense heat, John Clark, aged 35 years, ran amuck on the streets of Evart and smashed the plate glass in the windows of seven business places before he was retained. The damage amounts to over $1,000.

Clark is a farmer and lives nine miles out from Evart. He drove to the village with a neighbor and as they reached Main street, Clark jumped from the wagon, took up a huge club and ran yelling down the street. He smashed the first plate glass he came to and continued until he had wrecked six more. Several men leaped onto Clark, but he shook them off. Finally eight men made a combined attack and captured Clark and pinned him to the sidewalk and afterward locked him up.

George B. Horton, master of the state grange, will engage a forestry expert from the agricultural college or the state university to compute the profit on three tracts of timber, which Horton has permitted to grow for thirty-seven years. He desires to determine the profit so as to fix the investment in reforestation of timber lands. The expert will ascertain the value of the timber thirty-seven years ago at the market price then and the value of it if cut and marketed now.

TEST FOR DIAMONDS.

How to Tell When a Stone Is Genuine or Not.

"Few persons," writes a London jeweler, "are willing to trust to their own knowledge and observation in purchasing diamonds. Even pawnbrokers, who spend their lives in handling precious stones, are often cheated. Although to become an expert is the development of a special gift through years of experience, there are a few simple tests which will aid a buyer of diamonds.

"One test is to prick a needle hole through a card and look at the hole through the doubtful stone. If the latter is spurious two holes will be seen, but if it is a diamond only one hole will be visible. Every imitation stone which resembles a diamond gives a double reflection, while the genuine diamond's reflection is single. This is a delicate test, because it is difficult to see even a sharp and well defined object through a diamond. The single refraction of the gem also allows one to determine an uncertain stone. If the finger is placed behind it and viewed through the stone with a watchmaker's glass the grain of the skin will be plainly seen if the stone is not a diamond. But if it is a diamond the grain of the skin will not be distinguished at all."

The First Lifeboat.

About the year 1784 L. Ludkin, a London coach builder, designed what he called an "unsinkable boat." It was, however, a yawl which he converted by adding projecting gunwales of cork, with watertight compartments. It was unwieldy, and no practical use was made of it. Five years later Henry Greathead, a boat builder, designed a lifeboat, which was built by public subscription, and it seems to have been constructed on proper lines, for we find that during the following fourteen years he built no fewer than thirty-one and, moreover, received a government award of £1,200. The National Lifeboat Institution was founded in 1823 under the patronage of George IV.—London Saturday Review.

STUDY OF DAIRY FORM.

There is only one positive method of determining a cow's worth, and that by her actual record and the Babcock test and scales. But a study of dairy form is instructive and necessary in order that the cow's function may be understood and that we know how that function is performed. The purpose of the dairy cow is to make milk, and to feed and handle her properly for milk a knowledge of the principal organs employed is necessary. After studying the cow and knowing the work required of each part of her anatomy it will be realized that "dairy form" is the direct result of the activity of these parts.

The farmer, either in buying or rearing cows for use in the dairy, should

Milk can come only from the food the cow consumes. The food is taken into the stomach and digested according to the same general laws of digestion of other animals. When digested, the essential constituents of food are in condition to be taken by the blood and carried to those parts of the body best qualified for its use. Since milk is a product of the blood, an abundant milk supply depends upon an abundance of blood making material, which must come from the food the cow consumes. Therefore a large quantity of food must be consumed by the large milk producer. A large stomach (No. 11 in the diagram) is therefore one of the essential requisites of the dairy cow and, aside from a large udder, is the most striking characteristic of the "dairy form."

A Good Dairy Type.

usually broad forehead and prominent eye, indicating large brain and strong nervous system. Did she not have this she would not be capable of so much work as indicated by her wonderful record. Note the marked feminine appearance which is characteristic of dairy performance. See the clean cut limbs and the absence of any beefy tendency. Note the well formed udder extending beyond the thighs behind and filling full a high, thin, curving flank. For such an udder there is no room for beef on the rear quarters. Her curved lines on back and belly indicate large consuming capacity, although the records reveal the fact that she was not an exceptionally heavy feeder, but she made very economical use of the food consumed.

This is a dairy type worth studying. Apply this measure to your best milk producer and see if you do not find a similarity of form.

It Reached the Spot.

Mr. E. Humphrey, who owns a large general store at Omega, O., and is president of the Adams County Telephone Co., as well as the Home Telephone Co., of Pike county, O., says of Dr. Kings New Discovery: "It saved my life once. At least I think it did. It seemed to reach the spot—the very seat of my cough, when everything else failed." Dr. King's New Discovery not only reaches the rough spot it heals the sore spots and the weak spots in throat, lungs and chest. Sold under guarantee at F. G. Hines & Co. drug store, 50c and $1.00. How to Clean Straw.

A good straw lasts a long time if properly cared for, and when trimmings are so very reasonable in price every woman can have stylish hats if she knows the cleaning trick. To clean a white milan or a split straw scrub with toothbrush or nailbrush dipped in a weak solution of oxalic acid and water, then with clean water, not wetting more than necessary. Then scatter precipitate of sulphur and lay in the sun. Brush off with a clean brush when dry, and your hat will be clean and white. A black milan, hemp braid or horsehair, clean with nap side of velvet dipped in alcohol and rubbed thoroughly with the tips of the fingers. Black chip, give a coat of bottle shoeblacking. Colored hats, clean with gasoline and a piece of velvet. Faded hats can be tinted with a dye made of oil paints and gasoline. The only remedy for chip hats that are sunburned or faded is to give them a coat of polish or take them to a professional. White, colored and black lace or net hats can be cleaned by dipping the hats without the trimming in clean gasoline and drying outside.

SICK PEOPLE
SHOULD INVESTIGATE

I Know the Diseases of Both Sexes Like an Open Book. I have Been Curing Them for 49 Years. In fact, My Entire Life Has Been Devoted to Curing Where Others Have Failed.

I Have Changed Hundreds Upon Hundreds of Nervous Wrecks Into Fine, Strong Men and Women. I Accept No Case I Cannot Cure.

I ESPECIALLY invite all discouraged and dissatisfied ones who have been treated without a cure to write me fully and frankly about their case. It will cost you nothing to write me, and I will gladly tell you your condition, truthfully, honestly—accepting no case that I cannot cure—holding out no false promises. I have spent my whole life in the study and cure of chronic diseases, and my study and investigation have been blessed by the discovery of many new and masterful methods of treating disease. Forty-nine years ago I graduated from the Western Homeopathic Medical College of Cleveland, O., for two years Head Physician at the Alma Sanitarium, Alma, Mich. I have spent many long years as a specialist, treating chronic diseases of all kinds with wonderful success, and am now owner of one of the largest sanitariums in the country, giving my entire time to the treatment of Nervous Diseases of both sexes. I cure the worst forms of Epilepsy, St. Vitus Dance, Paralysis, etc.

Dr. Andrew B. Spinney

LEGAL NOTICES

Mortgage Foreclosure.

Whereas, default has been made in the payment of the money secured by a mortgage dated the tenth day of April, 1903, executed by Adolph Kirchner and Mary A. Kirchner, his wife to Citizens' State Bank of Whitewater, Wisconsin, which said mortgage was recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds of the County of Charlevoix, Michigan, in liber thirty-seven of Mortgages on pages forty and forty-one, on the 27th day of April, 1903 at nine o'clock in the forenoon. And whereas, the amount claimed to be due on said mortgage at the date of this notice is the sum of one thousand four hundred thirteen and sixty-five one-hundredths (1,413.65) dollars, the principal, interest, taxes and insurance, and the further sum of fifty dollars as an attorney fee, stipulated for in said mortgage, and which is the whole amount claimed to be due on said mortgage, and no suit or proceeding having been instituted either in law or equity, to recover the debt now remaining secured by said mortgage or any part thereof, whereby the power of sale contained in said mortgage has become operative.

Now, therefore, notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the said power of sale, and in pursuance of the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises therein described at public auction, to the highest bidder, at the east front door of the court house in said county of Charlevoix, on the twenty-third day of July next, at ten o'clock in the forenoon on that day; which said premises are described in said mortgage as follows, to-wit: The south half (s½) of the north-east quarter (ne¼) of section eighteen (18) town thirty-two (32) north, of range six (6) west; and the north-west quarter (nw¼) of the south-east quarter (se¼) of section eighteen (18) town thirty-two (32) north, of range six (6) west.

Sinclair's Strategy.

By HENRY HAVEN.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

"Our dance, I believe, Miss Trent."

Dick Underby whisked Myra away, and to Fred Sinclair, with a declaration of love trembling upon his tongue. It seemed that Myra went with ill omened eagerness. Underby hurried Myra off to the dancing floor, but Sinclair remained in the conservatory and made rude remarks to the tiny fountain playing in the fern lined basin.

All the season it had been a race between himself and Underby for Myra's favor, and now the season was closing with the Dagmar dance, yet neither of the two men had been skillful enough to evade Myra's innocent stratagems and make his avowal of love.

Both had come to the dance determined to put his fate to the test, for on the morrow Myra was to leave town for a long visit to distant relatives. Perhaps had there been but one suitor his persistence might have been rewarded by opportunity, but Underby and Sinclair unconsciously aided Myra in her evasions by interrupting the other at crucial moments. When the last dance had been played and the guests were departing Sinclair realized, with sinking heart, that his opportunity was lost.

Underby, too, was heart heavy with disappointment, and chagrin still showed in his face when he came to the station the following afternoon to see

SHE WROTE OUT A ONE WORD MESSAGE, "YES."

Myra Trent off. Sinclair was there, but upon his face was a smile of such satisfaction as made Underby wonder if perhaps Sinclair had found his opportunity, after all.

There was a stir as the train pulled in, and under cover of the confusion Sinclair handed a package to Miss Trent.

"It's the newest detective story," he explained. "I know that you like all sorts of mystery stories. I have taken the liberty of adding a homemade puzzle in case you find the book too short."

Myra smiled appreciatively. She preferred cryptograms to chocolates, riddles to roses. She had won many magazine contests of this sort in her youth. She found Sinclair's present more acceptable than Underby's violets, and as soon as she had settled herself in her Pullman section she unwrapped the book.

As she ran over the pages an envelope dropped out. It contained a single sheet of note paper, and in Sinclair's copperplate handwriting was this note:

Kara Myra—Eble, eh kun helpo de tiu-ĉi sinsolo, vi trovos tiu-la malfacilaĵo kompreni la sencon de tiu-ĉi sendifajho, sed mi scias ke vi ŝatata labori je enigmoj, kaj pro tio mi sendas al vi tiun ĉi leteretion. Ghi sciigos al vi tion kion vi ne permesas ke mi sciigu al vi persone. Mi vin amas, karulino, kaj vi igos min la plej felicha viro en la mondo per la unu vorto "Jes."

Myra smiled as she studied the odd jumble of words. Many of them looked familiar. There was no mistaking "eulgnoj." "Mondo" was clearly the "world," and "labori" was "labor." Other words were of familiar aspect, and then there were some that were totally strange.

It might be a combination of the "hog Latin" of childhood days and the real Latin of the college course, but an hour's study showed many words not to be accounted for on any such hypothesis. The more she studied the more firmly convinced was Myra that this was some new form of cryptogram invented by Sinclair to divert her on her two day trip.

She was still studying the slip of paper when the porter came around to make up her berth, and in the troubled sleep which broke the night journey strange combinations of letters danced before her eyes.

When she came back from breakfast in the diner the next morning the porter approached with a small package.

"A gemman done tole me gib you dis here in de mo'nin'," he announced as he handed the package to Myra. The girl's face brightened as she recognized Sinclair's handwriting. "This" evidently contained the key. She would not have to puzzle longer.

From the package dropped a small booklet with "Esperanto Key" on the cover page. Myra had heard of the "universal language" and had heard also that it required but half an hour to become familiar with the grammar. So, after all, her mystery was nothing but a letter in Esperanto, and the unraveling would come in a brief hour. She was half inclined to regret that the mystery would solve itself so quickly as she thought of the long day's ride before her.

But in this thought she was wrong, for, although the key was accompanied by a larger dictionary and she found the few rules absurdly simple, these were but part of the mystery.

The book laid stress upon accents as essential to the understanding of the words, and Sinclair's letter was entirely wanting in accents, nor could she find some of his words in the dictionary.

It was not until late in the afternoon that she stumbled upon the explanation. "Shlosilo" she could not find, but under the accentual S's she found "slos," meaning a lock, and "ilo," an instrument, and decided that a lock instrument was a key. With this clew as to the surplus h's which replaced the accents on preceding letters she soon had the translation written out. It read:

Dear Myra—Perhaps even with the aid of this key you will have some small difficulty in getting at the sense of this letter, but I know that you like to puzzle over enigmas, and it is for this reason that I am sending you this note. It is to tell you what you will not let me tell in person. I love you, dear, and you will make me the happiest man on earth with the one word "Yes."

Myra allowed the paper to flutter to the floor as she stared out of the window on the glory of the western sunset toward which they were flying. She was half pleased, half angry, at the declaration. This was her first season in society, and she was not minded to give up her liberty so soon, and for that reason she had evaded Sinclair's declarations. She did not wish to say yes so soon, and she could not say him no.

She remembered how Nancy Baldwin had been the belle of one season and during the next had been almost completely monopolized by Ben Trayer. Myra had planned to have another year of freedom before she should be led captive by Cupid.

But in the end an amused smile played about her lips as she thought of Sinclair's strategy, and when the porter came through the car to light the gas she procured a telegraph blank and wrote out a one word message, "Yes."

Her uncle was at the station the next morning to greet her and to hand her a yellow envelope.

"This came just as I was leaving the house," he said. "I hope that it does not contain bad news."

Myra tore open the envelope and read the short message.

"I am coming on," Sinclair wired, "to tell it over again in English and pantomime."

"It's good news—very good news," said Myra, smiling softly, as she looked up into her uncle's anxious face, for, after all, pantomime, not Esperanto, if properly expressed, is the universal language of love.

Afraid of Safety Pins.

It is not easy to realize the bondage to fear under which barbarous people live on account of their superstitious ignorance. Mrs. Theodore Bent tells in her book, "Southern Arabia," how she tried to make a present of a safety pin to a native woman and what a storm of indignation was occasioned by her act. "On our arrival at our camping ground and while we were waiting for our tents to be ready I was surrounded by women all masked. They seemed highly astonished at a safety pin which I was taking out, so I gave or, rather, offered it to an old woman near me. She wanted to take the pin, but several men rushed between us and roared at us both and prevented my giving it to her. I stood there holding it out and she stretching out her hand, and one of two men then asked me for it for her. I put it down on a stone, and she took it away and seemed pleased, but a man soon brought it back to me on the end of a stick, saying they did not know these things and were afraid of them.

The Opium Habit.

In an article on Robert Louis Stevenson's horror of the opium habit the Rev. W. E. Clarke in the chronicle of the London Missionary society gives a letter which the novelist sent when on the island to the native king of Samoa on the subject. In which he said: "Nothing is more quickly learned than the opium habit. It passes from one to another like a song. Nothing is so pernicious; it feeds upon unaccustomed races like a fire upon dry wood. And I assure your majesty no race appears less able to stand the results of this drug than that to which your majesty belongs and over so great a portion of which your majesty is called upon to rule."

Stevenson concludes a long letter by suggesting to the king that "any foreigner other than a doctor or a missionary acting as a doctor who shall be found to have distributed the drug either for money or as a gift" should at once be deported from the islands.

A Natur Study.

I like to watch the old fool hen that's tied beside my door. She has of little chickens ten and thinks she has threescore. Of all the blamed important things that ever fussed around she is the worst. All day she sings and claws the dirt around. She thinks she has the only chicks, and so she clucks and humps. All other chickens are gold bricks; all other hens are chumps. She sees a foe in every friend and drives that friend away. Her feathers always are on end; she's mad the livelong day. And so I watched the old fool hen, and still she seems to me like many chuckle headed men whom every day I see. This life to them's not worth a cuss, no pleasure it affords, because they fume and fret and fuss about their little hoards, with idle and envy in their souls pursue their narrow plan and ever guard their daily rolls and hate their fellow man.—Emporia Gazette.

Literary Notes

The "God-With-Us" Cure for Human Ills.

Rev. Dr. Robert MacDonald tells in the July Woman's Home Companion how the church is once more becoming active in the cure of human ills. Through the "Emmanuel Movement," started at Emmanuel Episcopal church in Boston, and taken up by Doctor MacDonald in his own church in Brooklyn, the church is again saying, "Arise, take up thy bed and walk."

"The complaint is going up from everywhere," says Doctor MacDonald, "that the church is losing its hold on practical men and women. The reason is not that the church is not faithful to its duty, but that the world has increased its facilities to satisfy man. But here is a new way of reaching the man of the world. His modern way of living, with all its hurry and worry, has gotten onto his nerves. He sleeps poorly, is depressed and melancholy, has nervous breakdowns, is dyspeptic and sluggish and miserable. The same man who will not listen to a purely spiritual appeal wants help, and wants it badly. The church that can promise him health with which to do his work, wins him. His bodily pain is very real to him, for it is so much nearer than a cramped and dormant spirit of which he is not conscious.

"Where does the Emmanuel Movement differ from Christian Science? There can be said to be only one point of similarity. It is that both are desirous of getting rid of disease. But they no sooner join issue than they disagree. The point of seperation is in what constitutes curable and incurable malady. The Emmanuel Movement treats only 'functional disorders of the nervous system.' Christian Science does not distinguish between functional and organic diseases. Then, again, the Emmanuel Movement works hand in hand with physicians, taking only such cases as they recommend, cases that are beyond the reach of drugs and the ordinary medical prescription."

Hans Andersen, the great Danish writer, was an excessively nervous man, and he had a very great fear of being buried alive. So great was this dread that every night when he went to bed he would place by his bedside a large piece of paper on which was written, "I am only apparently dead."

is a cheap way of reaching a great many people, and is used successfully by some of our best business houses. An especially good plan is to run an advertisement of a page or less—or two pages if you please—in the Courier and then, at a small additional expense, have a quantity of posters printed from this form. In this way you are sure of reaching practically all of the people you desire to influence. This is the plan of advertising that has been used successfully by the merchants of a neighboring city to build up an excellent out-of-town trade, and is wonderfully cheap when compared with the results obtained.

The Courier Office

is particularly well equipped for doing the class of work required by this method of advertising and can, besides placing your advertisement in nearly every home in the city and on rural routes out of here, print your posters in one or more colors, giving you the maximum of attractive, trade-compelling appearance in both "ad" and bills, bringing you greater results from an equal or even less expenditure than you can get elsewhere.

Try this method of advertising your business and you will not only benefit yourself directly, but by bringing trade to Charlevoix which might go elsewhere, help build up your town—every advance of which reflects upon your business in exact proportion as you build up that business.

Courier Grange Column

Wilson Grange No. 719.

Wilson Grange No. 719 met in regular session, July 19.

The small attendance is probably traceable to the busy season and a lively electrical storm early in the evening.

An interesting business session was held, followed by recess.

The lecturer had the following interesting program.

Recitation—"If something good is said."

Comic song—Fol-de-la-la.

Reading "The Inventor's wife."

Instrumental music.

Recitation—Trials of a Twin.

This program was supplemented by graphaphone music, a song by Brother Korthase of Deer Lake, and a speech by Brother Richard Lewis, of Charlevoix. Duties in the county clerk's office have not hurt "Uncle Dick" at all, he is as good a granger as when he lived in our midst. Come again Dick.

Number of members present twenty-five, visitors three.

Norwood Grange No. 1291.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT.

Whereas it being the pleasure of our Heavenly Father to remove from Norwood Grange No. 1291 our sister Lonise Gennett, our grange has met with a great loss. Her memorial is written in the hearts of those that knew and loved her and the fragrance of her life remain as an inspiration responsive to the call of love.

Therefore, Be it resolved that Norwood Grange extend sympathy to the bereaved family and may the everlasting arms surround them.

Committee, JAMES CHASE,
MAE BUGBEE.

South Arm Grange No. 815.

South Arm Grange met July 11 with a good attendance.

The receipts for the evening were $11.15.

A withdrawal card was given to Wm. Barley on his application.

Bros. Keat, Herndon and Olney each told the methods they would use in order to grow one hundred bushels of corn to the acre.

The question, "Are Americans too indulgent to their children" was discussed by the older members. Opinion varied widely on the subject, yet all believed in giving the children plenty of good times during the first years of childhood.

The debate: "Resolved that patent medicines do more harm than good, was decided in favor of the affirmative. The points scored were four to two.

The debate for next meeting is: "Resolved that women should have the right to vote." Affirmative, Anna Murphy, Mrs. Crawford, Mrs. Olney and Anna Keat. Negative, James Keat, Lon Herndon, Albert Lalonde and Bert Olney.

Worthy Master Olney had the misfortune to lose a barn containing several valuable farm tools. The loss was partly covered by insurance.

—Bro. Lawrence Isaman accidently shot himself while hunting on Saturday last. The bullet took a small piece off the lower part of the knee cap and lodged in the marrow of the large bone below the knee. The physician was unable to extract the bullet.

FROM BEAVER ISLAND—

Phil C. Gallagher went to Charlevoix on business this week.

James Dunleavy made a business trip to Charlevoix this week.

The prospects are good for a shingle mill at Pete McCauley's bay.

Misses Nellie Callaghan and Anna Gallagher went to Grand Rapids Monday.

Mrs. Dan P. Boyle and son are in Charlevoix, where Mr. Boyle is under the doctor's care.

The steamer Ronse Simmons is taking on a load of tan bark on the south side of the island.

Con O'Donnell went to Charlevoix this week after legal advice in regard to his horse falling in a well.

Bishop Richter, of Grand Rapids, confirmed a class at High Island Saturday and at Beaver Island Sunday. Sunday afternoon he went to Garden Island, where he consecrated the cemetery, over three hundred being in attendance.

Obituary

Gennett—Lonise Mary Gennett, daughter of Maxim and Rosella Gennett, was born December 21, 1874, and died June 21, 1908, at the home of her parents, who are pioneers of Norwood township.

Lonise obtained her education at Norwood, studied music and became a music teacher. She joined St. Louis church of Atwood, November 26, 1888. She was also a member of Norwood Grange and of the Lady Maccabees in which she filled important offices. Being of a cheerful disposition and liberal mind she was loved and respected by people of every faith.

She had a lingering illness and the end came as the moaning of the wind, as her frail barque passed out to the great sea of eternity.

Her funeral was largely attended and was held at the Catholic church at Atwood. The Catholic church choir from Charlevoix, sang the responses and at the close of the services the beautiful song, "Jerusalem My Heavenly Home." She was tenderly laid to rest in the Atwood cemetery.

"Oh, how sweet it will be,
In that Heavenly land,
So free from all sorrow and pain;
With songs on our lip
And with harps in our hand,
To meet one another again."

CONVENIENT HENCOOPS.

It Is Economy to Build Them Neatly and of Good Material.

As poultry houses on farms have to be repaired often as a general rule, would it not be better to build more substantial ones at first and save the trouble and expense of continually improving them? Let us consider this matter. The carpenter usually thinks that any kind of wood will do for a henhouse, and in that he is much mistaken. Only the well seasoned wood should be used, for when the rainy days arrive, the house having no heat in it, the boards will shrink and expand until they are out of shape more or less, and then there are cracks to contend with. Use the best wood in the first place.

Another point worth considering is that of planing the boards that are to be used on the inside of the house. It will take very little more time, and they are then easily cleaned and do not harbor dust as much as if they were rough. If they are smooth they can be easily whitewashed or painted.

The main point to consider in building a henhouse is that of removable roosts, nests and even the door boards if there is to be a board floor. Make all these appliances of smooth board or wood, and when they are dirty or the farmer wishes to clean his poultry house they can be taken out into the yard and sprayed, washed or even burned over with a torch. Consider all these things now, and in the end they will be much more economical.

The first sketch shows a convenient way to make a coop for the poultry yard, of which a special feature is its door. Procure a box of the right dimensions and saw a hole, d, in one end. Then strengthen the box with narrow strips of wood, b c, on each side of the hole b c. This acts as a groove for the door a to slide in. Thus you have a sliding door, which opens and shuts with the greatest ease. The front of the coop is inclosed with lath or narrow strips, placed two and a half to three inches apart. The top should be covered with a good grade of

A coop of this sort should be two to two and a half feet long, sixteen inches deep and not less than twenty inches high, while two feet would be better.

The simplest coop is the common A shaped coop. It is quickly and easily made. This coop may be constructed either with or without a floor. A floor is desirable, except during warm weather and where the soil drains quickly.

The box coop shown in the second sketch in some respects is preferable to the A shaped coop, for in the latter the hen can stand upright only near the middle of the coop, while with the box coop the entire floor space is available for her and the chickens. The box coop is also more easily cleaned.

If desired a small covered run can be made for each coop. This is especially desirable if there is danger of losses from cats, hawks, etc.

Fresh air is essential for the health of the fowls. A successful poultry raiser says:

"One of my poultry houses is lathed and plastered, while another is single boarded with paper lining on two sides. It has four half windows on south side and a frame fitted over each window with cloth stretched and tacked on. In this house I have been getting the most eggs and no frozen combs, although the drinking water freezes. The plastered house drew dampness until I had an old screen door hung and tacked cotton cloth over it. Soon after the hens began to lay."

Alfalfa For Horses.

Caution should be used in feeding alfalfa to horses, particularly if they have not been accustomed to it. Like other concentrated feeds, it seems to stimulate all the physical processes to such an extent that various disorders of the digestive system may appear. This is particularly noticeable in the urinary and perspiratory glands.—J. D. Graham.

Not Suitable For Alfalfa.

Any field likely to be under water or the soil saturated with water at any time for more than thirty-six hours at a time is quite unsuitable for alfalfa. Any field with a hard pan subsoil within two feet of the surface will prove unsatisfactory for alfalfa.

Last year France sent to this country $10,886 worth of alfalfa seed. The price charged American buyers is about 10 cents a pound for the French seed.

The garden is no place for trees.

GOVERNOR WARNER IN CHARLEVOIX

In Company with Lieutenant Governor Kelley Was Here Saturday

ADDRESSES AT CHARLEVOIX THEATER

Were Mixed Up in Accident While on Way Here

Governor Explained the Reasons Why He Asked for Renomination to Large Audience

Governor Warner and Lieutenant Governor Kelley were the guests of Charlevoix county Saturday.

Leaving their auto at Bellaire, the trip through this county was made by team, the party meeting their second accident of the campaign in the same week.

After leaving Ellsworth, the party was driving over the road at a lively clip, the carriage containing Lieutenant Governor Kelley, H. I. McMillan, A. L. Coulter and W. J. Gallagher being in the rear, Gallagher acting as driver, when a team attached to a stoneboat, coming out of a lane, frightened the team, causing them to snddenly swerve to one side, overturning the carriage down the embankment and throwing all out on the rocky ground. Gallagher hung on to the reins and succeeded in stopping the team, after being dragged for several rods.

Governor Warner in the carriage ahead saw the accident and hastened back, the relief of the party, but all escaped with only slight injuries, Lieutenant Governor Kelley suffering from a slight sprain and a few bruises and Coulter was hurt some. After water had been secured and the wounds dressed, the team was again attached to the carriage and the party reached here about 6:40 p. m. none the worse for the accident, where they were met at the Elston by a party of citizens headed by Mayor Rose and welcomed to the city.

At the appointed time the party proceeded to the Charlevoix Theater where a large audience was assembled. After calling the meeting to order, Mayor Rose called for music, which was furnished by the Elston House orchestra. A song, which was written for the occasion by Mr. Hampton was sung by a quintette composed of S. A. Marting, Drs. E. H. and A. M. Wilkinson, Italo Hines and Harold Hampton, after which the governor was introduced and given an enthusiastic reception.

The governor, after announcing that he and the lieutenant-governor were candidates for renomination, expressed the belief that in their travels throughout the state, he had had the priviledge of meeting more people than any governor of recent years and knew what the people were thinking about, after which in a frank manner he explained his reasons for asking for a renomination. Taking up the primary election law, which the people of Michigan have asked for by a vote of 8 to 1, he said he could see no reason why, if a majority vote was good enough for all other offices it should not be good enough for governor and lieutenant governor and explained his efforts to do away with the 40 per cent clause. Next taking up the railroad question the governor explained the two cent fare bill and the railroad commission act, stating his belief that they were most benefical measures, also the binder twine bill and other measures, which he had urged, explaining his efforts to do away with the evils of the secret lobby.

Last spring Governor Warner told the legislature that if they would consent to the passage of four measures, the primary bill, the anti-lobby bill, the telegraph and telephone company taxation bill and a bill prohibiting the watering of stocks, he would call a special session and after these bills were passed, would retire as a candidate for governor. The governor's statement that he believed he was right and wasn't going to lay down in the middle of a fight, provoked applause.

The main argument brought agaiust him, declared the governor, was that if elected again he would serve three terms which would be breaking a precedent, stating that many states in the union elected their governors not only three terms but, some as high as seven terms. He said that under the primary system, the people need not give a man two terms unless he deserved them and if he deserved the third term, he should be given it.

After another song by the quintette, Lieutenant Governor Kelley was introduced and immediately had the audience with him by his well known manner of speaking and fantons smile.

After stating that the governor had opposition to his renomination Mr. Kelley stated he didn't know whether there would be any other candidate for lieutenant governor or not, but if there were, no attention need be paid to them.

Mr. Kelley stated that the character of a man can often be told by the enemies he has made and then proceeded to tell who the enemies of Governor Warner were.

After an address which was marked by eloqueuce throughout interspersed by the flashes of wit, which have made Kelley famous, he concluded by saying:

The fight is on now and the only question is whether the people will stand by the governor who stood by them or desert him at a critical time. In standing with the people, the governor has aroused the enmity of the corporate interests and if the people desert him, then other governors will hesitate before they oppose these powerful interests of the state.

At the conclusion of the lieutenant governor's address, an informal reception was held, many going forward and greeting the speakers.

IN TWENTY-FIVE COUNTIES

Will the Anti-Saloon League Make Campaigne for Local-Option

Are Figuring on Local-Option by Cities, Villages, Townships and Resident Districts

In 22, possibly in 25 counties the question of local option will be submitted next spring. The Anti-Saloon league has in view the list of counties and will make campaigns for the submission.

They expect that the matter will be submitted in nearly every one of the counties selected and in many of them have strong hopes for success at the polls.

In addition the league is figuring on a local option law by cities, villages, townships and residence districts to present to the legislature this fall. They will cut out the ward feature, but are trying to figure out some way to make the residence district plan workable.

The list of counties in which they have strong hopes of success follows: Berrien, Calhoun, Ingham, Kalkaska, Huron, Branch, Montcalm, Alcona, Tuscola, Eaton, Ottawa, Mecosta and Sanilac.

They will also invade Ionia, Isabella, Newaygo, Allegan, Livingstone, Clare, Hillsdale, Lake and Osceola counties, and possibly Genesee, Leelenau and Benzie.

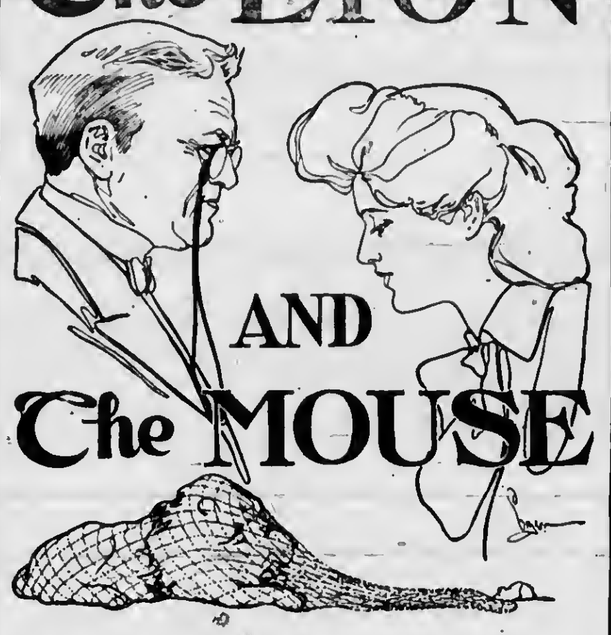
The LION AND The MOUSE



The Lion and the Mouse

That great American story of the present day exposing the unscrupulous methods of the money octopus novelized from Charles Klein's play

By Arthur Hornblow

ILLUSTRATED BY HEYER

Will begin in our next issue. We asked a brilliant woman who had seen the play what impressed her most. She said it was the victory of the young woman over the king of the trusts, the final triumph of the higher nature over the lower in which Shirley Rossmore frees John Ryder from the chains of his sordid ambitions and restores him to his better self, suggesting the fable of The Lion and the Mouse. This made the strongest impression, notwithstanding there is a beautiful love romance running through the story.

JOHN OLNEY DEAD

Was the Father of Thirteen Sons and Daughters

Had Been a Resident of this County For Many Years.

John Olney, an old pioneer of Charlevoix county, died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Joe D. Smith of this city, last Sunday morning after a few weeks illness.

Mr. Olney was born in New York, October 15, 1822, and was married to Celia LaSears in 1841. To that union were born ten children, seven of whom are living: Mrs. Olney died in Norwood in 1893.

Mr. Olney was again married to Mary Grant in 1850 and three children were born to them, all of whom are living.

Mrs. Olney died in Tennessee in 1885.

The funeral took place at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. Joe D. Smith, Monday, Rev. R. A. Wright officiating.

L. O. T. M. M. CELEBRATED

At Pot Luck Picnic Held in Charlevoix Tuesday

Attendance Was Large and all Were Out For a Good Time.

The pot-luck-picnic of the Lady Maccabees, advertised to take place at Charlevoix yesterday, came off according to schedule, with members present from eleven hives, over sixty ladies being present from out of town.

After serving dinner, listening to a fine program and witnessing a drill by the guards at the hall, they turned themselves loose for a while. The streets resounded with the Lady Maccabee yell.

After supper the time was taken up with degree work, and judging from the enjoyment, which they seemed to take, it must be great to be a Lady Maccabee.

Excursion to Beaver Island.

Next Sunday, July 27, the steamer Lena Knoblock will run an excursion to Beaver Island, leaving her dock at the foot of Mason street, at 8:00 a. m.

Enough time will be given to permit all to take in the many beauties of the Island. Fare, round trip, $1.00.

COVELL CLUB AT ALMA

Northern Michigan Candidate Gaining Steadily in the South.

Tuesday of last week a Covell club of 214 members as the starter was formed at Alma, all being enrolled Republican voters of that city.

The meeting was presided over by Hon. J. W. Holmes, one of the strongest men in Gratiot county, and the list of officers is sufficient evidence that Mr. Covell's chances in the southern part of the district are improving every day. Montcalm county promises a majority, which will go over the thousand mark.

ARTS AND CRAFTS SHOP

Opened Last Week by Miss Louise Garden of St. Louis.

Miss Lonise Garden of St. Louis, Missouri, has opened an Arts and Crafts shop in the building formerly occupied by McKinnon's restaurant on Bridge street, and is showing a complete stock of goods in that line.

Excursion to Boyne City.

Next Sunday the Lou A. Cummings will run an excursion to Boyne City, leaving here at 10:30 a. m., leaving Boyne City, on the return trip, at 6:30 p. m.

There will be a ball game between Boyne City and Sanilac and a good game is promised.

Fare round trip 25 cents.

DELIGHTFUL SOCIAL EVENT

At the Home of Mrs. Forrest S. Blanchard this Afternoon

Lawn Fete in Honor of Mrs. Thomas Robinson, of Georgia.

One of the leading social events of the season took place at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. Forrest S. Blanchard on Park avenue this afternoon from 1:30 to 4:00, when Mrs. Blanchard gave a lawn fete in honor of Mrs. Thomas A. Robinson, of Atlanta, Georgia, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Bartholomew and a niece of Mr. Blanchard.

Mrs. Blanchard was assisted in receiving the guests who numbered over a hundred, by her mother, Mrs. Charles Tolman, Mrs. L. D. Bartholomew, Mrs. H. L. Iddings, Mrs. Thomas A. Robinson and Miss Winifred Bartholomew.

The lawn was beautifully decorated with Japanese umbrellas, lanterns and flowers.

The guests were entertained with music and cards, the favors being flowers.

Among the guests was Mrs. Blanchard's friend, Mrs. Richard Bray of Arlington Heights, Chicago.

REGRETS HER DEPARTURE

Saginaw Courier-Herald Speaks Highly of Miss Elisabeth Putnam.

The Saginaw Courier-Herald has the following in regard to Miss Elisabeth Putnam.

"Friends of Miss Elisabeth Putnam, the popular instructress in music of the east side high school, will be pleased to learn that she has been offered the excellent position of director of music in the Benzonia academy, Benzonia, Michigan, but regret that its acceptance will cause her removal from this city. This is a position of responsibility and Miss Putnam is to be congratulated on her good fortune. During her short stay, with the Saginaw high school, Miss Putnam has become exceedingly popular with the musical clubs and her services as a vocalist have been much sought after because of her fine soprano voice.

DEATH OF BEULAH WEBSTER

Seven-Year-Old Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Platt Webster.

Beulah, the oldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Platt Webster, of Hayes township, died Saturday night after an operation for appendicitis. The funeral was held Monday, Rev. R. A. Wright officiating, burial taking place in Brookside cemetery.

CHAFIN AND WATKINS LEAD THE PROHIBS

Chosen as Candidates of the Prohibition Party

AT NATIONAL CONVENTION LAST WEEK

After a Contest—Platform a Short One but Covers Many Issues.

Cold Water Advocates Are Still in Hopes of Ultimate Victory—Over 1,000 Votes in Convention.

For president, Eugene W. Chafin, of Chicago.

For vice-president, Aaron E. Watkins, of Ada, Ohio.

This ticket was nominated last week by the prohibitionists' national convention and both nominations were made unanimously.

The full endorsement of the convention was not, however, given to Mr. Chafin until after three ballots had been taken.

On the first two ballots Mr. Chafin did not show a great amount of strength, receiving but 295 out of 1,083 votes on the first, but 376 out of 1,087 on the second ballot. His nomination was assured, however, when the roll call began for the third ballot. His own state which had voted largely for Daniel R. Sheen, of Peoria, and the New York delegation, followed by those of Indiana and Wisconsin, came over to Mr. Chafin and on the third ballot he received a total of 636 votes.

The strongest competitor of Mr. Chafin was Rev. William B. Palmore, of St. Louis, who received 274 votes on the first ballot and a comparatively small vote after it was evident that the nomination of Mr. Chafin could not be prevented.

The platform makes the following declaration of principles and pledges their enactment into law when placed in power:

"First—The submission by congress to the several states of an amendment to the federal constitution prohibiting the manufacture, sale, importation of alcoholic liquors for beverage purposes.

"Second—The immediate prohibition of the liquor traffic for beverage purposes in the District of Columbia, in the territories and all places over which the national government has jurisdiction; the repeal of the internal revenue tax on alcoholic liquors and the prohibition of the interstate traffic therein.

"Third—The election of United States senators by direct vote of the people.

"Fourth—Equitable graduated income and inheritance taxes.

"Fifth—The establishment of postal savings banks and the guaranty of deposits in banks.

"Sixth—The regulation of all corporations doing an interstate commerce business.

"Seventh—The creation of a permanent tariff commission.

"Eighth—The strict enforcement of law instead of the official tolerance and practical license of the social evil which prevails in many of our cities, with its unspeakable traffic in girls.

"Ninth—Uniform marriage and divorce laws.

"Tenth—An equitable and constitutional employers liability act.

"Eleventh—Court review of post-office department decisions.

"Twelth—The prohibition of child labor in mines, workshops and factories.

"Thirteenth—Legislation basing suffrage only upon intelligence and ability to read and write the English language.

"Fourteenth—The preservation of the mineral and forest resources of the country and the improvement of the highways and waterways.

"Believing in the righteousness of our cause and in the final triumph of our principles and convinced of the unwillingness of the Republican and Democratic parties to deal with these issues, we invite to full party fellowship all citizens who are with us agreed."

All About It.

"There's one thing about the north pole," asserted the returned explorer emphatically.

The crowd leaned eagerly forward to learn the result of his investigations.

"Yes," repeated the returned explorer, lighting his cigar with great deliberation.

"Er—what did we understand"—it was the dean with the inquisitive nose who spoke—"you to say it is, professor?"

The returned explorer threw away his match.

"It is the ice," he explained kindly.

CORRESPONDENCE

FROM BAY SHORE.

Mrs. William Brechtson is quite sick at her home.

Nearly 1,000 Pianos at a Bargain

Lyon & Healy, of Chicago, known everywhere as the world's largest music house, have just done a remarkable thing. They have bought for cash the entire stocks of three large Chicago piano houses, i. e. the Thompson Music Co., the Healy Music Co. and the big F. G. Thearle Piano Co. In these stocks are line new pianos of the highest quality, including such well and favorably known pianos as the Henry F. Miller, Hardman, Ivers & Pond, Smith & Nixon, etc. Lyon & Healy secured all these pianos on such extraordinary terms that they are able to turn around and offer them to the public at 30 to 40 per cent discount. So here is a chance to get a much better piano for any sum you have in mind than you could ordinarily obtain.

Write today for the list of pianos in this great triple piano sale, which is an event entirely unprecedented in the history of piano selling. Address Lyon & Healy, 77 Adams street, Chicago. Four distinct plans of easy payments for those who do not wish to pay cash.

How to Clean a Clock.

One woman who doctors her own timepiece advises the following for a clock which refuses to go.

"Take off the hands, the face, the pendulum and his wire. Remove ratchet from the tick wheel and the clock will run down with great velocity. Let it go. The increasing speed wears away the gum and dust from the pinions—the clock cleans itself. Put sperm oil on the axles. Put the machine together, and nine times out of ten it will run just as well as if it had been taken to the shop. If instead of a pendulum the clock has a watch escapement, this latter can be taken out in an instant without taking the works apart, and the result is the same."

Presbyterians on Temperance.

The Presbyterian General Assembly, in session at Kansas City, Mo., May 28, voted to appropriate $45,000 to continue the work of the temperance committee, and adopted a resolution declaring that no revenues derived from the liquor business should be used for popular government, and calling on Congress to "protect" states that have abolished the traffic.

Dr. William McKibbin of Cincinnati, Dr. E. T. Lee of Pittsburg, and the Rev. Charles Scanlon of Pittsburg, made forceful addresses in support of temperance. Dr. McKibbin said that the public schools and colleges should institute a course of study on alcholism, that young people might be taught just what a menace to health and morals intoxicating liquors are.

Dr. McKibbin's remarks, if he was correctly reported, would indicate a lack of familiarity with the fact that, through the efforts of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, every state in the Union has a law requiring the teaching of scientific temperance in the public schools. We should be glad indeed to see the subject included in regular college curriculums, a field that is, as yet, covered only by our "Sonneset Y's," orginizations of young women who disseminate knowledge of our principles and methods among the student body.

The national synod of the Reformed Presbyterian church, in session at Cincinnati, O., June 1, adopted resolutions unanimously by a rising vote to the effect that state and national prohibition are the only ultimate solution of the liquor problem. These resolutions, as drawn up by the synod committee on temperance and Sabbath observance, also call for a stricter observance of the Sabbath. The running of railroad trains, Sunday baseball, Sunday theaters and other Sunday amusement are specifically decried in the resolutions, which aroused great enthusiasm.

COOKING IN CAMP.

How to Prepare Simple but Appetizing Dishes.

Confronted by the conditions existing in a camp kitchen, which differ somewhat from those of a modern town chef's realm, cooks are apt to spoil the broth by trying to do too much or construct too elaborate dishes. The simplest foods are most appetizing when camping, and they are the best to eat. They should be simply prepared. Coffee made in camp has a different flavor from that made anywhere else. An experienced camper gives this rule for making it, says the New York Herald:

Have the coffee ground fine, place eight heaping dessertspoonfuls in a hot coffeepot, add two quarts of boiling water and set the pot near the fire for a few minutes. The coffee should never be boiled. This amount is for four persons.

To make chocolate the same authority says: Take two heaping dessertspoonfuls of milk powder and eight dessertspoonfuls of chocolate. Add a little water and make a paste. Then pour in two quarts of boiling water and add a little sugar.

Biscuits.—Take two pints of flour to which have been added two heaping teaspoonfuls of baking powder and sift into a bread pan. Add one level teaspoonful of salt, some cold pork fat the size of an egg and mix all together thoroughly while dry. Add six heaping dessertspoonfuls of evaporated milk or twice as much fresh milk with enough cold water to make as soft a dough as can be rolled on the bread board, which has been sprinkled with flour. Roll the dough about one-half inch thick and cut into circles with a china or tin cup the rim of which has been dipped in flour, or use a knife. Place the circles in a greased or floured pan, set in the rack of the baker before the fire and leave until light and brown on top.

Corn Bread.—Take one pint of flour and one pint of cornmeal and put in the bread pan, with two heaping teaspoonfuls of baking powder, one level teaspoonful of salt, two dessertspoonfuls of dried egg, one teaspoonful of sugar and cold pork fat the size of an egg. Mix thoroughly while dry. Add six heaping dessertspoonfuls of evaporated milk and enough cold water to make a thick batter. Stir until well mixed and pour into a greased pan. Place in the rack of the baker and stand the baker in front of the fire.

Griddlecakes.—Take two pints of flour to which have been added two teaspoonfuls of baking powder. Add one level teaspoonful of salt, two dessertspoonfuls of dried egg and mix together dry. Mix with this six heaping dessertspoonfuls of evaporated milk and enough cold water to make a creamy batter. Do not have the batter thin. Fry in the frying pan, which has been greased with a piece of pork fat.

Boiled Rice.—Thoroughly wash and rinse one cup of rice in cold water, drain and place in about two quarts of boiling water in an uncovered pot, add two teaspoonfuls of salt and boil steadily for ten or twenty minutes, adding water, if necessary, as the rice boils. When tender, drain and place near the fire to dry it a little.

Hasty Pudding.—To a quart of boiling water add half a teaspoonful of salt and stir in slowly a cupful of cornmeal. Boil ten minutes, stirring constantly to prevent scorching. Hasty pudding served with milk and sugar makes an appetizing and wholesome dish.

WOMEN IN POLITICS.

Mrs. Taft Thinks Women Should Vote, but Not Hold Office.

Mrs. Taft in a recent interview is reported as saying:

"I have always believed that women should vote. I favor bestowing on them every civic right, but I should like to put in a prohibitory clause debarring them from running for public office.

"With women running for office, I think the natural scheme would be disjointed and the end and aim of the home destroyed. Their voice is nearly always the voice of wisdom, and I see nothing unwomanly in their casting the ballot and exercising every right of the free citizen, but it seems that for the present it is impossible to dissociate the right to vote from the right to hold office.

"So the women who would never think of any other vocation than that of being good wives and mothers are prevented from taking their rightful share in governing the community through the fear which men have of women stepping down from their pedestal. Except in rare instances, the influence of women on politics is for their elevation.

"It is truly said that communities where women lack civic pride are in worse shape than those where man neglects his prerogative. Women should be versed in every phase of politics and should know what everything means which has a direct bearing on the home environment. That is my idea of purifying politics, and I think it is the only practical one."

The Homemade Martyr.

She is the woman who bothers over trifles and lets the big things slide. She will tell you she can't take exercise to keep herself from getting fat because she is compelled to sit so much to sew for the children.

If she is thin she will tell you she can't get fat because she has to run around the house so much trying to get everything done. If you speak of another woman's pretty costume she bitterly says she cannot see how women who have families get time to make pretty clothes; that she also likes lovely things, but life is so full of cares that she hasn't the time to achieve them.

If she is told to read a certain fascinating book she will elevate her eyebrows and say she has no time to read; that her husband doesn't like to have her engrossed in a book in the evening and she hasn't a minute's time during the day.

If asked why she doesn't go to some of the pleasant social things going on around her she tells you she hasn't the clothes to wear; that she used to be as well dressed as any one else when she was unmarried, but married life is too expensive to think about social life.

If she is unmarried she will tell you that she could have better clothes and go about in society if she only had the luck some girls had in marrying. And so it goes. All the trouble is with life, with circumstances, and laid at the doors of other people.

None of it is her fault. How could it be? She is a perfect person tortured by the hands of fate.

That all of these woes exist only in her imagination is a fact that she does not see. That she could be the captain of her soul as well as the master of her life is all Greek to her.

She goes through life fretted. Every sentence is punctuated with a sigh. She sees the thorns beneath every rose that is handed to her and rejects it. Whoever has a pleasanter life than hers must be a person without character, slothful, foolish or of no weight.

She is a homemade martyr and will go to a martyr's grave, which she has been preparing for herself since she was born.

Ironing a Shirt.

Take it out of the fold and iron the back of the sleeve first; then the front; then the cuff. Gloss the cuff and curl it round; do the same with the other sleeve. Now iron the shoulder, taking care not to touch the breast or collar. Next iron the collar until perfectly dry.

Fold the shirt down the middle of the back and iron as much as possible on both sides of the fold; then spread it out on the table, front uppermost, and iron all the unstarched parts.

Put in the shirt board under the starched breast of the shirt and iron the upper side first. The iron must be hot and clean. It is best to work from the front of the breast toward the sides, and the iron must be brought neatly around the edge at the collar. Rub the breast slightly over with a wet bit of muslin, apply a glossing iron to the underside first, and finish it nicely.

To fold the shirt, iron it firmly up to each shoulder, just to the edge of the collar. Turn the shirt right over with the breast to the table, fold in a small fold on each side from the sleeves downward about an inch in the middle, and iron the fold.

Then fold the sleeves down on each side, with the seam of the sleeve to the seam of the body and the shoulder sloping to the neck.

Double up the sleeve so that the cuff is just above the collar. Do this to both sleeves, and turn the sides over to the very edge of the stiffened front. Turn up the shirt a few inches and iron it. Lastly turn the breast over above it.

Paying Forfeits.

One of the funniest of the old fashioned forfeits now revived for an evening's fun is making the blind feed the blind.

Spread a sheet in middle of floor and on this seat two persons, blindfolded and facing each other. Hand each a saucer containing ground popcorn or any of the dry, ready to eat cereals and two spoons. Tell each to feed the other.

The struggle to reach each other's mouth, each reaching out his spoon, at the same time opening his mouth to receive the proffered food, is funny in the extreme.

Other good forfeits are to draw a pig with the eyes shut. Eat two tablespoonfuls of powdered cracker crumbs, then whistle, sing a favorite song to an accompaniment played on a table, perform a West Point hazing stunt of being a "choo-choo car," without the glimmer of a smile.

Seasonable Hints.

If the dainty lace paper doilies and little paper dessert plates are used during the summer, it is a lightening of some of the dishwashing labor.

If a small quantity of cream turns sour in the icebox, do not throw it out, but with a fork beat it a few minutes, and a tiny pat of fresh butter and a little glass of buttermilk will be the reward.

An ice shaver is a summer luxury not to be overlooked in the household, as fruit may be chilled more quickly and effectively by fine ice, and for cooling drinks it is an added joy.

If the traveler will also take an alcohol lamp of modern make, a tray, a teapot and cup and saucer of white ware, a box of tea and a small package of lump sugar, she may have an oriental breakfast at any time of day by adding rolls and an egg.

Buttermilk Cures Blues.

There are two new cures. One is buttermilk. The other is beans. The buttermilk cure is for that very prevalent and distressing complaint known as the "blues." Needless to say, a microbe is the fons et origo of our periodical fits of gloom and melancholy, when everything goes wrong and nothing goes right and our temper gives way and nobody but our ever patient dog can "abide" us. But this particularly horrid bacillus does not like buttermilk. In fact, it completely quenches it, so that when the "blues" come on the obvious course is to quaff this fluid as freely as possible. Clearly, it is a thing no family should be without.

How to Treat Linoleum.

The kitchen linoleum should be treated once a year to a coat of hard oil finish. This is because, in spite of all advice to the contrary, it does need more than a friendly wiping up with tepid water or milk and water. It cannot be kept really clean by such treatment and should have a genuine scrubbing with soap, brush and warm water at least once a month. Without the oil dressing mentioned above this would be rather disastrous to oilcloth or linoleum, but with the protection of the rubbing oil the scrubbing will not prove to be too vigorous for the material.

For carved furniture there is no better duster than a new paint brush just large enough and full enough to work nicely into the crevices.

THE PEOPLE IN POLITICS.

It is an open fact, that the American people like a fighter. This is the secret of the success of the Roosevelt administration. The president has not hesitated to lead in any and every fight in which he considered the interest of the nation at stake. The recent convention endorsed both the president and his administration and in November the voters of the nation will give their approval to the work of the convention. In our form of government parties and party leaders are essential and experience has shown that at the proper time men that are qualified and able to lead have been found to head all movements that have back of them the approval of the people whether it be national, state or in a community. We have an illustration of this in our own state at the present time. The administration of Governor Warner has exposed a combination in the state that was invincible in their demands under the old system and who have fought the demands of the people for a primary reform law in every way possible. They are now in a life and death struggle. On the one side we find Governor Warner leading the forces who are demanding that the right of the people to choose their servants be respected and for equal taxation and that stock watering be prohibited. His record shows that he has been fearless in his fight and he stands today with a clean and honorable record. The only thing that his opponents can bring against him is that he is seeking a third term. On the other hand his chief opponent, Dr. Bradley is falling over himself trying to advocate the same measures that Governor Warner stands for. But what do the records of the two men show. Governor Warner's record shows that in his case these measures are not new ones invented for this campaign but have been the basis of his administration, while on the other hand Dr. Bradley is a new "convert." It further shows that if the doctor had exercised the same influence during the last session of the legislature in these matters there would have been one less "Boxer" in the senate and these measures would have been passed and there would have been no excuse for the third term of Governor Warner. The voters of the state will select for governor and members of the legislature men whose records are clear. No recent convert will do—they want men who dare lead—this is not the time or place for men who simply follow.—Saranac Advertiser.

CONVICT AIDING PLAN

Kansan Regards Writing of Liberty Helpful to Prisoners.

A NATIONAL CONTEST HELD.

Eleven Prizes Awarded to Men and Women in Various American Prisons For Essays on Subject of True Freedom—How Articles Were Judged.

A. G. Gates, ex-chaplain of the Kansas State Industrial reformatory at Hutchinson, Kan., recently brought to a successful conclusion a very interesting contest. A few months ago he wrote a letter to the various state penal and reformatory institutions throughout the country offering a series of prizes for the best articles written by prisoners on the subject, "What Is True Liberty, Its Value and How Obtained?" There was a ready response to the invitation to compete in this contest, and the prizes were awarded a few days ago.

One hundred and forty-seven manuscripts from institutions in twelve states were received by Mr. Gates, and eleven prizes were awarded—a first prize of $25, a second prize of $10, a third prize of $5 and eight additional prizes of $1 each. No. 15,312, Massachusetts State reformatory, was the winner of the first prize, Convict J. E. R., Alabama State penitentiary, won the second, and No. 3,219, Indiana State reformatory, was given the third prize. The winners of the first rank in the dollar prizes were N. B., State Industrial School For Girls, Beloit, Kan.; No. 4,177 and No. 5,018, Indiana State reformatory, the three being given the same grade of merit. Other institutions winning $1 prizes were Ohio penitentiary, North Carolina State prison, Missouri penitentiary, Iowa penitentiary, Iowa reformatory and Allegheny County workhouse, Pennsylvania.

In explaining the manner in which the contest was conducted Mr. Gates said to a Kansas City Star reporter:

"After the one hundred and forty-seven articles were carefully read by me, and some of them reread several times, thirty-eight of the best were copied on typewriters that the manuscript might go into the hands of the judges in uniform style. And that there might be no question raised by any one as to the absolute fairness in the grading of the papers a complete set of these copies was placed in the hands of each of four judges, who reside in different states or different sections of the same state, with the writer's postoffice address omitted and his name or number marking the authorship of the article. The judges were the Rev. J. Kent Rizer, pastor of the Trinity Lutheran church, Tipton, Ia.; Miss Kate Smeiser, a member of the Alumni association, Earlham college, Richmond, Ind.; Mrs. Cora G. Lewis, Kinsley, Kan., and the Rev. W. R. Gray, pastor of the First United Presbyterian church, Hutchinson, Kan.

"After the work of each of these judges was completed the articles receiving the ranking positions as indicated by each judge's grading were placed in the hands of the fifth judge, George W. Winans, ex-state superintendent of public instruction, for final grading. I feel that this gave an absolute correct ranking of the various efforts of the prisoners and a good idea of their several abilities. I believe that such contests not only help to develop the mental faculties of the prisoners, but cheer their spirits as well, indicating, as it does, that there are persons on the outside who are interested in their welfare."

APPEAL FOR THE MULE.

Shall It Not Have a Vacation as Well as the Government Horse?

The postoffice department at Washington having decided to allow all horses owned by it thirty days vacation, the same as its clerks and officials, and as numerous applications have been received from among the 30,000 rural carriers for vacations for their horses, an inquiry has been received from Baltimore as to whether the government mule, from time immemorial a faithful and loyal servant, is to be taken care of." Chief Clerk Conrad recently received the following letter:

"Will you please inform the Baltimore letter carriers if the vacation applies to the government mules of the postoffice of Baltimore, as they are now having a hard time."

It is understood that the postmaster of Baltimore has recently curtailed vacations in his office.

LOVE IN AN ART GALLERY.

American Saw a Painting, Found and Married the Original.

A romantic story of Harold Abbott Titcomb, a wealthy American mining engineer, who fell in love with a picture in the Tate gallery at London and married the original of it the other day, has been told in London. Mr. Titcomb is a direct descendant of John and Priscilla Alden, the lovers in Longfellow's "Courtship of Miles Standish."

Visiting two years ago the Tate gallery, he fell in love with the face of the younger girl in Ralph Peacock's painting "The Sisters."

So fascinated was he with the beauty of the girl that he wrote to the artist asking for a copy of the painting. Some time later he met at the artist's house Miss Ethel Brignall, the original of the picture and sister-in-law of the artist.

Like his ancestor, Mr. Titcomb was successful in his wooing. He spoke for himself and married the maiden in the pretty little parish church of Beddington. The bride, in a classical gown of white embroidered with silver, and the bridegroom, dark and good looking, made a remarkably handsome couple.

The bride's train was carried by a tiny nephew, Roydon Peacock, the original of Ralph Peacock's picture "Roydon," exhibited at this year's academy. Mr. Peacock's present to the bridegroom was his latest painting of the bride.

STEER HORN CHAIR FOR TAFT

Ranchman Selecting For the Purpose Largest That Can Be Found.

N. R. Powell, a stockman of Pettus, Tex., went to San Antonio and closed a deal with a local manufacturer of horn chairs for a special chair to be presented to William H. Taft on March 4 next, when he expects him to take his seat as president of the United States.

"My deal with the manufacturer," said Mr. Powell, "is to construct the chair out of horns which I will furnish him. It will not be necessary for him to follow the instructions given to Noah when he built the ark, but both of us recognize that an ordinary chair is out of the question. I have just delivered him the pair of horns—about eight and one-half feet from tip to tip—that will make the back of the chair and a portion of the arms and will gather up the other specimens I have selected between San Antonio and the Rio Grande and send them to San Antonio.

"The chair will be a companion piece for the pants which San Antonio has provided, and the new president while wrestling with the problems of a nation in Washington will at the same time be able to enjoy some of the comforts of Texas, a condition which any man cannot fail to duly appreciate."

NOVEL SIGHT ON A LINE.

Green Servant Hung Wet $200 Roll of Bills Out to Dry.

Two hundred dollars in bills hanging on a clothesline was the novel sight which attracted attention in Woodbury, Conn., the other day. William Wilhelmy, a baker, of Ansonia, Conn., drove to Woodbury to visit his brother. He was caught in a thunderstorm, and when he reached his brother's his trousers were wringing wet and bespattered with mud. He borrowed a pair of pants and wore them while the hired girl washed the other pair.

Wilhelmy went calling on friends, and when he returned he found a crowd in front of his brother's home. The sight of his roll dangling on the clothesline and the gaping crowd was too much for him, and he collapsed with laughter.

The girl had been in the United States only a few days and did not know it was money. After she had washed the pants she found the roll of bills, which were chiefly made up of ones and twos, and with clothespins fastened each on the line and left them unguarded.

Severe Cure For Prostrations.

"On these hot days I make the men shut down every window and turn on the steam heat," said the owner of a big factory the other day. "I know that sounds like a crazy man's act, but it is the only thing to do. Working away as they are, almost stripped, the draft from open windows does the men more harm than good. The thing that makes them feel the heat is not so much the souring of the mercury as that of the humidity. Ninety-nine out of every hundred prostrations are caused by the humidity. By shutting the windows to keep out the moist air and by turning on the steam heat I thoroughly dry that which is already inside. The temperature is driven 5 to 10 degrees higher by this means, but the consequent diminution of humidity more than counteracts this. Before I caught on to this scheme I used to have employees prostrated almost every day through the summer months, and on very hot days I had to shut down altogether. Now the men work on the hottest days, and not one has been prostrated this year. I know it sounds crazy, but you just try it and you'll be surprised at the result."

National Cemetery on Deer Island.

A new national cemetery analogous to the Arlington cemetery at Washington is to be laid out on Deer island, according to present plans of the war department, says a Boston dispatch. It will be reserved wholly for soldiers, sailors, officers and civilians who died while in the employ of the United States. Many sailors who died of ship fever and a number of soldiers who succumbed during the war of 1812 and the rebellion were buried on the island.

Preventive Measures.

A French prefect once wrote to a mayor requesting him to take precautions against the cholera, which had broken out in his department. The mayor was rather puzzled at these instructions, which appeared vague to him, but after deep thought he answered that he and his electors were prepared for the plague.

On inquiring into the measures taken by the worthy mayor in order to ascertain their efficiency it appeared that he had caused as many graves to be dug as there were inhabitants.

The Sweet Potato Belt.

The northern limit for sweet potato culture is roughly indicated by a line drawn from the border line of Massachusetts and Connecticut on the east coast westward to the northeast corner of Colorado, but the area where it is profitable commercially would be considerably south of this, except in the Mississippi valley, where it extends well into Iowa, Illinois and Indiana.

BASE BALL SATURDAY

Re-organized Team Will Meet the Ottawa Indians

The Charlevoix ball team will play its first game on the home grounds, since its re-organization, with the Ottawa Indians next Saturday, at the north side ball grounds.

The Ottawa Indian team is composed of fast players from the Carlisle and Mt. Pleasant United States Indian Schools and the fastest game ever called off in Charlevoix is promised.

Thursday, the boys will play a practice game with the Belvedere team and Friday with the team from the Inn.

As a sample of the game which the re-organized team is playing, Saturday they met the fast Central Lake team and defeated them by a score of 9 to 1, Central Lake making their score in the first inning, when the locals were playing without a center fielder.

Everybody turn out and root for Charlevoix.

THEATRICAL

"A Call to Arms."

The Nellie Kennedy stock company will open their week's engagement at the Charlevoix theater Monday night in that stirring southern meoldrama, "A Call to Arms." This play deals with incidents occuring during the civil war.

Nellie Kennedy is at the head of this company of artists who will appear at the Charlevoix theater for one week, so it is safe to say that everyone who attends will see a performance that will be well worth the time and money spent.

The Nellie Kennedy company carries a line line of specialties, thus making the show a continuous performance from start to finish. They have good singing and dancing specialties and the acrobatic work performed by several members of the cast is excellent.

Seats on sale Saturday at Ivy drug store. Prices 10, 20 and 30 cents.

Leland and Lee, the popular Irish comedians, are filling the house every night at the Laf-a-Lot theatre. They are vaudeville performers of some 20 years experience and their act is a finished one in every respect.

Next week they advertise Donita, Sol & Company in musical acts and vaudeville which was the success of the Chicago Circuit.

Fagan's Electric Theater still continues to show the best there is to be secured in moving pictures and illustrated songs, with change of program each night.

It is announced that Eugene Moore, who played here to a well pleased audience, in "My Boy Jack," a short time ago, will appear at Charlevoix Theater, August 28 in "A Dangerous Women."

W. C. T. U. Institute.

A W. C. T. U. institute will be held at Bay View July 27 to 30. Several speakers of national reputation will be present and the time will be taken up with discussions, recitations, music, addresses and drills.

Several members of the Charlevoix Union are planning on attending Wednesday and invite all who are interested to join them.

Women as Well as Men Are Made Miserable by Kidney Trouble.

Kidney trouble preys upon the mind, discourages and lessens ambition; beauty, vigor and cheerfulness soon disappear when the kidneys are out of order or diseased.

Kidney trouble has become so prevalent that it is not uncommon for a child to be born afflicted with weak kidneys. If the child urinates too often, if the urine scalds the flesh or if, when the child reaches an age when it should be able to control the passage, it is yet afflicted with bed-wetting, depend upon it, the cause of the difficulty is kidney trouble, and the first step should be towards the treatment of these important organs. This unpleasant trouble is due to a diseased condition of the kidneys and bladder and not to a habit at most people suppose.

Women as well as men are made miserable with kidney and bladder trouble, and both need the same great remedy. The mild and the immediate effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It is sold by druggists, in fifty-cent and one dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also pamphlet telling all about it, including many of the thousands of testimonial letters received from sufferers cured. In writing Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., be sure and mention this paper.

Neighborhood Notes

Mr. and Mrs. Oliver D. Sayles and George Maynard, Boyne City residents, have instituted proceedings against the United Home Protectors' fraternity in the circuit court at Port Huron. The plaintiffs allege they mortgaged property to the fraternity, and when the two mortgages were nearly paid, they say that a bill of exchange was drawn up which in each case was cashed by Fred Fairchilds. They ask for credit on their mortgages.

In a most emphatic manner the department of Michigan, United Spanish War Veterans, declared itself in favor of the adoption of bills now pending in both houses of congress, which provide that the widow of a veteran of the war with Spain and in the Phillipines be placed on the same basis as the widow of the veteran of the Civil war and the Mexican war.

Maj. J. B. Westoedge, of Kalamazoo was elected department commander to succeed John Considine, of Detroit, after a spirited contest with Capt. McIntosh, of Traverse City, and Charles Ismond, of Jackson.

Other officers elected are: Senior vice commander, J. C. Ervine of Bay City; junior vice commander, J. H. Vanaken of Coldwater; inspector, John Dolson of Saginaw; judge advocate, A. O. Reese of Jackson; chaplain, Rev. E. W. White of Jackson; marshal, O. W. Mosier of Detroit; surgeon, Dr. Boyse of Kalamazoo; board of administration, C. L. Booth, A. H. Ganzer, Albert Hartenstein, P. L. Abbey, L. H. Funk, Samuel Davis, H. E. Andrews and Thomas Stratton.

The new officers were installed by I. N. Kinney of Bay City. The encampment will be held next year at Saginaw.

At the meeting of the asylum trustees of the state held at Traverse City last week, it developed that there are 5,527 insane people in the asylums of the state.

This number, of course, does not include the man who rocks the boat, the man who totes the unloaded pistol, or the man who looked into the muzzel of the shotgun to see what was wrong.

Neither does it take in the young man who scrimps for nine months in the year that he may blossom out in a pair of white duck trousers at a summer resort and be a dead swell for two weeks and then back to the ribbon counter. No, the 5,527 unfortunates are in a different class.

It is significant, however, to note that despite the worries that have been thrust upon the people of Michigan, the "dear plain people" and some not so plain, that only 185 more than last year were recognized as properly belonging in the institution maintained by the state for their care.

It shows that the people have great capacity or else were more fortunate than usual.

Perhaps this increase would have been greater had the man who sees the sea-serpent been put where he belongs, but as he was not, the increase this year has been smaller than ever, a fact duly appreciated by the asylum heads, as almost all institutions are filled to capacity.

True, the asylum patients are retrained, even in a summer resort town, but then he or she is not put to the necessity of accumulating a bunch of tan or of wearing a mosquito net shirtwaist or of spooning in a hammock and running up a heavy score of lies to be accounted for hereafter and a hotel bill to be paid before leaving.

No! The rooms are nicely shaded and board and lodging are both free and the patients have all been allowed two cents a day more to live on, bringing the total up to 50 cents a day in lower Michigan and 52 cents in the upper part.

Claude Hammond, 26 years old, a resident of Mesick, and an employe in the mill of L. J. Trapp & Co., of that village, is at Mercy hospital, Cadillac, in such a critical condition that he is not likely to survive many days. He was taken there Wednesday. Friday, while running a saw, a heavy bolt kicked back from the saw, striking him a blow of great violence in the abdomen. Hammond did not do well from the start and it was decided to bring him to the Cadillac hospital for an operation. Surgeons express doubt of his recovery.

CARE OF PETS.

How to Keep Household Pets Well by Proper Attention.

There is no time in the year when animals need so much care as in the summer. Then they must not only be kept clean, but must be fed and watered properly, for on this depends their health.

Dogs should be given little or no meat during the warm weather, and water should be kept where they can get it at any time. Dog biscuits are the best form of food for them. Milk and oatmeal are also good. A bone with very little meat on it may be given for them to chew, but it is better to let the biscuits take its place. Dogs should be washed at least once a week to keep them in good condition. A soap containing tar is best for the purpose.

Cats should be fed mainly on milk and mush, and, strange to say, they are very fond of some vegetables. Corn on the cob does not hurt them, and a great many like it very much. There have even been cats that liked cantaloupe. These animals also should have water where they may get it, and some cats may be washed with good results—to the cat—although it is a very dangerous operation for the unfortunate person who is detailed to perform the feat. Some cool place should be provided for them to sleep, but the cellar is not always good, for it is too damp.

Dogs should not be allowed to sleep in the house, particularly in summer. The stable is the best place, or, lacking that, the dog kennel would be all right.

Canaries should be provided with a daily bath. Drinking water should be kept in their cages at all times. Lettuce leaves, celery tops and chickweed should be provided for them about twice a week, and a bit of red pepper will do them no harm. Cuttlefish, of course, is always kept in the cage, which should be lined with gravel. Hemp seed is very fattening and should not be given to the birds very often. They should be fed on bird seed and rape seed, with a lump of sugar as an occasional treat.

How to Wash Veils.

If your white veil is very much soiled it will not be a difficult matter to bring it back to its original newness. Make a strong lather of white soap and simmer the veil in it for about a quarter of an hour. Rinse it in cold water carefully with a little liquid bluing. You can also add perfume to this water. Pass the veil through a thin gum arabic water, or water in which rice has been boiled, and clear it by shaking. Pin evenly on a linen cloth. When dry, lay between a piece of thin muslin and iron on wrong side. To wash your black veil pass it through hot water in which a small quantity of ox gall has been mixed, together with some perfume. Squeeze but do not rub it. Rinse in cold water, putting bluing in the last rinse. Stiffen by dipping in a very thin glue water made by pouring water on glue. Squeeze and shake out and dry and iron on the wrong side, the same as the white veil.

How to Clean Black Goods.

To clean black cloth garments buy 5 cents' worth of borax and 10 cents' worth of camphor gum. Put them into a large bowl, breaking the camphor gum first into small pieces. Pour over this one quart of boiling water, stirring to dissolve the borax. All the camphor will not dissolve. After it is cool put it into a bottle and cork tightly, says the Delineator. When wishing to use it pour a portion into a basin, diluting it with half the quantity of cold water. Wet a black stocking with this and sponge your goods, pressing afterward. This will remove all spots and grease and restore the black.

How to Clean Gloves.

In the country good thick gloves, with stitched backs, long wristed, are the most comfortable to wear. White suede and kindred gloves are best restored to their pristine freshness with a mixture of powdered alum and fuller's earth applied with a dry brush and well rubbed in till the dirt is removed. Silk gloves can be cleaned with magnesia placed between two layers of paper, and in a few days, when the powder is removed, they will look like new. Gloves should be laid by in brown paper. White paper often discolors them through the materials used in making the paper.

How to Make Excellent Paste.

To make a fine paste take two ounces of pulverized gum arabic, one and one-half ounces of fine starch and one-half ounce of granulated sugar. Dissolve the gum arabic in as much water as you would use for the starch indicated. Mix the starch and sugar with the mucilage. Then cook the mixture in a double boiler until the starch becomes clear. It should be as thick as tar. It can be kept indefinitely by the addition of a teaspoonful of camphor or a few drops of oil of cloves.

How to Make Almond Milk.

Almond milk is made by blanching sixty almonds and putting them into a mortar with two lumps of sugar. The latter causes the oils to blend. By very slow degrees a pint of rosewater is then added, the nuts being broken at the same time by pounding until they are reduced to powder and all the rosewater is in. This may stand bottled overnight and is then strained. It is one of the best lotions and bleaches there is.

SOCIALISM AND THE HOME.

What Socialists Do When They Come Into Power.

It is sometimes said that Socialism will destroy the home, and some opponents have been unscrupulous enough to attack Socialists as advocates of free love. In answer to such accusations perhaps nothing would be more conclusive than what the Socialists actually do when they come into power. It is known that illegitimacy is common in France, especially among the poorest people. To what extent it is due to poverty and the inability of the poorest workmen to pay fees for the marriage service is not known, but when the Socialists came into control of the city of Lille they established a free marriage service, the fees to the pastor being paid directly by the municipality.

Thousands of marriages have been sanctioned under this new act, and a great number of children who would otherwise have been classed as illegitimate are now legalized. The work of the Socialists in the same city is sufficient to answer the other accusation.

It is a theory that Socialism will destroy the home; it is a fact that for millions of the poor capitalism has destroyed the home. Go through any great center of industry and see the mothers who are forced to give their children to the street and themselves to the factory. Literally speaking, millions of women, how many with children one cannot say, leave their homes at dawn and return to them only at nightfall.

Some of them hardly have time to give birth to their babies before they are called back to the mills. These facts make little impression upon those who are not working people, but can any one really think for a moment that the poor suffer without complaint this destruction of home life?

Can any one believe that when the mothers and fathers rise in the morning before dawn and leave their children to the care of an older child or upon the streets and go themselves to toil for ten, twelve or fourteen hours in the factory they are without feeling in the matter? If that is the impression, the pathetic efforts of these French workingmen when they come into power are a sufficient answer. Amid the greatest imaginable difficulties they strive to retrieve something of the social advantages lost to them through the industrial revolution.

They establish public kitchens, so that soups, meats and vegetables can be obtained warm when the people return from their work. They establish creches for the babies of working mothers. The cantine scolaire, or school restaurant, is but another effort to re-establish in some manner the social institutions lost by the destruction of the home.

So long as the present system lasts, or at least so long as Socialists remain in a minority, it is impossible for them to free from toil the mothers of their children. But they can save the babies from neglect, the children from the streets and all from actual hunger.

There are few workmen who would not if they could destroy all the creches and cantines scolaires and ecoles maternelles if at the same time they could re-establish the home and give back to the babies their mothers. This, however, being impossible, it will be a curious and perhaps interesting fact to the prosperous classes that among the first things to which the Socialists turn their attention when they become charged with the responsibility of municipal government are these very problems of the family and the home.—From "Socialists at Work."

CRACK ROAD MACHINE

When Best to Use the Split Log Drag.

FOLLOWING EACH HEAVY RAIN

Finest Work Done When the Soil Is Moist, Not Sticky—Clay Highway Dragging Needs Special Attention. Economy of the Device.

The best results with the split log drag have been obtained by dragging roads once each day after each heavy rain. In some cases, however, one dragging every three or four weeks has been found sufficient to keep a road in good condition.

When the soil is moist but not sticky the drag does its best work, says a bulletin from the government office of public roads. As the soil in a field will bake if plowed wet, so the road will bake if the drag is used on it when it is wet. If the roadway is full of holes or badly rutted, the drag should be used once when the ground is soft and slushy. This is particularly applicable before a cold spell in winter, when it is possible to so prepare the surface that it will freeze smooth.

Not infrequently conditions are met which may be overcome by a slight change in the manner of hitching. Shortening the chain tends to lift the front slab and make the cutting slight, while a longer hitch causes the front to sink more deeply into the earth and act on the principle of a plow.

If a furrow of earth is to be moved, the doubletree should be attached close to the ditch end of the drag, and the driver should stand with one foot on the extreme forward end of the front slab.

Conditions are so varied in different localities, however, that it is quite impossible to lay down specific rules. Certain sections of a roadway will require more attention than others because of steep grades, wet weather springs, soil conditions, exposure to sun and wind washes, etc. There is one condition, however, in which special attention should be given. Clay roads under persistent dragging frequently become too high in the center. This may be corrected by dragging the earth toward the center of the road twice and away from it once.

There is no question as to the economy of this roadmaking implement, either in first cost or in operation. In six counties in Kansas in 1906 the cost of maintaining ordinary earth roads, without the aid of the split log drag, averaged $42.50 a mile. These figures were furnished by Professor W. C. Hoad of the University of Kansas, who secured them from official records of the counties.

Some figures furnished by F. P. Sanborn and R. H. Alshton, general manager of the Chicago and Northwestern railroad, have revealed the wonders of this simple device. Mr. Sanborn said: "The least expense per mile per annum for split log dragging was $1.50, the greatest a little over $6 and the average expense per mile for five and a half miles a little over $3. I have lived along this road all my life, and never in forty years have I seen it freer from mud and dust, despite the fact that during the season we have experienced the extremes of weather conditions."

The testimony of Mr. Alshton is equally strong. Learning that a township in Iowa had been making an investigation of the split log drag and had been experimenting with it for a year on twenty-eight miles of highway, he sent an agent to secure information. It was reported that, although the town board had paid the cost of making the drags and of hiring men to operate them, the total expense for one year averaged but $2.40 a mile, and the roads were reported to have been "like a race track" the greater portion of the year.

Beware of Narrow Tires.

Where the soil is stiff or loamy it pays to use the split log road drag after it rains and before the ground dries hard. Nine-tenths of the country roads could be made into splendid thoroughfares by the proper persistent use of the road drag and wide tires. Wide tires alone will keep a loamy road in fairly good condition with just one scraping in the spring to round up the turnpike. Sandy roads are a much more serious problem, but sometimes a surface of clay will soon mix with the sand to form a hard track, and wide tires will keep it hard and smooth so the rainwater will run off quickly to the sides, but narrow tires will ruin such a road surface quickly by cutting ruts to hold water. It would be difficult to invent a worse implement of destruction, especially on roads that are inclined to be sandy.

Good Road Agitators.

Women have been found to be active workers in the matter of agitating good road movements. They not only work to get hard roads, but adopt measures to preserve the natural beauty of public highways. Within the last few months the Tuesday club of St. Charles, Ill., planted 350 ornamental trees along two miles of the Fox river road. Not long since the Kane county women, who are auto enthusiasts, raised over $1,000 by selling spoons, and it all went to the improvement and preservation of natural features of the finest auto drives in Illinois.

The Bridegroom (on the return from the honeymoon)—Hello! What's this? All the bills for your trousseau! Why, I thought your father paid these. Bride—It is customary, dear, but he thought you would rather do it than give him the humiliation of borrowing the money from you.—London Telegraph.

THE BEAN CROP.

Good Soil and Economy of Space Will Make It Pay.

The raising of white beans is a great industry in many sections, and it is profitable because the output is as much a staple as wheat or corn. Like these crops, it is a foodstuff which has keeping quality.

The bean growing industry has gravitated to the poorer lands, so that but little of it is found in the corn belt. And yet there are places in the corn belt, and many of them, where beans might be grown to advantage. Sandy knolls or worn out fields which will only make twenty bushels of corn per acre will return a greater cash product if planted to beans.

Bean culture was once considered very laborious, but it is not necessarily so now. By the use of modern machinery it is made easy. They may be planted with a two horse corn planter, cultivated with riding plows and weeders, pulled when ripe, thrashed and even sorted by machinery.

To make the most of the space the hills may be only six inches apart, but the rows should be wide enough to permit horse culture. When planted in this way and carefully cultivated, if the ground is free from weeds, the crop may be carried through by horsepower. But if the soil is foul one hand hoeing will be needed. The crop is loaded from the puller into hayracks and hauled to the barn. Spread upon the barn floor or loft, it will be ready for thrashing after two weeks of dry weather. Before marketing sorting is absolutely necessary.

The old plan was to get the family together in the evening about the kitchen table and each by handfuls picked out the bad specimens. But the modern bean sorter is a small machine and cheap, which you may take into any room. The motion is controlled by a treadle, and a slowly moving canvas carrier brings the beans to your hand as fast as you can look them over, one spry man doing the work of five by the old system.

THE WHITE GRUB.

A Dangerous Insect Enemy of the Fruit Tree.

The peach borer or white grub, which bores holes through and under the bark of the roots of peach trees, weakens and often kills trees and may be considered one of the greatest enemies the peach has to contend with. This insect changes from a worm to a fly in August or September. At that time the worm comes to the surface of the ground, constructing a cocoon an inch in length, which is attached to the base of the tree or perched on the ground, end upward. In a few weeks it appears as a moth and begins to deposit its small eggs on the body of the tree near the ground. Each body lays 300 or more eggs and dies within two weeks. In October or November the eggs hatch, and the little borers, scarcely large enough to be seen, make their way down to the ground at the base of the tree. When warm weather comes in spring they begin active work and increase rapidly in size, working first in the bark of the roots nearest the base of the tree and then extending down four or six inches into the lower roots, eating their way as they go. The worst work is done in May, June and July, and these are the months when the peach trees should have most careful attention. Young peach trees require more attention than older trees. The roots of older trees are often so large, course and tough as not to be susceptible to serious injury, but the young trees may be destroyed by one grub.

The Farmer's Friend.

One of the interesting features of the new school of agriculture is the recognition of the helpfulness of many feathered wild tenants of our farms. Thanks to the investigation of the department of agriculture, many birds which were once ruthlessly destroyed by the ignorant pot hunter are now carefully protected because of their usefulness in keeping down the insect hordes that prey upon plant life. The quail or bobwhite is one of the farmers' feathered friends.

This interesting bird is helpful to the farmer in destroying weeds, bugs, grasshoppers, cotton boll weevil and many other insects. If not hunted, it is a tame bird, often appearing in the farmers' gardens or barnyards. The cheerful whistle of bobwhite on the fences, in the pastures and meadows is attractive to the farmer as he plows, plants and reaps. Let every farmer start out today to be a friend of birds and to protect them. The farmer will thus benefit himself as well as the birds.

FORCING CANTALOUPES.

A California Experiment Interesting to All Melon Growers.

The experiment of growing cantaloupes under muslin canopies so that they may be ready for the market two or three weeks before those grown in the ordinary way has been successfully made in California. The cantaloupes were planted in the usual manner, so far as hilling and spacing were concerned, but over each hill there was stretched a canopy of white muslin about the size of a man's pocket handkerchief. Two arched wires were used, crossed over the melon hill somewhat like the center wicket in a croquet ground. The ends of these wires were sewed to the corners of the muslin squares and the wires then thrust firmly into the ground so as to secure the canopies and prevent the wind blowing them away. These protectors cost complete about 8 cents each.

The melons responded to the genial warmth thus engendered and the protection from the winds and frost.

Where Dodder Has Been Seeded.

Where dodder has been seeded with clover or alfalfa its presence will be indicated by the appearance of more or less rounded, spreading areas in which the plants are dying down, and if examined at close range the thread-like twining stems of the dodder will be found covering them. These areas can be readily seen even at some distance, as they present a yellowish or light orange colored appearance. When discovered the plants within this area and for a couple of feet beyond should be cut, allowed to dry and burned, or straw may be spread on these spots and burned to destroy the dodder and prevent its forming seeds.

Toads and Insects.

Toads will eat some bugs and worms that many birds will not touch, such as rose bugs, hairy caterpillars, etc. They also take care of the night flying and moving insects and worms. They prefer one place as a hunting ground and so keep that place in a good measure free from insect life, says a writer in Farm Journal. They are next in value to the birds as insect destroyers, and one cannot have too many of them in the garden.

How to Clean White Marble.

SICK PEOPLE
SHOULD INVESTIGATE

I Know the Diseases of Both Sexes Like an Open Book. I have Been Curing Them for 49 Years. In fact, My Entire Life Has Been Devoted to Curing Where Others Have Failed.

I Have Changed Hundreds Upon Hundreds of Nervous Wrecks Into Fine, Strong Men and Women. I Accept No Case I Cannot Cure.

I ESPECIALLY invite all discouraged and dissatisfied ones who have been treated without a cure to write me fully and frankly about their case. It will cost you nothing to write me, and I will gladly tell you your condition, truthfully, honestly—accepting no case that I cannot cure—holding out no false promises. I have spent my whole life in the study and cure of chronic diseases, and my study and investigation have been blessed by the discovery of many new and marvelous methods of treating disease. Forty-nine years ago I graduated from the Western Homeopathic Medical College of Cleveland, O., for two years Head Physician at the Alma Sanitarium, Alma, Mich. I have spent many long years as a specialist, treating chronic diseases of all kinds with wonderful success, and am now owner of one of the largest sanitariums in the country, giving my entire time to the treatment of Nervous Diseases of both sexes. I cure the worst forms of Epilepsy, St. Vitus Dance, Paralysis, etc.

Dr. Andrew B. Spinney
Specialist in Chronic Diseases.

My long experience in diagnosing cases and my understandings of the different diseases that I treat enable me in almost every case to prescribe by mail a perfect, thorough cure. All correspondence in plain envelopes and sacredly confidential.

I CURE NERVOUS TROUBLES—Wasting Away, Loss of Vitality in Both Sexes. Whether from excesses or overwork, I promptly and positively cure, no matter of how long standing.

I CURE BLOOD POISON—I cure Blood Poison in the first, second and third stages—driving the poison from the system, the taint from the blood; curing pimples, copper spots, sores in the mouth, tumors and ulcers.

I CURE FITS—Epilepsy, St. Vitus Dance, Paralysis, etc., by striking direct at the cause, restoring the diseased nerves to perfect health.

I CURE PILES—In 30 days to stay cured and to never return.

I CURE CONSUMPTION, the Great White Plague, in the first and second stages. Have made a special study of this disease for fifty years. Have cured hundreds given up by home Doctors. Those I cannot treat at home by seeing or by mail, I will take to my Sanitarium, where best of medical skill, nursing and private rooms are given, for Ten Dollars a week.

I GUARANTEE TO CURE, to stay cured, liquor, morphine, cocaine, nicotine or cigarette habits. Most cases treated at home.

Call and see me or write to either Sanitarium as below.

No matter what disease you are suffering from, write me fully today. I will answer at once, and my advice, which costs you nothing, may be worth hundreds of dollars—life itself—to you. If I cannot cure you I will tell you so. WRITE TODAY.

Faithfully yours,

POSTER PRINTING

is a cheap way of reaching a great many people, and is used successfully by some of our best business houses. An especially good plan is to run an advertisement of a page or less—or two pages if you please—in the Courier and then, at a small additional expense, have a quantity of posters printed from this form. In this way you are sure of reaching practically all of the people you desire to influence. This is the plan of advertising that has been used successfully by the merchants of a neighboring city to build up an excellent out-of-town trade, and is wonderfully cheap when compared with the results obtained.

The Courier Office

is particularly well equipped for doing the class of work required by this method of advertising and can, besides placing your advertisement in nearly every home in the city and on rural routes out of here, print your posters in one or more colors, giving you the maximum of attractive, trade-compelling appearance in both "ad" and bills, bringing you greater results from an equal or even less expenditure than you can get elsewhere.

Try this method of advertising your business and you will not only benefit yourself directly, but by bringing trade to Charlevoix which might go elsewhere, help build up your town—every advance of which reflects upon your business in exact proportion as you build up that business.

Barnard Grange No. 689.

Barnard Grange No. 689 met in regular session July 15.

The small attendance is probably due to members being busy getting in their hay, there not being a quorum present. The secretary and treasurer transacted some business that had to be attended to in regard to paris green and binder twine.

After having a general old chat, those present proclaimed they had a good supper. The grange will meet again on the 12th of August. All come. There is a supper awaiting you. Don't fail to make your appearance.

By Order of the Master.

Marion Center Grange No. 956.

Marion Center Grange No. 956 met in regular session July 8, with all officers present except treasurer and opened in regular form.

The usual order of business was carried out. The secretary reported that two-hundred pounds of binder twine had been ordered.

After recess, for the purpose of paying dues, the grange was called to order by Worthy Master Ward and the following program was carried out:

TREES FOR ROADSIDES.

Preservative Effect of Shade on French Highways.

In answer to inquiries from the United States, Consul General Robert P. Skinner of Marseilles furnishes the following information relative to the effect of wayside trees on French roads:

It is proposed to plant trees along the roadsides of New York state in order to keep the moisture in the road and prevent raveling, and the question has been raised whether or not the roots of such trees may spread out underneath the road surface and eventually create great damage in a severe climate where there are extremes of heat and cold. While French roads are not always bordered with shade trees, they are so very frequently, and my information is that the trees are planted not only for furnishing shade, but in order to protect the roads themselves against the effects of excessive heat and drought. It is believed that the long, dry summer season is much more inimical to roads than severe cold. The chief officer in charge of the public roads in Marseilles is of the opinion that, on the whole, New York roads would be benefited if bordered with trees, suggesting, however, that only such should be planted as have vertically descending roots.

F. Birot, civil engineer and former conductor of the bureau of bridges and highways, expresses himself as follows on the subject:

"In countries where the climate is damp roadside trees are prejudicial to the maintenance of the highways, as they prevent the circulation of the air and the drying of the soil. In most of the southern French regions such plantations are, on the other hand, very useful in dry weather, as they maintain the roadbed in a state of freshness favorable to its conservation. In general, trees should be selected with high spreading branches, such as the poplar, the elm, the ash, and they should be planted generally upon the outer edge of the roadbox and at distances of 10 meters (32.80 feet). Each tree should be placed in a hole a meter (3.28 feet) deep and 1½ meters (4.92 feet) square and should be trimmed to a height of 2½ meters (8.20 feet) above the surface.

"The earth about newly planted trees should be loosened in March and November—in March only after the third year—and thereafter until their permanent growth appears assured. Small trenches should be directed toward the foot of the trees in order to secure the benefit of rains. Finally the tree itself should be trimmed annually during the first ten years."

NO MAIL ON BAD ROADS.

Rural Delivery to Be Discontinued on Highways Not In Good Condition.

In order to secure good roads on the routes over which rural carriers deliver mail, Fourth Assistant Postmaster General De Graw has issued a new regulation that mail will not be delivered on roads which are not kept in good condition. Some time ago the fourth assistant issued an order requiring postmasters at rural delivery offices to report to the department the number of miles of road covered by rural delivery from their offices and the names of road officials having jurisdiction over each separate section of road.

Letters have been sent to these road officials notifying them that rural delivery will not be continued on roads which are not kept in condition to be traveled with facility and safety at all seasons of the year. They are requested to give attention to the roads as soon as practicable. New York has 1,804 rural routes, made up of 1,629 miles of macadam road and 39,352 miles of earth, gravel and sand roads.

Rural Carriers and Roads.

It is only right that the postal authorities demand good roads over which the rural routes have to travel. The people owe it to themselves to build the roads anyway, says the Bolivar Herald. If a farmer would figure the time saved to him by having the mail brought to his door he could well afford to build and maintain a good gravel road over every mile of the route. Did you ever stop to calculate how much you save in time and money each year by the rural routes? Besides these, think of the convenience and satisfaction derived from them.

RAISING THE HARDY GOAT.

While goat raising is an important industry in European countries, especially in Switzerland, Italy, Germany, Australia, France, Norway and Spain, it is only within the last eight or ten years that goats have attracted the attention of breeders who have since raised them in any considerable numbers. The enthusiasts say that there is a big profit in raising them for market.

The hardiness of the goat and its ability to care for itself render goat raising a very simple matter. It is not particular in its food, nor is it a gross eater. For this reason goat farming is especially recommended for women. The farmer's wife is learning that she can care for a large herd with little effort or worry. An important source of income is thus made possible throughout the country. Practically any land, no matter how poor, will support a goat herd, provided alone it is not wet or marshy. Goats will thrive and multiply on land which would starve horses or cattle or even sheep. The roughness of the land works no disadvantage since goats seem to prefer hillsides and rocky cliffs to level country.

The principal value of the Angora goat from a commercial standpoint lies in its wool, which is commonly known as mohair, but another strong point in the Angora is its dietetic peculiarity, which makes it one of the best land scavengers in the world. A great many of the farmers who have in recent years gone into Angora goat raising have had the clearing of their brush patches in view rather than the mere production of mohair.

Writing of milk goats recently, a Massachusetts breeder said: "The two breeds which by common agreement seem the most desirable for this country are the Toggenburg and Saanen, both Swiss varieties. Only a few importations of these have been made, numbering in all fewer than 100.

"What are they good for? They are milk producers—milk of a very high quality and with not the slightest strong or unpleasant flavor. They are not so good for cream or butter. The milk is richer in fat than cow's milk, but does not separate readily. At the same time it is the most easily digested milk known, which makes it of the greatest value as food for children and invalids.

"The writer has a Saanen doe that gave three quarts of milk per day at her first kidding and now, six months later, gives two quarts. The milk sells in the cities readily for 25 cents per quart. When mature this doe should give five or six quarts when fresh. She is a hearty feeder and drinker, but, for all that, what is such an animal worth as an investment? To the man familiar with the care of domestic animals and with a small capital here is an opportunity in an undeveloped but extremely promising field first, for some time, in supplying pure bred breeding stock and later in the sale of milk.

"The best way to start is to get a few pure bred individuals and a number of good, active does from which to breed a flock of high grades, in order to meet the demand from the class of people who can hardly afford to pay $40 to $50 for a milk doe. There is no apparent reason why with patience and care there should not be produced a strain which will be large producers. I have heard of a doe giving eight quarts of milk in twenty-four hours and over 1,000 quarts in one year."

HEALTH OF THE HOG.

Measures That Should Be Taken to Protect the Herd.

After all, the old adage that an ounce of prevention is worth pounds of cure, holds good in protecting the health of the hog. Cholera receives credit for killing many animals whose death is due to other causes. Many of these troubles can be guarded against or may be successfully treated.

In the way of preventive measures first and foremost stands the natural sunshine—the best antiseptic and germicide known. Here is where other things being equal, the large, fancy hog house is less desirable than the small, individual farrowing house in which the sun can penetrate every nook and corner, drying, warming and disinfecting thoroughly every inch of surface.

It might be said to an almost equal extent that the mere dipping the less disease, as the dipping process not only destroys the vermin, but stimulates the action of the skin and, reflexly, the digestive organs.

During last fall and winter several outbreaks of true hog cholera were caused by the lack of a little foresight in not properly handling breeding and show stock. No hog or pig should be placed among strange animals without first being kept in quarantine for a few weeks and dipped several times. In buying breeding stock or show stock, returning home they should always be dipped upon arriving and at the end of the quarantine period before turning them in with the rest of the herd. By quarantining, in this instance, is meant the keeping of the animals entirely by themselves and cared for by an attendant who never goes near the main herd until such time as it is decided positively that they have not been infected with disease.

When symptoms of cholera appear in a herd it is wise to dip the whole herd, disinfect their quarters thoroughly, give them a slight change in feed and add to this about five drops of tincture of prickly ash far each hundred pounds af hog ance or twice per day. The old remedy of wood ashes and salt is good in many instances. A little powdered sulphate of copper, dried sulphate of iron or charcoal given daily when the animals are not perfectly healthy frequently does much good.—F. S. Schoenleber, D. V. S., Professor of Veterinary Science, Kansas State Agricultural College.

NEW MILKING MACHINE.

Simple Device Used Abroad to Save Time in the Dairy.

A very simple mechanical milker is being used in Europe, and reports indicate better results than have been secured from any other of the several milking machines. It is so simple that a boy of ten years of age can easily operate it, says Popular Mechanics. It consists of four pumps which work in succession, one after another, and at the same speed as a person milking by hand. Each pump is connected by a short rubber tube to a teat cup, of which there are four.

The milk has only a short distance to travel and discharges directly into the pail to which the machine is fastened. The operator sits on a stool and turns a crank at the rate of forty-five revolutions per minute. The suction of any one of the pumps can be increased or decreased by turning a thumbscrew which controls the air passage. As soon as one teat is milked the suction is cut off and the cup removed, while the other pumps continue working.

Where several machines are used in one place, power through flexible shafting, one-tenth horsepower to each machine, may be used. With power one operator can superintend several machines. The device has been patented in all countries.

Clean Milk Utensils.

I believe the ordinary ten gallon milk can used for the transportation of commercial milk has been the cause of more trouble than any other one thing. Frequently cans which are supposed to be clean contain half a pint of filthy rinsing water. I believe there should be an ordinance in every village and city compelling the milk vender to wash and sterilize his cans thoroughly before sending them to the producer. In the washing of milk utensils you should not use soap powders or soaps of any kind which contain organic fat. By so doing you may convey to your milk undesirable flavors and cause to remain in your utensils deposits which will contaminate or deteriorate the milk.—John D. Nichols, Ohio.

Removing Tusks From a Boar.

A writer in the Kansas Farmer says, "The most convenient way that we have found to remove the tusks from a boar is to place a good, strong inch rope in his mouth, and by this means a couple of men can usually hold him in a corner of the pen while the third with a pair of sharp pinchers removes the tusks."

How to Protect Packed Bedding.

Do you ever have clothing or bedding that you want to pack away in the garret or some other place, perhaps for months at a time, without being looked after? Just try this plan before packing the box: Get a box of cayenne pepper and sprinkle it thick on the bottom of the box. When all packed, put plenty of cayenne on the top. You can rest assured that no rats or mice will want to investigate that box.

The Stingiest Man.

Gallatin claims to have the stingiest man in Tennessee, if not in the world, and a premium is offered for his superior in close tightness. He got married to a home girl to save expenses. They walked around the square for a bridal tour. He bought her a nickel's worth of stick candy for a wedding present and then suggested that they save the candy for the children.—Danville (Tenn.) Advocate.

How to Clean Tan Leather.

The knowledge that tan leather is hard to clean at home keeps a great many people from wearing it as much as they would like. Unless one is very careful the efforts of renovating make it become dark and streaked in places. Heavy tan gloves, which are almost every one's greatest comfort, can be kept in good condition by taking a damp rag and rubbing it over the surface. This removes the dirt and restores the original color. Yellow shoes, which no girl considers herself in the latest style without, can be cleaned by putting a few drops of turpentine on a woolen rag and rubbing them evenly all over. When dry, polish with a soft brush, and they will look like new.

How to Clean Cretonne.

To clean cretonne it should first of all be thoroughly shaken in the open air and then washed in bran water without rubbing. Rinse in a second bowl of bran water, to which salt and vinegar have been added in the proportion of one tablespoonful of each to a quart of water, in order to prevent the colors from running. Wring tightly and roll up with a fold of clean towel between each roll. Using a heavy hot iron, iron the cretonne on the wrong side until it is quite dry. As the bran water itself stiffens, there is no necessity for starching.

How to Banish Moths and Roaches.

Salt prevents moths from getting into the carpets. To clear a house of cockroaches put powdered borax into a tin with a perforated lid and dust the borax into cupboards, about the stove, on the floor and everywhere the roaches are found. Use the borax steadily in this way for a time, and you will find that the roaches disappear entirely. This remedy is perfectly safe, for borax will not injure dogs, cats or other animals.

How to Keep Belts and Ribbons.

A convenient way to keep belts, ribbons and collars in order is to use a curtain stick or old cane. Wind around it some colored cambric or ribbon. Place two large hooks in the wall so that they extend slightly. Place your stick on hooks and you have a neat rack. This saves much time and keeps your bureau drawers tidy.

NATIONAL GOOD ROADS CONVENTION

Held at Grand Rapids Two Days of Last Week

THE ATTENDANCE WAS VERY LARGE

Prominent Workers in the Cause Made Addresses

Horatio S. Earle Again Elected President—Resolutions Adopted Favor the Use of Convict Labor in Prepairing Road Material.

After closiug a successful session by the election of officers and the adoption of resolutioos the good roads convention held at Grand Rapids last week adjourned.

"By gum, it was a great meeting," saya Horatio S. Earle, the man who promoted it.

So it was. At least 200 members were present and it is no small feat to get that many farmers away from their work at this time of the year.

Edward N. Hines, a road commissioner of Wayne county, was one of the first speakers of the morniog. Down there they are building tar macadam roads on a plan of their own which avoids payment for the patent, and they find that it is a great success. The road costs from $7,000 to $15,000 a mile, but when done it is as good as a city street, and is absolutely dustless, a great feature for the farmers of that county, because of the number of automobiles owned in Detroit that use the roads. A fast moving automobile is said to tear up the road more than many teams because of the suction from its tires, which whirl dust oft the roadbed.

Curtis Hill spoke of "Road Conditions in Missouri," which state has recently adopted a progressive method ol road making. Mr. Hill advocated the maintenance by the state ol a small portable road plant for making road material. Green county, Missouri, already has such a plant for its own uses and Mr. Hill thought the state could profitably employ several of them.

This county owns a small portable prison or "convict's cage" as they call it, in which the convicts live. It is towed abont the county by a traction engine and the convicts furnish road material with their rock crushing plant where it is needed.

There are two guards, a traction engine, an engineer, 12 prisoners and team in the Green county outfit which can be operated for $15 per day. Its average output is 80 yards of crushed stone daily, while his highest has been 97 yards. "Its efficiency is about 60 per cent that of free labor," Mr. Hill said.

Mr. Hill's speech was the closing one of the session and the meeting adjourned after a little talk by Mr. Earle.

"If its a crime to be a lobbyist," he shouted, "I'm one of the chief criminals of the state, for I've lobbied in the legislature for good roads laws for the last ten years.

"If I hadn't, by gum, you wouldn't have a bit of the good roads legislation that has gone on the books, neither.

"Why did I do this? Because the state of Michigan has been good to me. I came into the state and when I earned my first week's pay I had just 75 cents in my pocket. Now I guess I've got 75 times that much at least, and if I can do anything to show the state that I'm grateful for what it has done for me, by gum, I'm going to do it."

Edward N. Hines of Detroit, presented the report of the nominating committee indoraing the following officers. The report was unanimously carried.

President—Horatio S. Earle, Detroit.

Vice presidents—Isaac B. Potter, New York city; Curtis Hill, Columbia, Mo.; A. N. Johnson, Springfield, Ill.

Secretary—F. W. Boughton, Grand Rapids.

Treasurer—The Michigan Trust Co., Grand Rapids.

Organizer—R. E. Hogan, Grand Rapids.

Saginaw put in a bid for the next meeting, but no action was taken. The Saginawians declare their new convention hall will be ready to entertain guests long before the next session is called.

George R. Rowe of Grand Rapids, offered the report of the committee on resolutions which was adopted. The report advocates the use of convict labor in prepairing road material.

BUSINESS CHANGES

Three Have Taken Place During the Past Week.

The past week has witnessed the change of three prominent Charlevoix business firms.

The Bentley Hardware company will hereafter run under the name of Raymond Bentley. This is a change in name only. Mr. Bentley regarding it as better to have the business under his own name. The old name has made a place for itself in Charlevoix's business history and the new one has the best wishes of everybody.

Monday morning Hugh McCartney took charge of the dray and baggage business of J. H. Reid and is taking hold like a veteran. Mr. Reid intends, so we are informed, to locate in the west.

George Taylor has moved the City bakery into the building formerly occupied by William E. Black's Home bakery, Mr. Black retiring from business, and is welcoming all the customers of both places.

WRECK AT SOUTH BOARDMAN

On G. R. & I. Thursday—Four are Injured

Engineer Johnson May Lose His Foot, Which Was Badly Crushed.

At about one o'clock Thursday the G. R. & I. passenger train from the south, rounded the curve south of South Boardman and crashed into some loaded freight cars on the main line, which were being switched around by the local freight crew and engine which were there at the time. The wreck occurred at the Anderson Switch south of town. The passenger engine telescoped a box car loaded with hardwood lumber and was badly wrecked. The baggage car also telescoped the smoker and both were badly smashed.

Engineer Harry Johnson of the passenger engine was the most severely injured, one foot being smashed so badly that amputation will probably be necessary.

Mail clerk Brown was cut on the head, just behind the right ear.

D. L. Moore of Battle Creek, passenger, injured internally and knee hurt; other bruises.

Walter Emerson, South Boardman, another passenger, cut and bruised.

The freight crew had a flagman out watching for the passenger, but he was only a short distance back, and when the engineer on the passenger received the signal he had only time to set the emergency brake and jump. He didn't seem to know just how his foot got hurt, but it is possible that it was run over after he jumped.

None of the cars left the rails, and the wrecking crew, which was called from Cadillac, had the line cleared at six o'clock.

Engineer Johnson was brought to Kalkaska by the freight crew, where his injuries could be attended to, there being no doctor in Boardman at the time of the wreck.

PRAISE FOR SENATOR MING

Governor Warner Commends the Present Senator From this District.

In striking contrast with his straight-from-the-shoulder attack on Karl Keyes, Boxer senator No. 6 of the Barry-Eaton district, Gov. Warner in his speech at Cheboygan spoke as follows of the Cheboygan senator, Fred Ming, who is not a Boxer, and also of Senator Wetmore of the adjoining district; "The whole state owes a debt of gratitude to the twenty-ninth district for sending a man just like Fred Ming to Lansing, just as it does to the twenty-seventh district for giving to the service of the state Senator Wetmore. Both demonstrated their fitness for the duties demanded and the trust imposed by faithfully representing the real sentiment of the people of their districts. They were not of the type, unfortunately too numerous in the last senate, whose loyalty to the private interests came before their allegiance to the people who had placed them in office. The fight in Michigan this year is a fight not for a governor alone, but for a legislature made up of men who will do their plain duty as representatives of the whole people, not certain corporations first and the people afterward."

FEW SAILING VESSELS

Two-Hundred Vessels In this Customs District

Of Which Sixteen Hail From Charlevoix—Interesting Report.

According to the annual report made by the customs office at Grand Haven and covering the customs district of Michigan for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1908, there are 200 enrolled vessels plying the lake within this customs district. Of this number only 27 are sailing vessels.

The big Manistique, Marquette & Northern car ferry is the largest boat, having a vessel tonnage of 2,933 or 24 tons more than the next largest boat, the Pere Marquette No. 18. Of the 200 enrolled vessels, 21 were built at Grand Haven and 10 now hail from there. Sixteen hail from Charlevoix, 15 from Cheboygan, Frankfort claims 17, Ludington 19, Manistee 13, Muskegon 17, and St. Joseph 10.

Only seven documented yachts are shown by the report, of which the Sallie, owned by Senator Savidge of Spring Lake, is the only sailing vessel, and the Sea Bird, owned and commanded by Mrs. Nellie F. Perkins of Spring Lake, is the only steam yacht built of steel.

Mrs. Perkins is the only woman in the district who holds master's papers to navigate a steam vessel.

Six old vessels are shown, in which number the steamer Hunter Savidge, built in 1866, and the Third Michigan, built in 1869, are listed. Both of these boats were built at Ferrysburg and are owned by the Louis Sands Salt & Lumber company of Manistee. Only three sailing vessels remain that were built in the early 60's. The sailing vessels are last giving way to gasoline propelled vessels and similar craft. In a few years the sailing vessels will be but a memory.

State Papers Comment on the Congressional Race

Dodds Relies on the Old Style Methods—This Year the People Choose.

The state papers this week publish the following dispatch from Mt. Pleasant in regard to the Covell—Dodds race for congress. While Mr. Dodds' claim bureau is still at work, the facts remain that Mr. Covell is steadily gaining strength in the southern counties and with a proper turnout to the primaries in the northern section is sure to win.

"There is a hot fight waging in this "shoestring" district over the nomination of a candidate for congressman. The people of Mt. Pleasant claim for their candidate, Francis H. Dodds, a goodly majority, while the followers of George G. Covell, of Traverse City, see only a walk-away for their man. To complicate matters further, the friends of Dodds charge that Senator William Alden Smith, speaking in Traverse City, expressed himself as confident that the chances of G. G. Covell's being elected to congress, were excellent. Then the senator is reported to have "rubbed it in" by saying Covell would be an invaluable man, not only for the Eleventh district, but for the country as well, because of his experience in public affairs.

Now, the stanch supporters of Dodds have it figured out that their candidate will have a majority in the 12 counties that compose the "shoestring" district. In Gratiot county they claim four out of five votes for Dodds, and expect him to run about even in Montcalm, three out of four in Mecosta, three out of four in Osceola, five out of six in Clare, half of Roscommon, four out of five in Missaukee, over half in Kalkaska, half of Antrim and the vote in Isabella, they say, will be unanimous. To Covell they concede majorities in Charlevoix and Grand Traverse counties, only.

The cry "Boxer element" has also gone up from the Covell camp regarding Dodds and his followers doubtless because Dodds is a backer of Senator Harry Kane in the state legislature. But this "Boxer element" cry; nevertheless, will doubtless cut quite a figure in the fight in this district, and may possibly account for Senator Smith's statement of his belief that Covell will be the next congressman from the Eleventh district.

The allegation as to this expression of belief on Senator Smith's part is followed by the news of a big Covell rally in Gratiot county, and the organization of a Covell club in Alma with 214 members, or more than half the Republican vote of the city, and right here is where the Dodds supporters counted on a big majority. This is taken as a piece of rank ingratitude on the part of Gratiot. Eight years ago Dodds and Darragh were candidates for coogress, at the convention held in Traverse City. The fight waxed warm. It became known quite a faction had promised to support Messick as second choice against Darragh for the nomination, and because he considered Darragh would be the stronger candidate, Dodds withdrew, throwing all his votes to the support of the Gratiot man. The nomination went to Darragh, and he was elected. There is said to have been an understanding then that when the time came, Darragh should throw his support to Dodds. After two terms, the Dodds followers looked to Darragh to make way for the Isabella county man but Darragh liked the job too well, and sat through four terms.

But the Dodds followers are confident of victory. Every paper in Isabella has declared itself for Dodds. A. W. Contant, of the "Enterprise," who says that the "Hoxers" are all anti-primary reformers, and who, through the columns of his paper fought them and succeeded in getting the primary method of nominating candidates adopted in Isabella county has come out with most enthusiastic support of Dodds. So also has the Democratic paper. The most prominent Democrats in Isabella county are a unit for Dodds, but the fact still remains that Senator Smith has a strong following outside of Isabella, and his statement that Covell is sure of the nomination, will go a long way toward securing votes for the Traverse City man.

NATIONAL GOOD ROADS CONVENTION

Held at Grand Rapids Two Days of Last Week

THE ATTENDANCE WAS VERY LARGE

Prominent Workers in the Cause Made Addresses

Horace S. Earle Again Elected President

Resolutions Adopted Favoring the Use of Convict Labor in Preparing Road Material

After closing a successful session by the election of officers and the adoption of resolutions the good roads convention held at Grand Rapids last week adjourned.

"By gum, it was a great meeting," says Horatio S. Earle, the man who promoted it.

So it was. At least 200 members were present and it is no small feat to get that many farmers away from their work at this time of the year.

Edward N. Hines, a road commissioner of Wayne county, was one of the first speakers of the morning. Down there they are building gravel roads on a plan of their own which avoids payment for the patent, and they find that it is a great success. The road costs from $7,000 to $7,500 a mile, but when done it is as good as a city street, and is absolutely dustless, a great feature for the farmers of that county, because of the number of automobiles. What is Detroit that use the roads. Next moving automobile is only 10 per cent of the total of the many teams, because of the cents it costs the latter, which whirl dust on the roadbed.

Curtis Hill spoke of Road Conditions in Missouri, which state has recently adopted a "progressive" method of road making. Mr. Hill advocated the maintenance by the state of a small portable road plant for making road material. Green county, Missouri, already has such a plant for its own uses and Mr. Hill thought the state could profitably employ several of them.

This county owns a small portable prison or "convict's cage" as they call it, in which the convicts live. It is towed about the county by a traction engine and the convicts furnish road material with their rock crushing plant where it is needed.

There are two guards, a traction engine, an engineer, 12 prisoners and team in the Green county outfit which can be operated for $15 per day. Its average output is 80 yards of crushed stone daily, while his highest has been 45 yards. "Its efficiency is about 90 per cent that of free labor," Mr. Hill said.

Mr. Hill's speech was the closing one of the session and the meeting adjourned after a little talk by Mr. Earle.

"If it's a crime to be a lobbyist," he shouted, "I'm one of the chief criminals of the state, for I've lobbied in the legislature for good roads laws for the last ten years.

"If I hadn't, by gum, you wouldn't have a bit of the good roads legislation that has gone on the books, neither.

"Why did I do this? Because the state of Michigan has been good to me. I came into the state and when I earned my first week's pay I had just 75 cents in my pocket. Now I guess I've got 75 times that much at least, and if I can do anything to show the state that I'm grateful for what it has done for me, by gum, I'm going to do it."

Edward N. Hines of Detroit, presented the report of the nominating committee endorsing the following officers. The report was unanimously carried.

President—Horatio S. Earle, Detroit.

Vice presidents—Isaac B. Dalby, New York city; Curtis Hill, Columbia, Mo.; A. N. Johnson, Springfield, Ill.; Judge E. W. Bonney, Lowell.

Treasurer—The Michigan Trust Co., Grand Rapids.

Chief engineer—R. E. Hogan, Grand Rapids.

Saginaw put in a bid for the next meeting, but no action was taken. The Saginaw bid is to have their new convention hall will be ready to entertain guests long before the next session is called.

Gen. Alger Row of Grand Rapids offered the report of the committee on resolutions, which was adopted. The resolutions are as follows:

That it is the sense of this convention that the state should construct and maintain a system of good roads.

That the state should use convict labor in the preparation of road material.

That the state should own and operate a portable road plant.

That the state should own and operate a portable convict camp.

That the state should appropriate $1,000,000 for the construction of good roads.

That the state should appropriate $100,000 annually for the maintenance of good roads.

That the state should appropriate $50,000 annually for the maintenance of a state road plant.

That the state should appropriate $50,000 annually for the maintenance of a state convict camp.

That the state should appropriate $50,000 annually for the maintenance of a state road commissioner.

That the state should appropriate $50,000 annually for the maintenance of a state road engineer

Over-Work Weakens Your Kidneys.

Unhealthy Kidneys Make Impure Blood.

All the blood in your body passes through your kidneys once every three minutes.

The kidneys are your blood purifiers, they filter out the waste or impurities in the blood.

If they are sick or out of order, they fail to do their work.

Pains, aches and rheumatism come from excess of uric acid in the blood, due to neglected kidney trouble.

Kidney trouble causes quick or unsteady heart beats, and makes one feel as though they had heart trouble, because the heart is over-working in pumping thick, kidney-poisoned blood through veins and arteries.

It used to be considered that only urinary troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all constitutional diseases have their beginning in kidney trouble.

If you are sick you can make no mistake by first doctoring your kidneys. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases and is sold on its merits by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also pamphlet telling you how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. Mention this paper when writing Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

Home of Swamp-Root.

Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

Literary Notes

A Good-Wish Rose.

"A clever idea was carried out at a recent 'shower' for a bride-to-be," says July Woman's Home Companion. "In the invitation each guest was requested to send in, prior to the party, a wish for the bride. The hostess made a beautiful large white paper rose, and before putting it together she wrote on each petal a wish and the name of the wisher. As is usual in most cases, some of the guests forgot to send in a wish, but brought one with them, and others wrote them after they arrived. For this purpose a large paper rosebud had been made, into which the wishes were slipped, and the bud twisted up again. The guest of honor was charmed with the rose and rosebud, and said that she should always keep it as a pleasant reminder of her friends, whom she was soon to leave for a new home in a distant city."

THE BIGGEST EVER.

A New Feature of the Coming State Fair.

Secretary Butterfield of the state fair says that never were the prospects so encouraging as this year for exhibits, and he has held that office for the past fifteen years and is in a position to know. Entries are coming in earlier, and more of them. The interest in the big fair seems to increase each year, and the great difficulty now is to take good care of all the exhibits with the present facilities. It was thought when the present buildings were erected that they would answer all purposes for years to come, but there is already a lack of buildings to house all exhibits which are shown.

Exhibitors and visitors will be especially interested in knowing that this year a catalog containing a list of all the entries, the number, the owners, location, attractions, places where meals are served, prices, race program, Midway attractions, arrival and departure of trains and, in fact, everything the visitor wants to know about the big fair will be issued. These may be had on the grounds.

Entries on livestock close much earlier this year, in order to get the list in the catalog, the closing date being Aug. 10. Secretary Butterfield will be very glad to furnish all and any information desired regarding the coming fair.

Neighborhood Notes

There is a little village called Naples some 18 miles from Newaygo of 700 inhabitants, and there is not a house in the village. They all dwell in tents and are huckleberry pickers. For some weeks the tented village has been one of activity. Berry picking has been good and wages paid remunerative. Every night the inhabitants have dances and while the Huck season lasts, Naples is a merry place.

The executive committee of the Western Michigan Maccabee Association has selected August 8 as the date of the annual picnic to be held in Grand Rapids. It is now expected that 30,000 visitors will be in that city on that day. A sport program has been adopted and Grand Rapids will do other things in the way of entertainment. Several of the great tent officers will be present and take part on the program as well as some of the state officers.

A musical band organization. That is what Mayor Metheany would like for Cadillac. He proposes at an early date to ask the common council to make an appropriation for the benefit of the Cadillac City band, in return for which the band will be asked to give at least one evening concert in the park and a concert on Sunday afternoon, playing only sacred music at the Sunday concert. He believes it would be a good investment for the city and not a bad thing for the band considering the fact that it now gives a Friday evening concert in the park gratis. The large crowd of people that flocks to the park every warm Sunday would undoubtedly appreciate a concert then.

Volunteers succeeded in extinguishing a fire which had smouldered for 24 hours in 2,000 tons of coal in the underground concrete bunkers at the Northern Michigan asylum last week. The light was a hard one as the men were unable to stay in the bunkers over a minute. The fire was six feet below the surface, but was finally shoveled out. It was caused by spontaneous combustion. Loss small.

The Ionia school board has paid back into the state treasury the $1,378 which the state department of public instruction charged was illegally collected by the board in primary school funds. Under an investigation started by Supt. Wright of the instruction department, it was disclosed that the Ionia school census has been added to the amount named, and the board of education was requested to return the money. Whether any criminal proceedings will be started is not known yet.

The spectacle of small boy calmly riding up the Leland river on the back of an immense sturgeon caused amusement and astonishment there. The sturgeon had been caught by Price brothers, local fishermen, and when it was towed up the river the boy jumped on and rode. The fish supported him easily, as it was seven feet long and weighed 150 pounds. Without the boy the fish would have been a novelty because of its size, although sturgeon and big ones, too, were very plentiful there a few years ago, but that was before the resorters came.

"Whiskey. Please do not ask me to write you a prescription for whiskey" is the way a card in big letters reads in a Cadillac doctor's office.

At the final session of the seventh annual convention of the Michigan Rural letter carriers' convention held at Jackson last week, the old officers were re-elected as follows: President, R. T. Walker, Plymouth; vice-president, W. F. Johnseen, Rodney; secretary, H. E. Crum, Hillsdale; treasurer, John H. Ramsay, Eaton Rapids. C. C. Eaton of Saginaw, was elected member of the executive board for three years. Big Rapids was selected as the place for holding the next convention.

The convention produced some tart criticism of Congressman Gardner by President Lindsay of the national association. He hailed the second district congressman tagged as an opponent of the increase of salaries of the rural carriers from $900 to $1,000 a year, and vigorously urged the claims of the carriers. President Lindsay said the record of the carriers was better than that of the congressman. Gardner gave a short heart to heart talk in reply, in which he asserted that he has been a friend of the rural carriers and intimated that the vote against increased pay for them might have been cast by some other congressman of his name. Mr. Gardner reminded the carriers that they had fared well by securing increases of salary from $300 a year to $900. President Lindsay maintained that, considering the expense of the care of two horses, $900 was poor pay.

SYMPTOMS OF RABIES.

How to Know When Your Dog Is Really Mad.

Hydrophobia is in reality so rare and so terrifying that its symptoms and treatment are little understood. As a matter of fact, the commonly accepted expression of madness in a dog is often misleading. The real mad dog does not shun water, as it is said. On the contrary, mad dogs often rush to the water and drink eagerly if they are able to swallow. The mad dog does not froth at the mouth. It does not run amuck, snapping at everything in its path. What, then, are the indications of the mad dog? To those familiar with a given dog the surest symptom and the one which should excite closest attention is a distinct and unaccountable change in the dog's disposition, a staid dog becoming excitable and a frisky one dull.

That condition does not necessarily mean rabies, but it is suspicious, says Caspar Whitney in the July Outing, and if in addition the dog has trouble in swallowing, as though it seemed to have a bone in its throat, beware! That dog should be instantly tied up, because if it be rabies it takes but a day or two for ferocious instincts to develop. The unmistakable evidence, however, of a dog with rabies is the sticky, whitish saliva which covers the teeth and shows on the drawn lips. The eyes glare and are red; the dog has paroxysms of running fury, during which it barks hoarsely, which alternate with periods of temporary exhaustion.

THE LION AND THE MOUSE.

By CHARLES KLEIN.

A Story of American Life Novelized From the Play by ARTHUR HORNBLOW.

COPYRIGHT, 1906, BY C. W. DILLINGHAM COMPANY.

"The Lion and the Mouse," novelized from Charles Klein's great play, is an American story of the hour dealing with the billionaire. Its leading character is the richest man in the world. In the thinly veiled John Ryder the reader will immediately recognize another John of worldwide fame. John Ryder's unscrupulous methods are revealed in the conspiracy to ruin an incorruptible judge who rules adversely to the interests of organized capital. The juage's daughter determines to save him. Her heroic struggles in conftict with the money octopus make a story of absorbing interest and great dramatic power. In his wittingness to renounce his father's fortune for the girl of his choice, Ryder's son displays a nobility which wins the reader's warmest admiration.

CHAPTER I.

THERE was unwonted bustle in the usually sleepy and dignified New York offices of the Southern and Transcontinental Railroad company in lower Broadway.

It was the regular quarterly meeting of the directors of the Southern and Transcontinental Railroad company, but it was something more than mere routine that had called out a quorum of such strength and which made today's gathering one of extraordinary importance in the history of the road. That the business on hand was of the greatest significance was easily to be inferred from the concerned and anxious expression on the directors' faces and the eagerness of the employees as they plied each other with questions.

"Suppose the injunction is sustained?" asked a clerk in a whisper. "Is not the road rich enough to bear the loss?"

The man he addressed turned impatiently to the questioner.

"That's all you know about railroading. Don't you understand that this suit we have lost will be the entering wedge for hundreds of others? The very existence of the road may be at stake. And between you and me," he added in a lower key, "with Judge Rossmore on the bench we never stood much show. It's Judge Rossmore that scares 'em, not the injunction. They've found it easy to corrupt most of the supreme court judges, but Judge Rossmore is one too many for them. You could no more bribe him than you could have bribed Abraham Lincoln."

"But the newspapers say that he, too, has been caught accepting $50,000 worth of stock for that decision he rendered in the Great Northwestern cuse."

"Lies! All those stories are lies," replied the other emphatically. Then, looking cautiously around to make sure no one overheard, he added contemptuously: "The big interests fear him, and they're inventing these lies to try and injure him. They might as well try to blow up Gibraltar. The fact is the public is seriously aroused this time, and the railroads are in a panic."

It was true. The railroad, which heretofore had considered itself superior to law, had found itself checked in its career of outlawry and oppression. The railroad, this modern octopus of steam and steel which stretches its greedy tentacles out over the land, had at last been brought to book.

John Burkett Ryder, the richest man in the world—the man whose name had spread to the farthest corners of the earth because of his wealth, and whose money, instead of being a blessing, promised to become not only a curse to himself, but a source of dire peril to all mankind—was a genius born of the railroad age. No other age could have brought him forth. His peculiar talents fitted exactly the conditions of his time. Attracted early in life to the newly discovered oil fields of Pennsylvania, he became a dealer in the raw product and later a refiner, acquiring with capital, laboriously saved, first one refinery, then another. The railroads were cutting each other's throats to secure the freight business of the oil men, and John Burkett Ryder saw his opportunity. He made secret overtures to the road, guaranteeing a vast amount of business if he could get exceptionally low rates, and the illegal compact was made. His competitors, undersold in the market, stood no chance, and one by one they were crushed out of existence. Ryder called these maneuvers "business." The world called them brigandage. But the Colossus prospered and slowly built up the foundations of the extraordinary fortune which is the talk and the wonder of the world today. Master now of the oil situation, Ryder succeeded in his ambition of organizing the Empire Trading company, the most powerful, the most secretive and the most wealthy business institution the commercial world has yet known.

Yet with all this success John Burkett Ryder was still not content. He was now a rich man, richer by many millions than he had dreamed he could ever be, but still he was insatiable. He became money mad. He wanted to be richer still, to be the richest man in the world, the richest man the world had ever known. And the richer he got the stronger the idea grew upon him with all the force of a morbid obsession.

Yet this commercial pirate, this Napoleon of finance, was not a wholly bad man. He had his redeeming qualities, like most bad men. His most pronounced weakness, and the one that had made him the most conspicuous man of his time, was an entire lack of moral principle. No honest or honorable man could have amassed such stupendous wealth. In other words, John Ryder had not been equipped by nature with a conscience. He had no sense of right or wrong or justice where his own interests were concerned. He was the prince of egoists. On the other hand, he possessed qualities which, with some people, count as virtues. He was pious and regular in his attendance at church, and, while he had done but little for charity, he was known to have encouraged the giving of alms by members of his family, which consisted of a wife, whose timid voice was rarely heard, and a son Jefferson, who was the destined successor of his gigantic estate.

Such was the man who was the real power behind the Southern and Transcontinental railroad. More than any one else Ryder had been aroused by the present legal action, not so much for the money interest at stake as that any one should dare to thwart his will. It had been a pet scheme of his, this purchase for a song when the land was cheap of some thousand acres along the line, and it is true that at the time of the purchase there had been some idea of laying the land out as a park, but real estate values had increased in astonishing fashion, the road could no longer afford to carry out the original scheme and had attempted to dispose of the property for building purposes, including a right of way for a branch road. The news, made public in the newspapers, had raised a storm of protest. The people in the vicinity claimed that the railroad secured the land on the express condition of a park being laid out, and in order to make a legal test they had secured an injunction, which had been sustained by Judge Rossmore of the United States circuit court.

These details were hastily told and retold by one clerk to another as the babel of voices in the inner room grew louder and more directors kept arriving from the ever busy elevators. The meeting was called for 3 o'clock. Another five minutes and the chairman would rap for order. A tall, strongly built man with white mustache and kindly smile emerged from the directors' room and, addressing one of the clerks, asked:

"Has Mr. Ryder arrived yet?"

The alacrity with which the employee hastened forward to reply would indicate that his interlocutor was a person of more than ordinary importance.

"No, senator, not yet. We expect him any minute." Then with a deferential smile he added, "Mr. Ryder usually arrives on the stroke, sir."

The senator gave a nod of acquiescence and, turning on his heel, greeted with a grasp of the hand and affable smile his fellow directors as they passed in by twos and threes.

Senator Roberts was in the world of politics what his friend John Burkett Ryder was in the world of finance—a leader of men. He started life in Wisconsin as an errand boy, was educated in the public schools and later became clerk in a dry goods store, finally going into business for his own account on a large scale. He was elected to the legislature, where his ability as an organizer soon gained the friendship of the men in power, and later was sent to congress, where he was quickly initiated in the game of corrupt politics. In 1885 he entered the United States senate. He soon became the acknowledged leader of a considerable majority of the Republican senators, and from then on he was a figure to be reckoned with. A very ambitious man, with a great love of power and few scruples, it is little wonder that only the practical or dishonest side of politics appealed to him. He was in politics for all there was in it, and he saw in his lofty position only a splendid opportunity for easy graft.

He did not hesitate to make such alliances with corporate interests seeking influence at Washington as would enable him to accomplish this purpose, and in this way he had met and formed a strong friendship with John Burkett Ryder. Each, being a master in his own field, was useful to the other. Neither was troubled with qualms of conscience, so they never quarreled. If Ryder interests needed anything in the senate, Roberts and his followers were there to attend to it. Just now the cohort was marshaled in defense of the railroads against the attacks of the new rebate bill. In fact, Ryder managed to keep the senate busy all the time. When, on the other hand, the senators wanted anything and they often did—Ryder saw that they got it, lower rates for this one, a fat job for that one, not forgetting themselves. Senator Roberts was already a very rich man, and, although the world often wondered where he got it, no one had the courage to ask him.

But the Republican leader was stirred with an ambition greater than that of controlling a majority in the senate. He had a daughter, a marriageable young woman who, at least in her father's opinion, would make a desirable wife for any man. His friend Ryder had a son, and this son was the only heir to the greatest fortune ever amassed by one man, a fortune which at its present rate of increase by the time the father died and the young couple were ready to inherit would probably amount to over $6,000,000,000. Could the human mind grasp the possibilities of such a colossal fortune? It staggered the imagination. Its owner or the man who controlled it would be master of the world! Was not this a prize any man might well set himself out to win? The senator was thinking of it now as he stood exchanging banal remarks with the men who accosted him. If he could only bring off that marriage, he would be content. The ambition of his life would be attained. There was no difficulty as far as John Ryder was concerned. He favored the match and had often spoken of it. Indeed, Ryder desired it, for such an alliance would naturally further his business interests in every way. Roberts knew that his daughter Kate had more than a liking for Ryder's handsome young son. Moreover, Kate was practical, like her father, and had sense enough to realize what it would mean to be the mistress of the Ryder fortune. No, Kate was all right, but there was young Ryder to reckon with. It would take two in this case to make a bargain.

Jefferson Ryder was, in truth, an entirely different man from his father. It was difficult to realize that both had sprung from the same stock. A college bred boy, with all the advantages his father's wealth could give him, he had inherited from the parent only those characteristics which would have made him successful even if born poor—activity, pluck, application, dogged obstinacy, alert mentality. To these qualities he added what his father sorely lacked—a high notion of honor, a keen sense of right and wrong. He had the honest man's contempt for meanness of any description, and he had little patience with the lax, so called business morals of the day. For him a dishonorable or dishonest action could have no apologist, and he could see no difference between the crime of the hungry wretch who stole a loaf of bread and the coal baron who systematically robbed both his employees and the public. In fact, had he been on the bench he would probably have acquitted the human derelict who in despair had appropriated the prime necessary of life and sent the overfed, conscienceless coal baron to jail.

The hands of the large clock in the outer room pointed to 3. An active, dapper little man with glasses and with books under his arm passed hurriedly from another office into the directors' room.

"There goes Mr. Lane with the minutes. The meeting is called. Where's Mr. Ryder?" asked one of the directors.

There was a general move of the scattered groups of directors toward the committee room. The clock overhead began to strike. The last stroke had not quite died away when the big swinging doors from the street were thrown open and there entered a tall, thin man, gray headed and with a slight stoop, but keen eyed and alert. He was carefully dressed in a well fitting frock coat, white waistcoat, black tie and silk hat.

It was John Burkett Ryder, the Colossus.

CHAPTER II.

AT fifty-six John Burkett Ryder was surprisingly well preserved. With the exception of the slight stoop already noted and the rapidly thinning snow white hair, his step was as light and elastic and his brain as vigorous and alert as in a man of forty. Of old English stock, his physical makeup presented all those strongly marked characteristics of our race which sprang from Anglo-Saxon ancestry, but modified by nearly 300 years of different climate and customs has gradually produced the distinct and true American type, as easily recognizable among the family of nations as any other of the earth's children.

Tall and distinguished looking, Ryder would have attracted attention anywhere. Men who have accomplished much in life usually bear plainly upon their persons the indefinable stamp of achievement, whether of good or evil, which renders them conspicuous among their fellows. We turn after a man in the street and ask, Who is he? And nine times out of ten the object of our curiosity is a man who has made his mark—a successful soldier, a famous writer, a celebrated author, a dis-

THE COURIER advocates the renomination of Fred M. Warner because we believe that the time has come when the wishes of the people should be respected by their legislators and not be defied, and when a public servant does all within his power to have enacted into laws, the people's demands, that servant should be continued until his work is accomplished. We support Fred M. Warner on his record as an official; for the enemies he has made; and for the promise of the future which his election would mean; because we like a good fighter in a just cause; because we want to see Michigan align herself with the states which are governed by the people and not by the bosses; because while the election of his opponents might see the accomplishment of the reforms asked for, the nomination and election of Governor Warner would mean their certain enactment.

Don't forget the primaries September 1!

THE council, in deciding that the wooden side-walks in the city, should be put in a passable condition, by the repairing of all that were in need of repair, took action which should receive the highest commendation of our citizens.

By the streets and walks of a town is it known. The fame of the streets of Charlevoix has spread over all the state and the good work still continues. Now with the walks brought up to an equal standard, we will have some public improvements of which Charlevoix can well be proud. To the council should our thanks be given.

How to Reduce Fat.

An excellent and highly effective exercise for the removal of abdominal fat is taken as follows: Lay flat on the back on the floor and place the hands at the sides. Catch the toes under something to keep the feet down and keep the knees stiff. It is well to catch the toes under the edge of the dresser, as there is no danger of this being moved by the exercise. Take a deep breath and rise slowly to a sitting position. Lower the body, slowly expelling the breath. Be careful not to overstrain the muscles while practicing these movements.

Policeman (to tenant of flat)—And you say the rug was stolen from your hall. Can you give me any particulars of it? Tenant (cheerfully)—Oh, yes. It was a fancy reversible rug—red on one side and green on the other. Policeman (impressively)—Ah—and which was the green side?—Punch.

BRYAN ON PRESIDENCY

Democratic Nominee Defines His Idea of the Office.

BELIEVES IN ONE TERM.

Must Be In Sympathy With the People—Declares Our Government Not a One Man Affair—Favors Vice President as Ex Officio Cabinet Member.

William J. Bryan, Democratic nominee for the presidency, has written an article for Collier's Weekly on "My Conception of the Presidency." It reads as follows:

"The president's power for good or for harm is often overestimated. Our government is a government of checks and balances. Power is distributed among different departments, and each official works in co-operation with others. In the making of laws, for instance, the president joins with the senate and the house. He may recommend, but he is powerless to legislate except as a majority of the senate and the house concur with him. The senate and the house are also independent of each other, each having a veto over the other, and the president has a veto over both, except that the senate and house can by a two-thirds vote override the president's veto. The influence of the president over legislation is therefore limited. He shares responsibility with a large number of the people's representatives.

"Even in the enforcement of law he is hedged about by restrictions. He acts through an attorney general, whose appointment must be approved by the senate, and offenders against the law must be prosecuted in the courts, so that here, again, the responsibility is divided. In the making of important appointments, too, he must consult the senate and is of necessity compelled to exercise care and discretion. The most important requisite in a president, as in other officials, is that his sympathy shall be with the whole people rather than with any fraction of the population. He is constantly called upon to act in the capacity of a judge, deciding between the importunities of those who seek favors and the rights and interests of the public. Unless his sympathies are right the few are sure to have an advantage over the many, for the masses have no one to present their claims. They act only at elections and must trust to their representatives to protect them from all their foes.

"The president must have a broad knowledge of public questions and the ability to discern between the true and the false. He must be able to analyze conditions and to detect the sophistries that are always employed by those who seek unfair advantages. He must possess the moral courage to stand against the influences that are brought to bear in favor of special interests. In fact, the quality of moral courage is as essential in a public official as either right sympathies or a trained mind.

"A president must have counselors, and to make wise use of counselors he must be open to convictions. The president is committed by his platform to certain policies, and the platform is binding. He is also committed to certain principles of government, and these he is in duty bound to apply in all matters that come before him. But there is a wide zone in which he must act upon his own judgment, and here he ought to have the aid of intelligent, conscientious and faithful advisers. The law provides these, to a certain extent, in giving him a cabinet, and the vice president ought to be made a member of the cabinet ex officio, in order, first, that the president may have the benefit of his wisdom and knowledge of affairs and, second, that the vice president may be better prepared to take up the work of the president in case of a vacancy in the presidential office. There ought to be cordial relations also between the president and those who occupy positions of influence in the co-ordinate branches of the government, for our government is not a one man government, but a government in which the chosen representatives of the people labor together to give expression to the will of the voters.

"But the presidency is the highest position in the world, and its occupant is an important factor in all national matters. If he is a devout believer in our theory of government, recognizes the constitutional distribution of powers, trusts thoroughly in the people and fully sympathizes with them in their aspirations and hopes, he has an opportunity to do a splendid work. He occupies a vantage ground from which he can exert a wholesome influence in favor of each forward movement.

"The responsibilities of the office are so great that the occupant ought to be relieved of every personal ambition, save the ambition to prove worthy of the confidence of his countrymen. For this reason he ought to enter the position without thought or prospect of a second term.

"While the burdens of such an office are heavy and while the labors of the office are exacting and exhausting, the field of service is large, and, measuring greatness by service, a president, by consecrating himself to the public weal, can make himself secure in the affections of his fellow citizens while he lives and cradle for himself a permanent place in his nation's history."

POTPOURRI MAKING.

How to Prepare and Select the Various Ingredients.

For a dweller in the country or the garden surrounded suburb the following suggestions for gathering and preserving the sweetness and fragrance of the spring and summer for delectation in the winter months by setting up a potpourri jar are recommended to every young girl who has access to a garden or the fields and woods.

Any one of the quaint and pretty patterns of rose jars procurable at any big shop will answer for holding the potpourri itself, which consists not only of rose leaves, but of the petals and leaves of any sweet scented plant. The putting up of the potpourri consequently extends through spring and early summer, just as the different blossoms come out. There are a few general directions which must be closely followed in making potpourri. The rose jar itself, as also the vessel in which the potpourri is mixed, must be perfectly new—must never before have been used. The salt used in the making must be toasted in the oven to insure its absolutely dryness. The blossoms and leaves must be young and tender when gathered, entirely unwilted and must be used when perfectly fresh—not after lying by or standing in water. The ingredients must be thoroughly stirred up at least once—better twice—a day, and when the potpourri is all gathered and mixed it should be exposed for two or three weeks to the heat of the August sun.

Here follow two recipes for potpourri ingredients. They are copied from an old book handed down from mother to daughter in a German baronial family and have been followed, as have also the general instructions given above, and found reliable and satisfactory even in the present generation:

First.—One pound fresh pickled orange blossoms, half a pound of roses, half a pound of mace, half a pound of lavender and four ounces of marjoram leaves, four ounces of carnations, four ounces orris, one ounce rosemary, one ounce cloves and half an ounce of bay leaves.

Second.—One pound of orange blossoms, one pound of roses, half a pound of red carnations, half a pound each of marjoram and myrtle, two ounces each of nutmeg, thyme, lavender, sage, camomile and sweet basil, fifteen or twenty bay leaves and three handfuls of jasmine. Let the mixture stand for a month, stirring twice a day, and then add ten ounces of powdered orris root, two ounces of cinnamon and two of cloves, with six drams each of yellow sandalwood and cbyper.

Both the above recipes call for half a pound of salt—absolutely dry—to draw out every bit of perfume.

How to Make Milk Safe.

Scientific investigations have proved that milk in a raw state should never be given to children. Those who cannot buy pasteurized milk should pasteurize it at home. This can be done by observing these simple directions:

First.—Bring the milk slowly to a boil, and when it reaches the boiling point bottle it instantly, cork tightly and cool it.

Second.—Never feed milk that is more than twenty-four hours old to an infant.

Third.—Keep the milk near ice and never leave a milk bottle uncorked.

Fourth.—Cleanse and scald all bottles before refilling.

Careful observance of these directions will insure against babies contracting disease from impure milk.

"I don't know as I expect to get it," said Mr. Jameson without rancor, "but it seems as if I'd ought to have full as much as that. It don't come to but $5 a year, and he's cost me a good deal more'n that most years."—Youth's Companion.

A Fighting Snake.

There is only one snake in the far east—that is, India, Burma, Siam and the Malay peninsula—that will always and at all times attack a man on sight. That is the hamadryad, justly more feared than any other animal that crawls. Fortunately for mankind, they are not common, except in limited districts. They are so feared by all that the native shikarris or hunters will go miles out of their way to avoid the locality in which they are known to exist. The hamadryad will stalk a man as a tiger stalks his prey.—Medical Journal.

Next week at the Laf-a-Lot, A. A. McDonald, the popular coon shouter and comedian, will head the bill. 3ltl

G. A. MEYER, Sec

NEARLY KILLED THEIR KEEPER.

One of the best Midway attractions at the state fair last year was the Mundy animal show, which is the second largest independent animal show in the country. The second day of the fair, while trying to separate two of his lions engaged in a fierce fight, Prince, his largest lion, turned on Mr. Mundy, sinking his fangs deep into his thigh and left arm. The fight was fierce, and, having only a small whip at his command, he was unable to cope with the enraged beast. While pinioned on the floor of the cage, with the fangs of the lion imbedded in his right hip, he was handed a chair, but the lion broke this in an instant. An iron bar was thrust at the lion, prying his jaws apart, and Mr. Mundy was liberated, removed from the cage and taken to the hospital. His recovery was very slow, and he was laid up for five months. Today he carries a useless left arm, and on his right hip is a deep pit, as large as a teacup, as a result of the attack.

Mundy has two wild animal shows on the road. Last year his small show was on the Midway. This year he has contracted with Manager Slocum for his big wild animal show, and he will be first on the Midway. Mr. Mundy will be in charge.

"Not long ago while visiting the inmates of a western prison in the course of my regular ministerial work I had an interesting talk with a Russian who was in jail on a murder charge," said a clergyman.

"It seems that this man had been in trouble in his own land previous to coming to the United States, and he knew from personal experience the difference between the penal institutions of the two countries. 'Your jails in America,' he said, 'are palaces by the side of those in Russia, and many prisoners over there, if they could only be put in American prisons, would think themselves in heaven. Here I have good, clean food three times a day, while at home my jailers kept me in a starving condition all the time. And such food! It was horrible to think a human being must eat it. Then the cells were always filthy and so small and cramped one could scarcely find room to turn around.

"'In my Russian prison I would gladly have welcomed death as a relief from suffering, and I prayed every night that my eyes might close in sleep from which I would never awake.'"—Baltimore American.

tinguished lawyer, or even a notorious crook.

There was certainly nothing in John Ryder's outward appearance to justify Lombroso's sensational description of him: "A social and physiological freak, a degenerate and a prodigy of ingratitude who, in the pursuit of money, crushes with the insensibility of a steel machine every one who stands in his way." On the contrary, Ryder, outwardly at least, was a prepossessing looking man. His head was well shaped, and he had an intellectual brow, while power was expressed in every gesture of his hands and body. Every inch of him suggested strength and resourcefulness. His face, when in good humor, frequently expanded in a pleasant smile, and he had even been known to laugh boisterously, usually at his own stories, which he rightly considered very droll, and of which he possessed a goodly stock. But in repose his face grew stern and forbidding, and when his prognathous jaw, indicative of will power and bulldog tenacity, snapped to with a click-like sound, those who heard it knew that squalls were coming.

But it was John Ryder's eyes that were regarded as the most reliable barometer of his mental condition. Wonderful eyes they were, strangely eloquent and expressive, and their most singular feature was that they possessed the uncanny power of changing color like a cat's. When their owner was at peace with the world, and had temporarily shaken off the cares of business, his eyes were of the most restful, beautiful blue, like the sky after sunrise on a spring morning, and looking into their serene depths it seemed absurd to think that this man could ever harm a fly. His face, while under the spell of this kindly mood, was so benevolent and gentle, so frank and honest that you felt there was nothing in the world—purse, honor, wife, child—that, if needs be, you would not intrust to his keeping.

When the period of truce was ended, when the plutocrat was once more absorbed in controlling the political as well as the commercial machinery of the nation, then his eyes took on a snakish, greenish hue, and one could plainly read in them the cunning, the avariciousness, the meanness, the insatiable thirst for gain that had made this man the most unscrupulous money getter of his time, but his eyes had still another color, and when this last transformation took place those dependent upon him and even his friends quaked with fear, for they were his eyes of anger. On these dreaded occasions his eyes grew black as darkest night and flashed fire as lightning rends the thundercloud. Almost ungovernable fury was indeed the weakest spot in John Ryder's armor, for in these moments of appalling wrath he was reckless of what he said or did. Friendship, self interest, prudence, all were sacrificed.

Such was the Colossus on whom all eyes were turned as he entered. Instantly the conversation stopped as by magic. The directors nudged each other and whispered. Instinctively Ryder singled out his crony, Senator Roberts, who advanced with effusive gesture.

"Hello, senator!"

"You're punctual, as usual, Mr. Ryder. I never knew you to be late."

Ryder passed on and into the directors' room, followed by Senator Roberts and the other directors, the procession being brought up by the dapper little secretary bearing the minutes.

With a nod here and there Ryder took his place in the chairman's seat and rapped for order. Then at a sign from the chair the dapper little secretary began in a monotonous voice to read the minutes of the previous meeting.

Quickly they were approved, and the chairman proceeded as rapidly as possible with the regular business routine. That disposed of, the meeting was ready for the chief business of the day. Ryder then calmly proceeded to present the facts in the case.

Some years back the road had acquired as an investment some thousands of acres of land located in the outskirts of Auburndale, on the line of their road. The land was bought cheap, and there had been some talk of laying part of it out as a public park. This promise had been made at the time in good faith, but it was no condition of the sale. If afterward, owing to the rise in the value of real estate, the road found it impossible to carry out the original idea, surely they were masters of their own property! The people of Auburndale thought differently and, goaded on by the local newspapers, had begun action in the courts to restrain the road from diverting the land from its alleged original purpose. They had succeeded in getting the injunction, but the road had fought it tooth and nail and finally carried it to the supreme court, where Judge Rossmore after reserving his opinion had finally sustained the injunction and decided against the railroad. That was the situation.

Several directors spoke, the arguments of each one being merely a reiteration of those already heard. Ryder did not listen to what was being said. Why should he? Was he not familiar with every possible phase of the game? Better than those men who merely talked, he was planning how the railroad and all his other interests could get rid of the troublesome judge, Rossmore.

He who controlled legislatures and dictated to supreme court judges had found himself powerless when each turn of the legal machinery had brought him face to face with Judge Rossmore. Suit after suit had been decided against him and the interests he represented, and each time it was Judge Rossmore who had handed down the decision. So far years these two men had fought a silent but bitter duel in which principle on the one side and attempted corruption on the other were the gage of battle. Judge Rossmore fought with the weapons which his oath and the law directed him to use, Ryder with the only weapons he understood—bribery and trickery. And each time it had been Rossmore who had emerged triumphant. Despite every maneuver Ryder's experience could suggest, notwithstanding every card that could be played to undermine his credit and reputation, Judge Rossmore stood higher in the country's confidence than when he was first appointed.

So when Ryder found he could not corrupt this honest judge with gold he decided to destroy him with calumny. No scruples embarrassed Ryder in arriving at this determination. From his point of view he was fully justified. "Business is business. He hurts my interests; therefore I remove him." So he argued, and he considered it no more wrong to wreck the happiness of this honorable man than he would to have shot a burglar in self defense. So having thus tranquillized his conscience he had gone to work in his usually thorough manner, and his success had surpassed the most sanguine expectations.

This is what he had done.

Like many of our public servants whose labors are compensated only in niggardly fashion by an inconsiderate country, Judge Rossmore was a man of but moderate means. His income as justice of the supreme court was $12,000 a year, but for a man in his position, having a certain appearance to keep up, it little more than kept the wolf from the door. He lived quietly, but comfortably, in New York with his wife and his daughter Shirley, an attractive young woman who had graduated from Vassar and had shown a marked taste for literature. The daughter's education had cost a good deal of money, and this, together with life insurance and other incidentals of keeping house in New York, had about taken all he had. Yet he had managed to save a little, and those years when he could put by a fifth of his salary the judge considered himself lucky. Secretly he was proud of his comparative poverty. At least the world could never ask him "where he got it."

Ryder was well acquainted with Judge Rossmore's private means. The two men had met at a dinner, and, although Ryder had tried to cultivate the acquaintance, he never received much encouragement. Ryder's son Jefferson, too, had met Miss Shirley Rossmore and been much attracted to her, but the father having more ambitious plans for his heir quickly discouraged all attentions in that direction. He himself, however, continued to meet the judge casually, and one evening he contrived to broach the subject of profitable investments. The judge admitted that by careful boarding and much stinting he had managed to save a few thousand dollars which he was anxious to invest in something good.

AIRSHIP FLIGHTS BOTH DAY AND NIGHT.

One of the attractions of the coming state fair at Detroit, Sept. 3rd to 11th, will be the flights of the great Strobel airship, which will not only fly about the fair grounds twice every day, but will also leave the fair grounds, fly around the city hall, eight miles distant, and return to the grounds, a trip of sixteen miles.

The two daylight trips will be made when the weather conditions are favorable, it being understood that successful flights cannot be made when high winds prevail, hence no set time can be made for the start. One flight will be made about the grounds each night, and the big ship will be followed by a searchlight.

The ship will be in charge of Jack Dallas, the most daring airship navigator in the country, and one of the only two men who have ever attempted to make night flights. Dallas made daily flights at Jacksonville, Fla., all last winter, and made for himself an enviable record, having made successful flights when it was thought almost impossible to make the start on account of high winds.

The tent in which the airship is housed is 40x80 and 30 feet high, which will give one an idea of its size. The airship starts upon its flight from its resting place in the big tent and, after flying about the grounds for a time, returns without assistance and lights in its resting place.

The airship will be on exhibition to visitors during the entire fair.

"No," said the tiresome man, "I never knew a woman who could tell a story well. Most women, as a general rule, appreciate that fact and don't try."—

"Yes," interrupted the bored one, "and most of the men appreciate it too."—Catholic Standard and Times.

Women the Chief Factor.

Many and varied are the reasons advanced to account for the temperance wave that is sweeping over the country. In the south it is explained that the white population wants prohibitory and local option laws in order to check the drinking habit, and the consequent lawlessness and criminality among the negroes. In the north, where this element does not figure to any appreciable extent, it is said that the arrogance of the liquor interests and their disposition to control politics have roused rebellion against them.

These and other causes are put forward to account for the growth of anti-saloon feeling, and each, of course, has had its part in the inception of the temperance movement; but under and back of all these, and the chief influence, is undoubtedly the antagonism of the women of the country who have suffered from the saloon the wives whose husbands have been wrecked by drink and whose sons have walked to destruction through saloon doors. Scarcely a home in the country but has been touched by this evil, directly or indirectly and the feeling toward the saloon of a woman who is its victim—it is the the women always who are the real sufferers, is that of bitter hatred and opposition. Anti-temperance people call this fanatical intolerance, and perhaps it is, but who can blame the women, or who wonders at them?

They have suffered and are weary of suffering, and their sorrows and the force and volumn of their individual protests have had their effect. Men who had been more or less indifferent were influenced by them, and became ready to make it easier for these mothers to rear their sons in ways of sobriety and honesty, ready to make greater the chances for happy homes; hence, to a large extent, the determination manifested in all directions to secure more restrictive laws.

The liquor people are looking forward to the time when the temperance wave will pass, but until women cease to mourn for their beloved who have gone down to the gutter and the grave through indulgence in drink, they at least will not willingly see it subside. The burden of their misery has been too great.

SICK PEOPLE
SHOULD INVESTIGATE

I Know the Diseases of Both Sexes Like an Open Book. I have Been Curing Them for 49 Years. In fact, My Entire Life Has Been Devoted to Curing Where Others Have Failed.

I Have Changed Hundreds Upon Hundreds of Nervous Wrecks Into Fine, Strong Men and Women. I Accept No Case I Cannot Cure.

I ESPECIALLY invite all discouraged and dissatisfied ones who have been treated without a cure to write me fully and frankly about their case. It will cost you nothing to write me, and I will gladly tell you your condition, truthfully, honestly—accepting no case that I cannot cure—holding out no false promises. I have spent my whole life in the study and cure of chronic diseases, and my study and investigation have been blessed by the discovery of many new and marvelous methods of treating disease. Forty-nine years ago I graduated from the Western Homeopathic Medical College of Cleveland, O., for two years Head Physician at the Alma Sanitarium, Alma, Mich. I have spent many long years as a specialist, treating chronic diseases of all kinds with wonderful success, and am now owner of one of the largest sanitariums in the country, giving my entire time to the treatment of Nervous Diseases of both sexes. I cure the worst forms of Epilepsy, St. Vitus Dance, Paralysis, etc.

Dr. Andrew B. Spinney
Specialist in Chronic Diseases.

My long experience in diagnosing cases and my understandings of the different diseases that I treat enable me in almost every case to prescribe by mail a perfect, thorough cure. All correspondence in plain envelopes and sacredly confidential.

I CURE NERVOUS TROUBLES—Wasting Away, Loss of Vitality in Both Sexes. Whether from excesses or overwork, I promptly and positively cure, no matter of how long standing.

I CURE BLOOD POISON—I cure Blood Poison in the first, second and third stages—driving the poison from the system, the taint from the blood; curing pimples, copper spots, sores in the mouth, tumors and ulcers.

I CURE FITS—Epilepsy, St. Vitus Dance, Paralysis, etc., by striking direct at the cause, restoring the diseased nerves to perfect health.

I CURE PILES—in 30 days to stay cured and to never return.

I CURE CONSUMPTION, the Great White Plague, in the first and second stages. Have made a special study of this disease for fifty years. Have cured hundreds given up by home Doctors. Those I cannot treat at home by seeing or by mail, I will take to my Sanitarium, where best of medical skill, nursing and private rooms are given, for Ten Dollars a week.

I GUARANTEE TO CURE, to stay cured, liquor, morphine, cocaine, nicotine or cigarette habits. Most cases treated at home.

Call and see me or write to either Sanitarium as below.

No matter what disease you are suffering from, write me fully today. I will answer at once, and my advice, which costs you nothing, may be worth hundreds of dollars—life itself—to you. If I cannot cure you I will tell you so. WRITE TODAY.

POSTER PRINTING

is a cheap way of reaching a great many people, and is used successfully by some of our best business houses. An especially good plan is to run an advertisement of a page or less—or two pages if you please—in the Courier and then, at a small additional expense, have a quantity of posters printed from this form. In this way you are sure of reaching practically all of the people you desire to influence. This is the plan of advertising that has been used successfully by the merchants of a neighboring city to build up an excellent out-of-town trade, and is wonderfully cheap when compared with the results obtained.

is particularly well equipped for doing the class of work required by this method of advertising and can, besides placing your advertisement in nearly every home in the city and on rural routes out of here, print your posters in one or more colors, giving you the maximum of attractive, trade-compelling appearance in both "ad" and bills, bringing you greater results from an equal or even less expenditure than you can get elsewhere.

Try this method of advertising your business and you will not only benefit yourself directly, but by bringing trade to Charlevoix which might go elsewhere, help build up your town—every advance of which reflects upon your business in exact proportion as you build up that business.

Vote for FRANCIS H. DODDS for Congress

A prominent Antrim County man writes the Central Lake Torch: "In studying the candidate, the qualifications we are most likely to demand are sterling honesty, ability and freedom from political obligations. In view of the qualifications above expressed, it is the candid opinion of the writer that Francis H. Dodds, of Mt. Pleasant possesses them in so marked a degree as to make him the logical candidate for Republican party for representative in this district. He has the respect and confidence of the the people of his home county, and throughout the district wherever he is known. One of the most serious charges against him is that he is too honest to make a successful politician. Mr. Dodds possesses a large experience of men and measures; he is of the proper age and temperment; he is entirely independent of any influence that would in any way lead him to forget that, in the office of representative he would be the servant of the people. That he is honest, capable and unbiased seem to be incontrovertable facts."—Adv

Ironton Grange No. 707.

Ironton Grange No. 707 was called to order by the worthy master July 7. Two new members were initiated in the first and second degrees.

For the good of the order the motion was made that they have refreshments at the next meeting, which was held July 21, with twenty-one members present and one visitor from Rock Elm grange.

The degree team initiated the two new members in the third and fourth degrees after which refreshments of ice-cream and cake were served.

It was quite a surprise to the grange to have the ice cream, which Mrs. Lyngklip, Mrs. Nasson and Mrs. Knudsen made and brought instead of cake, but there was plenty of cake. Mrs. Knudsen also brought some cherries, which tasted pretty good.

Next meeting will be held August 4th.

Maple Grove Grange No. 1255.

Maple Grove Grange No. 1255 met in regular session July 21 and was opened in regular form by Worthy Master Wooden.

One candidate was initiated in the third and fourth degrees.

A degree team was organized with Brother Will Smith as captain.

Grange decided to have a picnic August 20 and a committee on arrangements was appointed consisting of Brothers Tillotson, Smith Bartholomew and Stroul. The committee met and appointed subcommittees. Further particulars next week.

A program was carried out consisting comic readings.

Number of members present 21, visitors 1. All members are requested to be present at next meeting August 4.

How to Cure an Oily Skin.

If your skin is inclined to be greasy you must take some care about your diet. Such things as rich soups, pastry and hot, highly seasoned dishes must be really left alone. Instead of using soap wash your face with oatmeal. Just take a little oatmeal in the palm of your hand, make it quite damp, and then rub it over your face as you would do soap. This oatmeal must be well rinsed off afterward, and when the face is quite dry bathe it with the following lotion: Sulphate of zinc, thirty grains; eau de cologne, one ounce; rosewater, two ounces. Use this twice a day. Stewed fruit of all kinds are good for you, and last thing at night, also every morning, you should make it a practice to eat an apple.

How to Wash an Auto.

In washing an automobile use plenty of water. Two sponges should be used and two chamois skins, one set being used for the body and the other set for the chassis and running gear, since the chassis and running gear will always be more or less oily, and there is no excuse for getting oil on the body. When a car comes in at night covered with mud, under no circumstances should this be allowed to remain on overnight and harden. The car should be immediately run on the washstand and the mud softened by showering the car with cold water. Do not attempt to rub the mud off, but allow it to be taken off gradually by the water.

How to Remove Peach Stains.

This is a remedy for obstinate peach stains on linen, says a writer in Good Housekeeping. Place a tablespoonful of sulphur on a plate, add a few drops of pure alcohol and ignite. Over this place a tin funnel. Wet the stain and hold over the small opening in the funnel. Allow the sulphur fumes to come in contact with every particle of the stain. The action is a quick chemical bleaching, which is especially for any stain on white goods. Be sure to rinse the material immediately and thoroughly in weak ammonia water, then launder as usual.

How to Preserve Finger Nails.

Before working in the garden, polishing the stove or doing other rough work rub your finger nails over a piece of soap. This will prevent the earth from getting in under the nails, and when you wash your hands the soap will come out easily. This is recommended to people who find it hard to do garden work with gloves on their hands.

On motion of Mr. Kane the report of Director was adopted and placed on file.

Moved by Mr. Chapel that the services of teacher of music and drawing be dispensed with. Motion lost.

Moved by Mr. Fitch that it is the sense of this meeting that the promotion from the Eighth grade to the High school after the December vacation, be discontinued. Carried.

A. L. Coulter offered the following resolution: "Be it resolved, by the annual school meeting of School District No. 1, Charlevoix Township, that it is the sense of this meeting that the system now in vogue in the public schools of said district of marking down the standing of students as earned by recitations and examinations on account of deportment of such student, is wrong in principle and should be discontinued." Adopted.

Moved by R. W. Kane that a tax of six and one-fourth mills on the assessed property of School District No. One of the Township and City of Charlevoix to defray the general expenses of said district and for the accounts thereof, including the payment of any bonded indebtedness of said district which may be paid during the current year. Carried.

On motion the meeting proceeded to the election of a trustee to succeed A. Buttars, whose term expires. R. W. Kane, P. D. Campbell and George Durrance were appointed tellers.

The names of Mr. Buttars, R. B. Armstrong and John Burns were proposed:

Result of first ballot: No choice.

Result of second ballot: No choice.

Result of third ballot: R. B. Armstrong 44; A. Buttars 23; Burns 3.

Dr. R. B. Armstrong was declared duly elected.

For second trustee to succeed Trustee W. H. Miller, the names of W. H. Miller, H. L. Iddings, A. Buttars and S. A. Darling were proposed. Trustee W. H. Miller positively declined re-election.

Result of first ballot: No choice.

Result of second ballot: No choice.

Result of third ballot: H. L. Iddings 37; A. Buttars 33.

H. L. Iddings was declared duly elected.

Dr. G. W. Crouter offered his resignation as trustee. On motion by Mr. Kane, Dr. Crouter's resignation was not accepted.

Mr. Kane offered the following resolution: "Resolved, that the electors of School District No. 1, Township of Charlevoix, in their annual meeting assembled, hereby express their confidence in the School Board and their appreciation of the services of said board and of every member thereof and particularly their appreciation of the long, faithful and valuable services rendered by Honorable A. Buttars who now retires after a term of 15 years continual service thereon." Carried.

Adjourned.

VOL. 25. NUMBER 32 — CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN, WEDNESDAY, AUGUST 5, 1908 — PRICE $1.50 PER YEAR

ANNUAL MEETING HELD MONDAY

Of Superintendents of Poor and Committee of Supervisors

A VALUABLE PIECE OF PROPERTY

Is Owned by the County—In Competent Hands

Mr. Momberger and Wife are Especially Fitted For the Task—A Dinner Which Will be Remembered

Monday occurred the annual meeting of the committee of the board of supervisors and the superintendents of the poor, to look over the county farm and decide on what was needed for the next year.

Besides the superintendents, J.W. Rogers of East Jordan, G. A. Meyer of Boyne Falls, and Fred Smith of Hayes, and the committee, composed of Supervisors Gratf of South Arm, McDonald of Eveline and Robbins of Boyne Valley; Chairman Bailey of the board, ex-Supervisor Urquhart of Boyne City, and Editors Baxter of the Boyne Citizen and Du Bois of the COURIER were present.

The Charlevoix county farm is located a few miles from East Jordan, the house, a modern brick structure, being well planned for its purposes, occupying a beautiful situation overlooking Pine lake. All the outbuildings, with the exception of the barn, which is badly in need of repair, are in keeping with the house.

The farm is in a high state of cultivation, the crops looking the best of any we have seen in the county, a tribute to the ability of the overseer, John Momberger, who with his wife, seems to be the right people for the place. The inmates, who at the present time are eleven in number, all uniting in praise of both Mr. and Mrs. Momberger, who, while firm in maintaining discipline, are guided by the rule of kindness to their charges. Absolute cleanliness is at all times demanded, and the house and premises, as well as the charges are in that condition which marks the up-to-date husbandman.

The forenoon was spent in examining the building and visiting until noon, when, notwithstanding the unexpected guests who were present, Mrs. Momberger set before us a dinner which went right home. With the exception of chicken, nothing was added to the bill that is not served every day, both to the family and inmates, but it was all cooked and served by an expert cook, Mrs. Momberger excelling in that department as Mr. Momberger does as a farmer.

We all kept busy at meal time and as a general thing behaved well, although the terrible failing which Urquhart has for chicken and Baxter for pie, could not be restrained, and in fact all did the dinner justice.

After dinner the farm was examined, all leaving at night satisfied that Charlevoix county had a valuable piece of property and that both the superintendents and Mr. and Mrs. Momberger are the proper persons for the place. Charlevoix county is to be congratulated on planning for the future and securing so good a place for its unfortunates.

SUMMER ASSEMBLY

Of Northern Michigan Baptists Will be Held at Cadillac

Next Week Rev. F. H. Bayles Active in Preparing Program.

Northern Michigan Baptists will hold their sixth annual meeting at the assembly grounds on Lake Mitchell, near Cadillac, Mich., during the week of August 9 to 16.

The program will include speeches by some of the most prominent Baptist clergy in the state. It will be opened by Rev. Dr. T. L. Ketman, of Chicago. Bible study classes will be conducted during the meeting by Rev. S. J. Baker. A beach meeting will be held each evening at 6:30. Evangelism day, young people's day, Sunday school day, and coronation day will each be given special attention in their turn.

Prof. Mark Bailey, of Kalamazoo college, U. V. Silloway, of Milwaukee, and Dr. Charles Cook, of Bloomfield, New Jersey, are on the program for addresses.

Rev. R. C. Fenner, of Cadillac, manager of the assembly, says that there is every indication of a large attendance and a fine assembly. Rev. Chadwick, of the Baptist church in Petoskey, will attend, and at the evening meeting of August 11 will read the report of the national convention, held at Oklahoma City, May 21, in which convention he was a delegate from the Grand Traverse district. Rev. F. H. Bayles, pastor of the Baptist church had the program in charge and is deeply interested in the work. He will attend during the entire meeting.

On Friday night the ladies and children are especially urged to attend the Laf-a-Lot Theater. A dainty souvenir will be given each lady and the film for this night is "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves," especially adapted for children, but of interest to all. This film will be lectured by Prof. McDonald.—3211

The 3—Phelps—3 will be seen at the Laf-a-Lot Theater Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights. They do a rural comedy act including songs, dances and jokes. It promises to be a treat. 3211

The California Cars to be here August 11, 15, 17, 18 are well recommended to us and all say there is more to see for 15 cents than at many higher priced shows.

SUBSCRIPTION ACCOUNTS MUST BE SETTLED

We have been very lenient in enforcing collection of our subscription accounts, but as the time draws near when we must show the postoffice department a clean list, we are determined to have some kind of a settlement. To all who have returned us some answer to our statements we are willing to extend time, if desired, but we must have our pay from those who disregard all request to come in and make arrangements for settlement.

We have placed a large number of accounts in the hands of collectors, and if you wish to avoid annoyance, come in and make a settlement with us immediately.

We don't want to lose you, and we don't believe you want to lose the Courier.

DROWNED AT WALLOON LAKE

Three People Lost Lives There During the Past Week.

While fishing off the dock at Walloon Lake Friday Mrs. Ralph Harris and five year old daughter, family of a prominent real estate dealer of Kansas City, Missouri, were drowned. It is supposed that the mother on seeing the child fall into the water jumped in after her not thinking the water was deep enough to drown her.

Sunday the second drowning occurred when Miss Catherine Giest, daughter of a wealthy Pittsburg man, was seized with an epileptic fit and sank before assistance could reach her.

Dodds in Town Last Week.

Hon. Francis H. Dodds was in the city Friday, leaving for Boyne City Saturday morning. While Mr. Dodds expresses himself as confident of the congressional nomination, he concedes Mr. Covell more votes in the southern counties than at his former visit. Mr. Covell has been making enormous gains in the south recently, and from now on will make an aggressive campaign in the northern counties and if they stand by he has the nomination without any question. Don't neglect the primaries, September 1.

BOYNE CITY SHUT OUT

In a Hotly Contested Ball Game Last Saturday.

Charlevoix Management Have Got a Team Which Delivers the Goods.

Saturday the Charlevoix ball team played their first game with a team of equal standing, meeting the well advertised Boyne City team, and in a game which was marked throughout by perfect playing on the part of Charlevoix and nearly equal work on the part of the visitors, shutt them out by a score of 3 to 0.

Another good feature of the game was the umpiring by Price of Bay City, who gave entire satisfaction to both teams.

Sunday the return game was played at Boyne City, Charlevoix being defeated in another good game by a score of 7 to 2.

Messrs. Adams and Meech, the new managers, have now demonstrated that they have a team that is ready and willing to meet all comers and give them a run for honors, and it is up to the citizens of Charlevoix to show by their patronage, that they appreciate good ball. Here is the score of Saturday's game:

	1	2	3	4	5	6	7	8	9	R	O	E

Struck out by Hackbert, 8; by Clinton, 1; bases on balls off Hackbert, 3; off Clinton 1; batteries, Hackbert and Custnier, Clinton and Graham; umpire, Price.

E. C. Hotaling, the clever boy trumpeter, is giving a very pleasing demonstration of his knowledge of varied instruments at the Laf-a-Lot Theater. 3211

Many of the souvenirs given away on the California Cars are worth more than they charge for admission.

See E. A. Reed for red raspberries to put up for winter at going prices. He has some fine ones. 1311f

MIDSUMMER JUBILEE

Is Being Held at Baptist Church This Week.

The annual midsummer jubilee of the Baptist church began last night with a good attendance and will continue throughout the week.

Sunday Rev. T. K. Tyson of Oklahoma will be present. Who Mr. Tyson is the following sketch shows:

"One of the most interesting characters connected with the American Baptist home mission society is Rev. Thornton K. Tyson of Oklahoma, widely known in his section as "Father" or "Elder" Tyson. He is a kind of missionary bishop, who has the whole great territory for his field. He is a typical pioneer missionary. He can adapt himself to any kind of condition, sleep on any kind of a bed, or on no bed, eat any kind of food and has had to eat some strange varieties, travel all day and preach at night, and, in spite of all these varied experiences, at the age of 91 is a hale, hearty, humorous, genuine man.

Everybody likes him because they cannot help it. He knows what to do in emergencies and is never caught off his guard. If a drunken cowboy says he is going to shoot that —— preacher, he smiles innocently at him, as though it were the best kind of a joke, and the cowboy, who sees that the man is absolutely fearless, does not shoot and asks him to take a drink, and when he says he does not drink the cowboy asks him what he does do. He says he preaches wherever he can get an audience and thinks he sees a mighty good one in front of him. The cowboy likes the courage of it and says maybe he will drop around and listen. As a result of this, in more than one experience of which this is a type, the cowboy does drop around and brings a lot of his friends with him, and Missionary Tyson never gets an audience that he likes better and knows how to handle more perfectly. They may not become converted, but they go away with a new respect for a gospel preacher, who tells them what he thinks straight from the shoulder, and gives them a new idea of religion.

ACCIDENT AT PETOSKEY

Air Brakes Failed to Work at G. R. & I. Suburban Station

Three People are Injured and Crowd Thrown Into Panic.

Three persons were injured and the big crowd always present at the Grand Rapids and Indiana suburban station thrown into a panic when the air brakes of a locomotive failed to work Monday and the engine, in backing toward the coaches, crashed heavily into the baggage car, partially wrecking it and the coach behind. The injured are:

Miss Hamilton, of Cincinnati, crushed about the chest, badly bruised and shaken.

Mrs. Street of St. Louis, Mo., nose broken and face bruised.

John Waldo, aged three, jaw crushed and face bruised.

None of the injuries is thought to be serious.

The suburban station is in the center of the city, a mecca for reporters. The trains, made up of extremely light coaches, are always well filled early in the day. The station platform is always jammed.

Crowds of resorters, largely women and children, sought cool places along the bay shore at Roaring Brook, Wequetmasing, Bay View and Harbor Springs. Pretty girls in spotless gowns fought for seats. Young men in white flannels jammed the car platforms.

The engine backed down and crashed into the two cars. A panic started. Women and children were thrown under the seats. Those who were thrown into the aisles scrambled to get out of the coach, through windows, out of the door, fighting desperately and walking on those who were thrown prostrate. The crowd on the platform pressed around the scene. Women screamed and men shouted.

The Cushman House, directly across the road, was deserted and the guests raced toward the station.

The injured were taken to hotels and cared for. No blame is attached to the crew as the brakes were plainly out of order.

ANNUAL NAVAL MANEUVERS

Off South Manitou Island the Week of August 11.

Naval Militia of Four States Will Participate—The Wolverine the Flagship.

The annual naval maneuvers of the naval militia of the states bordering on the great lakes will take place off South Manitou Island the week beginning August 11.

A number of the local launch owners will in all probability make the trip and see the gathering of the sailors and ships of the lake.

The naval militia of four states, Minnesota, Ohio, Michigan and Illinois will participate.

The Minnesota reserves will be on the Gopher, Michigan on the Don Juan De Austria, Illinois on the Dorothea, and Ohio on the Hawk.

The Wolverine, commanded by Commander William White, will be the flagship of squadron.

Commander Culver, U. S. N., who is in charge of naval militia matters in the navy department, and Naval Constructor Nutting will be present to inspect the boats that are in use by the various state reserves.

Assistant Secretary Newberry, of the navy department issued orders Monday to five lieutenants in the navy to be present during maneuvers, one of whom will be assigned to each of the vessels in the squadron.

Those detailed were Lients. Francis S. Whitten and J. R. Combs, of the Idaho; Lients. D. C. Hunraham and R. E. Pope, of North Carolina, and Lieut. George J. Meyers, of Birmingham.

SEPTEMBER 29 IS THE DATE NAMED

For Republican State Convention at Detroit.

COUNTY CONVENTION SEPTEMBER 8

At Which Time Candidates for County Officers Will be Named.

Probably Will be the Last Nominating Convention Which Will Ever be Held in This County.

Through all the deliberations of the Republican state central committee, which met at Grand Rapids last week, there was a note of sadness because of the death of Edmund M. Barnard, the well-loved Fifth district member.

Resolutions were offered by Benjamin S. Hanchett, who takes Mr. Barnard's place and were passed unanimously. The spoken words of regret at his passing were many. At a small dinner given for the committee by Mr. Hanchett, Senator William Alden Smith put this feeling of regret into language that was most touching and expressive.

The state convention will be held in Detroit on September 29.

It will nominate the state ticket below governor and lieutenant governor, and, if these are not named by a 40 per cent. plurality in the primaries, will nominate them, too.

The county conventions at which delegates to the state conventions will be named will be held on September 8. It is the first time in the history of the state that the dates for county conventions have been set by the state central committee. September 29 is almost the earliest possible date for the convention. September 26 is the earliest date possible, but that comes on Saturday. The following Tuesday was chosen.

It will mean a short campaign, only about 35 days, though the nominee for governor, if chosen in the primary will have a longer lighting period. However, as most of the candidates have been lighting for some time it will be plenty of time, doubtless.

After setting the date for the convention the following were chosen as its temporary officers:

Chairman—James O. Murfin, Detroit.

Secretary—Will A. Waite, Detroit.

Sergeant-at-Arms—James F. McGregor, Detroit.

Paul F. Bagley of Detroit was not a candidate for treasurer of the committee again, and Charles Moore of the same city was named.

Dennis E. Alward of Clare, for many years secretary of the committee, was named for the place again, without opposition.

Saginaw would have liked to get the next meeting of the state convention, and W. S. Linton of that city told the committee how well prepared Saginaw was to entertain the Republicans, but there was a tacit understanding in the spring that Detroit should have the fall convention, and when Mr. Linton was made aware of this he moved that the meeting go to Detroit.

At the time of holding the county convention in this county candidates for county officers will also be named, and the raucuses should be largely attended. This will in all probability be the last county nominating convention which will ever be held in this county as the signs all indicate that before two years more the primary system will be state wide.

The Democratic state convention has been called to meet October 1st.

TEACHERS' EXAMINATION

The regular examination will be held in the high school building in the city of Charlevoix on Thursday, Friday and Saturday, August 13, 14, 15, beginning at 8:30 a. m., standard time.

The examination in reading will be based on "Comus"—Milton.

Certificates of all grades will be issued from this examination. Applicants wishing their papers sent to other counties will write with pen, others may write with pencil.

CORRESPONDENCE

FROM CENTRAL LAKE.

Archie Cameron has been occupied with business at Traverse City this week.

Farmers are complaining of too much dry weather. A short time ago it was too wet.

George Austin took the Central Lake choir to Ellsworth to sing Sunday, during the quarterly meeting service.

Bert Morrison, superintendent of Rice Seed Co's rogners, has called his men in as the dry weather hindered further work.

Mrs. William Hopkins, of Toledo, and Miss Zella Cross, of Cleveland, Ohio, have been visiting at the home of George W. Cross.

R. R. Wilkinson, who has been visiting at the home of E. Boice and S.B. Anway, returned last Saturday to his home at Charlevoix.

The Methodist Sunday school picnic held at Mill Point last Thursday was a very enjoyable affair. Some of the amusements, such as boating, foot racing etc., were enjoyed by the little folks. Evelyn Homer won in the girls foot race.

The Democrat club organized here in favor of Bryan and Kern and have the following officers: President, D. W. Sage, secretary, J. W. Morse, committee on arrangements, Arch Cameron, A. F. Walbright, Mr. Palmer. Club now has thirty-two members, which is expected to increase to at least seventy-five.

The last annual quarterly meeting services were held here Sunday by Rev. Ferguson, of Traverse City. At the quarterly conference Monday morning, Rev. Helwig was ordained as local minister. Messrs. Brown and Chaddie, of Ellsworth, attended the conference as representatives from that place.

Thinks it Saved his Life.

Lester M. Nelson, of Naples, Maine, says in a recent letter: "I have used Dr. King's New Discovery many years, for coughs and colds, and I think it saved my life. I have found it a reliable remedy for throat and lung complaints, and would no more be without a bottle than I would be without food." For nearly forty years New Discovery has stood at the head of throat and lung remedies. As a preventive of pneumonia, and healer of weak lungs it has no equal. Sold under guarantee at F. G. Hines & Co. drug store. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

FROM CLARION.

J. E. Darrah left Monday for the Soo.

Misses Jane and Hazel Mills, of Greenville, visited relatives at Clarion Friday.

Mrs. O. V. Holly is visiting her daughter, Mrs. Mertie Bowman, of Mackinaw City.

Little Derwin Banks, who has been suffering from an abscess, caused by tonsilitis, is much better.

Mrs. Clara Kerns, who has been visiting her daughter, Mrs. Ross, returned home to Alden on Monday.

Miss Mae Lord returned Friday from Boyne Falls, where she has been visiting her brother, Grant Nickerson.

Miss Carrie Johnson, who was compelled to return home because of a severe cold, has returned to her work at Dr. King's, Walloon Lake.

Two sad accidents have occurred at Walloon Lake the past week, the first being the drowning off the railroad dock on Friday of Mrs. Ralph Harris and little daughter, of Kansas City. They were fishing off the dock, and it is supposed the little one fell in and the mother sprang after. No one was near or saw the accident and both were beyond help when found by Mr. Harris. On Sunday Miss Heist, at Mizer's hotel, went in bathing about one o'clock and drowned dead when emerging from the water a short time after.

EFFECT OF PRIMARY REFORM.

Brings Candidate In Close Touch With the Voter.

Not the least important result of primary reform in Michigan is the necessity under which candidates are put to get into close touch with the common people. Any system of making nominations which makes necessary such a tour of the state as that now being made by Governor Warner cannot help but bring fruit in the form of better legislation, more representative public service and a higher standard of duty. Villages and hamlets which never before entertained a state official of high or low degree are now visited by the governor, who thus has an opportunity of meeting the people, of presenting his views and of getting into close touch with the thought and sentiment of the state as a whole.

This practice not only helps the public servant to better perform his duties, but helps in a large and useful way the citizen and voter to perform his. Instead of delegating all of his powers in the selection of his candidates to a few delegates, the voter is required under the new system, if he would exercise his franchise intelligently, to familiarize himself with the candidates and the policies for which they stand, and effort which cannot help but result in an improved and more enlightened citizenship. Whereas hitherto a few leaders selected not only his candidates but his platform as well, this year the voter has a final voice in the selection of both. Evidence is not lacking that the people of Michigan fully realize this added responsibility which has been put upon them, an indication of this being the eagerness and interest shown in the campaign now in progress for the Republican nomination and the wide discussion of the principles involved.

It is because Governor Warner stands forth as the principal champion for a comprehensive and adequate primary election law that he today is practically the conceded victor in the race. It is because the people of Michigan at large naturally would intrust their cause to the hands of the man who has already valiantly fought for their interests, rather than to a set of men who have persistently opposed the popular will, that Fred M. Warner is today the people's candidate and a certain winner on September 1.

Paine's Great Display of Fireworks and War Spectacle.

One of the principal attractions at the coming state fair in Detroit, Sept. 3rd to 11th, is the great Paine's fireworks and spectacle and Manhattan Beach display of fireworks.

"Sheridan's Ride and the Battle of Cedar Creek" is the most stupendous, thrilling and realistic war spectacle ever presented by the great fireworks king, Henry J. Paiu. The characters represented are: General Sherman and General Wright, U. S. A.; General Lee and General Early of the Confederate army, staff officers, signal corps, civilians, etc. The synopsis and incidents are: Camp Fire—Negro melodies and special divertisements. Discovery of spy; papers found. Signals from the mountains. Distant firing. Signaling. Confederates open fire on buildings. United States troops move forward. Papers found. Despatch of messenger. Troops retreating. Artillery in distress. Distant movements. All is life and animation. "Sheridan is coming!" Sheridan and staff dash on; the rout is turned into victory. Final tableau.

The history of this great battle is well known to many of our readers, and no doubt many will witness its repetition in fireworks at the coming state fair.

In speaking of this great spectacle as produced at Manhattan Beach, the New York World says:

"Pain's great war spectacle, 'Sheridan's Ride,' depicting in a thrilling and truly realistic manner the 'Battle of Cedar Creek,' between the Union and Confederate armies, opened last night to 25,000 delighted spectators in a blaze of glory and gunpowder. With the early dawn comes the Gen. Early Confederate troops. They sweep down from the mountain sides, and crush the unsuspecting Federals as they sleep. Then follow the most terrific, realistic scenes of the demoralization in war. The terror stricken soldiers are rushing in the rear with but few men among them to try and stem the tide. All is retreat. Just when the destruction seems complete, Gen. Phil Sheridan dashes among the fleeing soldiers—having madly dashed to his stricken army from Winchester, twenty miles away. 'Come on boys, we're going back.' Wild cheers greeted this command. Before nightfall the battle had been fought and won by Sheridan's boys in blue."

Every performance of Pain's spectacle of "Sheridan's Ride" will be followed by a gigantic $1,000 program of Pain's Manhattan Beach fireworks.

The races on the state fair grounds will be the fastest in the history of the association. $5,000 have been expended entirely rebuilding and resurfacing the track, and it is today considered one of the fastest and best tracks in the United States, and with $12,000 hung up for purses and the entries which have already been received, it is apparent that the best races ever held in the state of Michigan will be seen on the state fair grounds during the next state fair.

Arrangements are being made with the International Stock Food company of Minneapolis, Minn., to buy Dan Patch pace one mile against his own time, making an earnest endeavor to break his record, which is the fastest in the world today, 1:55¼, and it is thought that on the new fast track at the state fair grounds it will be possible for him do so. Mr. Savage says that Dan is in splendid first class condition, and he believes he will go faster this year than ever before.

Quick as the keen eyed vulture swoops down on its prey the wily financier seized the opportunity thus presented. And he took so much trouble in answering the judge's inexperienced questions and generally made himself so agreeable that the judge found himself regretting that he and Ryder had by force of circumstances been opposed to each other in public life so long. Ryder strongly recommended the purchase of Alaskan Mining stock, a new and booming enterprise which had lately become very active in the market. Ryder said he had reasons to believe that the stock would soon advance, and now there was an opportunity to get it cheap.

A few days after he had made the investment the judge was surprised to receive certificates of stock for double the amount he had paid for. At the same time he received a letter from the secretary of the company explaining that the additional stock was pool stock and not to be marketed at the present time. It was in the nature of a bonus to which he was entitled as one of the early shareholders. The letter was full of verbiage and technical details of which the judge understood nothing, but he thought it very liberal of the company and, putting the stock away in his safe, soon forgot all about it. Had he been a business man he would have scented peril. He would have realized that he had now in his possession $50,000 worth of stock for which he had not paid a cent and furthermore had deposited it when a reorganization came.

But the judge was sincerely grateful for Ryder's apparently disinterested advice and wrote two letters to him, one in which he thanked him for the trouble he had taken and another in which he asked him if he was sure the company was financially sound, as the investment he contemplated making represented all his savings. He added in the second letter that he had received stock for double the amount of his investment and that, being a perfect child in business transactions, he had been unable to account for the extra $50,000 worth until the secretary of the company had written him assuring him that everything was in order. These letters Ryder kept.

From that time on the Alaskan Mining company underwent mysterious changes. New capitalists gained control and the name was altered to the Great Northwestern Mining company. Then it became involved in litigation, and one suit, the outcome of which meant millions to the company, was carried to the supreme court, where Judge Rossmore was sitting. The judge had by this time forgotten all about the company in which he owned stock. He did not even recall its name. He only knew vaguely that it was a mine and that it was situated in Alaska. Could he dream that the Great Northwestern Mining company and the company to which he had intrusted his few thousands were one and the same? In deciding on the merits of the case presented to him right seemed to him to be plainly with the Northwestern, and he rendered a decision to that effect. It was an important decision, involving a large sum, and for a day or two it was talked about. But as it was the opinion of the most learned and honest judge on the bench no one dreamed of questioning it.

But very soon ugly paragraphs began to appear in the newspapers. One paper asked if it were true that Judge Rossmore owned stock in the Great Northwestern Mining company which had recently benefited so signally by his decision. Interviewed by a reporter, Judge Rossmore indignantly denied being interested in any way in the company. Thereupon the same paper returned to the attack, stating that the judge must surely be mistaken, as the records showed a sale of stock to him at the time the company was known as the Alaskan Mining company. When he read this the judge was overwhelmed. It was true then! They had not slandered him. It was he who had lied, but how innocently—how innocently!

His daughter Shirley, who was his greatest friend and comfort, was then in Europe. She had gone to the continent to rest after working for months on a novel which she had just published. His wife, entirely without experience in business matters and somewhat of an invalid, was helpless to advise him. But to his old and tried friend, ex-Judge Stott, Judge Rossmore explained the facts as they were. Stott shook his head. "It's a conspiracy!" he cried. "And John B. Ryder is behind it." Rossmore refused to believe that any man could so deliberately try to encompass another's destruction, but when more newspaper stories came out he began to realize that Stott was right and that his enemies had indeed dealt him a deadly blow. One newspaper baldly stated that Judge Rossmore was down on the mining company's books for $50,000 more stock than he had paid for, and it went on to ask if this were payment for the favorable decision just rendered. Rossmore, helpless, childlike as he was in business matters, now fully realized the seriousness of his position. "My God! My God!" he cried as he bowed his head down on his desk. And for a whole day he remained closeted in his library, no one venturing near him.

As John Ryder sat there at the head of the directors' table he reviewed all this in his mind. His own part in the work was now done, and well done, and he had come to this meeting today to tell them of his triumph. Cries of "The chair! The chair!" arose on every side. Senator Roberts leaned over to Ryder and whispered something in his ear.

With an acquiescent gesture John Ryder tapped the table with his gavel and rose to address his fellow directors. Instantly the room was silent again as the tomb. One might have heard a pin drop, so intense was the attention. All eyes were fixed on the chairman. The air itself seemed charged with electricity that needed but a spark to set it ablaze.

Speaking deliberately and dispassionately, the master dissembler began.

They had all listened carefully, he said, to what had been stated by previous speakers. The situation no doubt, was very critical, but they had weathered worse storms, and he had every reason to hope they would outlive this storm. It was true that public opinion was greatly incensed against the railroads and, indeed, against all organized capital and was seeking to injure them through the courts. For a time this agitation would hurt business and lessen the dividends, for it meant not only smaller annual earnings, but that a lot of money must be spent in Washington.

The eyes of the listeners, who were hanging on every word, involuntarily turned in the direction of Senator Roberts, but the latter, at that moment busily engaged in rummaging among a lot of papers, seemed to have missed this significant allusion to the road's expenses in the District of Columbia. Ryder continued:

In his experience such waves of reform were periodical and soon wear themselves out, when things go on just as they did before. Much of the agitation doubtless was a strike for graft. They would have to go down in their pockets, he supposed, and then these yellow newspapers and these yellow magazines that were barking at their heels would let them go. But in regard to the particular case now at issue—this Auburndale decision—there had been no way of preventing it. Influence had been used, but to no effect. The thing to do now was to prevent any such disasters in future by removing the author of them.

The directors bent eagerly forward. Had Ryder really got some plan up his sleeve, after all? The faces around the table looked brighter, and the directors cleared their throats and settled themselves down in their chairs as audiences do in the theater when the drama is reaching its climax.

The board, continued Ryder with icy calmness, had perhaps heard and also seen in the newspapers the stories regarding Judge Rossmore and his alleged connection with the Great Northwestern company. Perhaps they had not believed these stories. It was only natural. He had not believed them himself. But he had taken the trouble to inquire into the matter very carefully, and he regretted to say that the stories were true. In fact, they were no longer denied by Judge Rossmore himself.

The directors looked at each other in amazement. Gasps of astonishment, incredulity, satisfaction, were heard all over the room. The rumors were true, then? Was it possible? Incredible!

Investigation, Ryder went on, had shown that Judge Rossmore was not only interested in the company in whose favor as judge of the supreme court he had rendered an important decision; but, what was worse, he had accepted from that company a valuable gift—that is, $50,000 worth of stock—for which he had given absolutely nothing in return unless, as some claimed, the weight of his influence on the bench. These facts were very ugly and so unanswerable that Judge Rossmore did not attempt to answer them, and the important news which he, the chairman, had to announce to his fellow directors that afternoon was that Judge Rossmore's conduct would be made the subject of an inquiry by congress.

Ryder sat down, and pandemonium broke loose, the delighted directors tumbling over each other to their eagerness to shake hands with the man who had saved them. Ryder had given no hint that he had been a factor in the working up of this case against their common enemy, but the directors knew well that he and he alone had been the master mind which had brought about the happy result.

CHAPTER III.

As the supreme reward of virtue the good American is promised a visit to Paris when he dies. Those, however, of our sagacious fellow countrymen who can afford to make the trip usually manage to see Lutetia before crossing the river Styx. Most Americans like Paris—some like it so well that they have made it their permanent home—although it must be added that in their admiration they rarely include the Frenchman. For that matter, we are not as a nation particularly fond of any foreigner, largely because we do not understand him, while the foreigner for his part is quite willing to return the compliment. He gives the Yankee credit for commercial smartness, which has built up America's great material prosperity, but he has the utmost contempt for our acquaintance with art and no profound respect for us as scientists.

The logic of this position, set forth in Le Soir in an article on the New World, appealed strongly to Jefferson Ryder as he sat in front of the Cafe de la Paix in Paris, sipping a sugared vermouth. It was 5 o'clock, the magic hour of the apéritif, when the glutton taxes his wits to deceive his stomach and work up an appetite for renewed gorging. The little tables were all occupied with the usual before dinner crowd.

Fascinated by the gay scene around him, Jefferson laid the newspaper aside. To the young American, fresh from prosaic money mad New York, the City of Pleasure presented indeed a novel and beautiful spectacle. How different, he mused, from his own city with one fashionable thoroughfare—Fifth avenue—monotonously lined for miles with hideous brownstone residences and showing little real animation except during the Saturday afternoon parade when the activities of the smart set, male and female, centered chiefly in such exciting diversions as going to Huyler's for soda, taking tea at the Waldorf and trying to outdo each other in dress and show. New York certainly was a dull place with all its boasted cosmopolitanism.

It was true, he thought, the foreigner had indeed learned the secret of enjoying life. There was assuredly something else in the world beyond mere money getting. His father was a slave to it, but he would never be. He was resolved on that. Yet, with all his ideas of emancipation and progress, Jefferson was a thoroughly practical young man. He fully understood the value of money, and the possession of it was as sweet to him as to other men. Only he would never soil his soul in acquiring it dishonorably.

No, Jefferson was no fool. He loved money for what pleasure, intellectual or physical, it could give him, but he would never allow money to dominate his life as his father had done. His father, he knew well, was not a happy man, neither happy himself nor respected by the world. He had toiled all his life to make his vast fortune, and now he toiled to take care of it. The galley slave led a life of luxurious ease compared with John Burkett Ryder. Baited by the yellow newspapers and magazines, investigated by state committees, dogged by process servers, haunted by beggars, harassed by blackmailers, threatened by kidnapers, frustrated in his attempts to bestow charity by the cry "tainted money," certainly the lot of the world's richest man was far from being an enviable one.

That is why Jefferson had resolved to strike out for himself. He had warded off the golden yoke which his father proposed to put on his shoulders, declining the lucrative position made for him in the Empire Trading company, and he had gone so far as to refuse also the private income his father offered to settle on him. He would earn his own living. A man who has his bread buttered for him seldom accomplishes anything, he had said, and, while his father had appeared to be angry at this open opposition to his will, he was secretly pleased at his son's grit. Jefferson was thoroughly in earnest. If needs be he would forego the great fortune that awaited him—rather than be forced into questionable business methods against which his whole manhood revolted.

Jefferson Ryder felt strongly about these matters and gave them more thought than would be expected of most young men with his opportunities. In fact, he was unusually serious for his age. He was not yet thirty, but he had done a great deal of reading, and he took a keen interest in all the political and sociological questions of the hour. In personal appearance he was the type of man that both men and women like—tall and athletic looking, with smooth face and clean cut features. He had the steel blue eyes and the fighting jaw of his father, and when he smiled he displayed two even rows of very white teeth. He was popular with men, being manly, frank and genial in his relations with them, and women admired him greatly, although they were somewhat intimidated by his grave and serious manner. The truth was that he was rather diffident with women, largely owing to lack of experience with them.

He had never felt the slightest inclination for business. He had the artistic temperament strongly developed, and his personal tastes had little in common with Wall street and its feverish stock manipulating. When he

Official Call for Republican State Convention.

To the Republican Electors of the State of Michigan:

The state convention of the Republicans of Michigan is hereby called to meet at the Light Guard armory in the city of Detroit on Tuesday, the 29th day of September, 1908, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon, for the purpose of nominating candidates for state offices, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before the convention.

In accordance with the provisions of law and the action of the Republican state central committee, every county will be entitled to one delegate for each two hundred and fifty of the total vote cast therein for the Republican candidate for secretary of state at the last election and one additional delegate for a majority of 125 votes or more.

Pursuant to law, Tuesday, the 8th day of September, 1908, is hereby designated as the day on which shall be held in each county, the county convention of the Republican party for the election of delegates to the Republican state convention herein called, for the selection of delegates to congressional, senatorial and representative district conventions in such districts as have not adopted the direct voting system, and for the transaction of other business provided for by law or which may otherwise properly come before said county convention.

In counties that have not adopted the direct voting system for the nomination of county officers, delegates to the county convention will be chosen under the caucus system.

Under the resolutions of 1878, no delegate will be entitled to a seat in the state convention who does not reside in the county he proposes to represent.

The delegates from the several counties in each congressional district are requested to meet in district caucus at 9:30 o'clock a. m. on the day of the state convention, and select officers as follows, to be presented to the state convention for confirmation:

1—One Vice-President.
2—One Assistant Secretary.
3—One member of the committee on "Credentials."
4—One member of the committee on "Permanent Organization and Order of Business."
5—One member of the committee on "Resolutions."

By order of the Republican state central committee.

GERRIT J. DIEKEMA, Chairman.
DENNIS E. ALWARD, Secretary.
Grand Rapids, July 29, 1908.

Charlevoix county is entitled to seven delegates.

W. J. PEARSON spent last week in the southern portion of the district in the interests of George G. Covell for congress, and makes a fine report for the Traverse City man.

Mr. Pearson says that the paid advertising matter inserted in some of the papers saying that the Covell Congressional clubs are not enthusiastic in Gratiot county, and especially in Alma, is a wrong statement, as he has been working with these club members for a week and their enthusiasm for Covell is boundless. He says there are 261 members in the Alma club and each member is a live wire. The most conservative men in Gratiot predict an even split of the votes, while other prominent business men say that Mr. Covell will carry that county. Among others who were out the past week going over Gratiot county in the interests of Mr. Covell were prominent attorneys who were always ready to go out to meetings, and it was no trouble to get them out to do work in other towns.

Mr. Pearson also says that Montcalm county will roll up a handsome vote for Mr. Covell and that a large majority is sure.

DR. BRADLEY is conducting a clean campaign from the platform and he is a good speaker. But he is unfortunate in his anti-third term fight in having a large number of supporters who are themselves asking the people to re-elect them after serving two or more terms in office. If these gentlemen believe it is good for the people to return them to office, why do they claim it would be bad for the state to have a governor occupy the chair three terms?

Bradley is also handicapped by his friends in another way. Many of the politicians who have climbed into the Bradley wagon are on record as opposing the governor at every turn in his fight in the interest of the people. If these men favor equal taxation and regulation of the lobby and other evils, why have they placed every possible obstruction in the paths of those who have stood with the people in their fight against the evils which have grown up in state circles during the past few years?

THEATRICAL

Alvin Joslin.

A pastoral drama of unusual merit is booked as the attraction at Charlevoix Theater Wednesday, August 12, the play is "Alvin Joslin." It tells a beautiful story of the quaint old folks of Maine. It is somewhat on the order of "Shore Acres" and "Way Down East," but contains more dramatic action however. The story of the play as it unfolds itself is one which contains much heart interest and genuine humor. The love of the young country humpkin for the village belle, and the wandering from the path of right, tempted by the handsome, polished villain from the city, form the thread of story, and gives many opportunities for fine dramatic situations and thrilling climaxes all of which the author has taken advantage of. The scenic and electrical effects are said to be magnificent. The cast is headed by Pearl Hoye, a most excellent comedienne and ably supported by a score of artists in the production—artists of unquestioned ability. The supporting cast is a select one, containing the names of well known metropolitan players. Lovers of good plays will do themselves an injustice if they fail to take advantage of seeing this celebrated attraction.

The Laf-a-Lot theater has a very strong bill this week including seven different people.

The act that is attracting wide attention is the Rural Comedy, "Uncle Josh and his two daughters, Betty and Sally, in their first visit to the city." This will be presented by the three Phelps from Higgins Corners, Skidoo county, this state, on Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights.

A. A. McDonald and W. S. Stoddard are putting on some side-splitting farces and continue through the week.

FOR WORKERS TO PONDER.

Thoughts That Deserve the Most Serious Consideration.

Is it right that poverty should keep thousands of young men from marrying because they cannot properly support a family, and is it right that hundreds of thousands are forced into crime and prostitution because of economic necessity?

Is it right that those who do little or nothing can spend months in taking "much needed rests" while you dare not stop a day for fear of losing your job?

Is it right that many good and honest people are doomed to live in poverty while the dishonest, the cunning and the undeserving often live in wealth and splendor?

Is it right that character counts for so little and that the honest and upright man is considered a failure unless he accumulates wealth?

Is it right that when you have worked so steadily and industriously that there occurs an overproduction that you should then be laid off and allowed to suffer for the necessities of life?

Is it right that you should have no security in case of sickness, old age or other disability?

Is it right that thousands of workers lose their lives and meet with horrible accidents because it would interfere with profits to provide proper safe guards?

Is it right that you either have no work at all or else must work yourself to death when you do get a job?

Is it right that more often than not you must work at callings that are not suitable for you and for which you are not adapted?

Is it right that a subject so important as Socialism, a subject that concerns your bread and butter and the very means of your existence, should receive so little thought from many of you?

No, brother, these things are not right, and if you are unable to see wherein they are wrong it is because you have not given these matters sufficient attention. Become acquainted with Socialism, the grand philosophy that will enable you to see why these conditions exist and what must be done to remedy them and establish in their stead liberty, equality and fraternity.—August Klenke.

Farmers, take a day off and bring your families to see the finest fruits and biggest fish ever, and learn yourself what irrigation will do for a country.

He Seldom.

The head mistress of a certain provincial school was one day examining a few of her select pupils in grammar. "Stand up, Juan, and make me a sentence containing the word 'seldom,'" she said, pointing to a small urchin.

Juan paused as if in thought, then, with a flush of triumph on his face, replied, "Last week father had five horses, but yesterday he seldom."—Philippines Gossip.

Over-Work Weakens Your Kidneys.

Unhealthy Kidneys Make Impure Blood.

All the blood in your body passes through your kidneys once every three minutes.

The kidneys are your blood purifiers, they filter out the waste or impurities in the blood.

If they are sick or out of order, they fail to do their work.

Pains, aches and rheumatism come from excess of uric acid in the blood, due to neglected kidney trouble.

Kidney disease causes quick or unsteady heart beats, makes one feel as though they had heart trouble because the heart is over-worked in pumping thick, kidney-poisoned blood through veins and arteries.

It used to be considered that only urinary troubles were due to the kidneys, but now medical science proves that nearly all constitutional diseases have their beginning in kidney infection.

If you are sick you can make no mistake by first doctoring your kidneys. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases and is sold on its merits by all druggists in fifty cent and one-dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also pamphlet telling you how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. Mention this paper when writing Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

Home of Swamp-Root.

Don't make any mistake but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

Neighborhood Notes

A most romatic and inviting spot it is, where fifty-five boys and eleven leaders are now in camp on Torch Lake. There is enough of program carried out with military precision to give a business aspect to the whole affair, while plenty of time is left for the sports that boys love best. Nature study carried on in the woods under competent instruction, bible study, athletics, boating, fishing, swimming, baseball, etc., follow each other in regular order, so that a dull or listless hour seems to be out of the question. The boys say it is great.

The new cement block building served a good purpose during the rainy days, as most of the exercises went on indoors without interruptions, while the blazing logs in the five feet open chimney contributed to cheerful evenings. A new bunch of boys will arrive next week.—Central Lake Torch.

The hotel at Interlochen owned by "Doc" Tillapaugh had a close call to being burned Sunday morning. It was about 2 o'clock in the morning when a guest who had been sitting up reading smelled smoke, and started an investigation. The odor came from a room which had been vacant for some time, and the guest hurried to the landlord. The alarm was spread and soon the whole town was out.

The only fire protection offered in the place is the bucket brigade, but they did noble service keeping the well back of the hotel in action for some time.

The fire was confined almost entirely to the one room, but the furniture, and side walls of the room were badly burned, and the only wonder is that fire did not spread to other quarters of the hotel." The damage is estimated at $125. The house and furniture are well covered with insurance.

STATE FAIR RAILROAD RATES.

The Michigan Passenger association, which governs the granting of special rates on all railroads, has decided that the rate of fare this year for the state fair at Detroit, Sept. 3rd to 11th, will be one and two-thirds one way fare. That means that if the regular railroad fare from your station to Detroit and return is $3 (seventy-five miles), the rate to the state fair this year will be going $1.50 and returning $1, or $2.50. Last year the rate was three cents per mile on most of the roads, and the railroads gave a rate of one-half fare, which for the distance mentioned above the fare would have been $2.25 for the round trip, and in order to get that rate it was necessary to buy a state fair ticket at fifty cents, which was attached to the railroad ticket. It may be seen that the rate is twenty-five cents higher this year, but the state fair coupon will be eliminated from the railroad ticket.

Admission tickets to the state fair will be placed on sale in most of the newspaper offices in the state at the rate of thirty-five cents each, or three for $1. These will go on sale early in July and will be withdrawn Aug. 29th.

This is the first time in the history of the state fair that tickets have been placed on sale out in the state at reduced rates. Orders for tickets, if received prior to Aug. 29th, will also be filled by mail on receipt of the above price by I. H. Butterfield, secretary, Detroit, Mich.

Mixed Breeding.

In mixed breeding or crossed breeding nothing is accomplished beyond the first cross. While a few good individuals may be secured, the tendency is for the progeny to be rather below than above the average. A man conducting his breeding in a haphazard way is contending with fearful odds, groping in the dark, following a will-o'-the-wisp, writes George H. Glover in a Colorado experiment station bulletin. In a hundred years he would be just where he started. After animals have been graded up to a practical purity of blood, the longer they are bred along this line the more prepotent they become and the more certain that the offspring will uniformly possess general excellence of form, quality, action and utility.

Superintendent Tyler and Superintendent Watkins of the cattle and horse departments of the Michigan State Fair have arranged for a live-stock parade, which will take place during the fair. It will be one of the best parades ever seen on a like occasion. These gentlemen are thoroughly familiar with what will please the livestock men of the state and are leaving no stone unturned to bring on something for attraction and interest.

There will be plenty of opportunity for the visitors at the fair this year to secure good meals. Ten churches in the city of Detroit have secured space and will furnish meals and lunches to state fair visitors. It goes without saying that church societies take great pride in furnishing good meals at reasonable prices, and they have assured the management of the fair that this year they will be better than ever.

Orange juice is a simple remedy for ivy poisoning. Bathe the affected part of the body. The itching and burning will cease, and in a few days the skin peels without any further spreading.

SOCIALISM AND DRINK.

How Socialists Would Deal With the Evil Were They In Power.

The liquor traffic serves the exploiters of wealth and the political bosses in two ways—it keeps a large class of very poor in a state of brutalized contentment, and it pays by means of license fees and fines part of the expense of government and so decreases the tax rate. Not until forced to would the privileged classes relinquish these advantages, and still they are so permeated with hypocrisy that they burden the lives of those who carry on the traffic with burdensome exactions, while they in their fashionable clubs and in their financial ability to buy and store for future use secure a complete and unfair exemption from the effects of legislation.

The Socialists hold, of course, that the public ownership and operation, thereby eliminating the profit, would do away with the evil of the present system. But while the present system remains we favor the application of the referendum and initiative as the only fair and just thing. The conditions under which the traffic should be carried on should not be dictated by the brewery and distilling corporations exerting their power through legislators; not by a lot of moralists, out of touch with the masses; not by the wealthy classes trying to lighten the burden of their taxes or finding it to their class interests to keep labor in a sodden contentment, but the people of each separate community. In wards and townships, among whom the saloon exists, who know its possible usefulness and its failings and who can alone remedy any evil existing, should have the power to say through home rule just what the conditions should be.

The drinking habit is recognized as a foe to the advancement of the working class the world over. Here is what a distinguished member of the German reichstag, Herr Bruhns, said in announcing his own conversion to abstinence to an audience in Silesia:

"What we need first, comrades, is the truth concerning ourselves, however unpleasant it may sound. I do not say to you that you are spotless, the elect, with natural right to the good things of earth. No; I say that each must work to make good his right to these things.

"Now, what an enemy is alcohol to these strivings! How difficult does it render our efforts! And, further, what an ally is it of the employing classes! Where do the scabs come from to break strikes here in Breslau? From the people whose only delight is drink, who have no idea of Socialism. From their ranks are drawn the levies which take organized labor in the rear. You see what an enemy alcohol is in this direction. We must do all in our power to abolish both spirits and beer. We stand surrounded by a whole world of enemies who have the power and who have no regard for us. Should we not, therefore, strike at alcohol, their ally? Just see what our comrades have accomplished in Switzerland and Austria in this direction, and even in Belgium, where the case is much worse, where thousands oppressed and broken by drink have drawn together in the fight against alcohol and become enlightened soldiers of Socialism."

The spirit of revolt is not dangerous in men who are sodden with beer. Realizing that, there must come a time when the irreconcilable opposing interests will be realized by the International Socialist party. One sees this in Russia, for example, where the revolutionary party, in order to weaken autocracy's finances and to strengthen the morale of its own following, orders a boycott of the state drink shops. One sees it in England, where castle, cathedral and brewery form a hard and fast triple alliance against all that is progressive, the brewery being by no means the least powerful of the three. One sees it in France too. The radical "bloc," in case it brings in remedial legislation for the cure of that alcoholism which, according to Dr. Triboulet in his report to the Societe des Hopitaux, threatens the French race with extinction, is more than likely to lose the political support of the tens of thousands of private distillers and the whole 200,000 drink sellers to the clerical-monarchial faction, which ever menaces the life of the republic. In America, where there is no standing army to keep the masses in order by force and no state church to narcotize them with ceremonial religion, we are likely to see more and more intimate relations between the great capitalists and the liquor interests.

Remember, remember, that conditions produce results. If there are millions in franchises, thousands will be used as bribe money to get them. If poisoned food brings a profit, poisoned food will be sold. If bawdy houses bring high rents, houses will be let for vile purposes. If life is cheaper than the dollar, life will be sacrificed to the dollar. If profits counterbalance ignorance and vice, children will go into the factory and afterward to the scrap heap. If the financial kings choose the judges, justice is raped and chained to do their bidding.

Conditions must be changed. There will be no bribery when all public utilities are publicly owned and politically operated. If the people in their collective capacity owned and operated the stockyard there would be no poisoned meat for sale. There could be no immoral use of the people's land or the people's property if the people operated their own industry; no children would work in factories; they would go to school. No impure milk would poison them, no shoddy goods would clothe us, no hovel would house us, no life-class would degrade honest labor.—G. H. Strobell.

was younger he had dreamed of a literary or art career. At one time he had even thought of going on the stage, but it was to art that he turned finally. From an early age he had shown considerable skill as a draftsman, and later a two years' course at the Academy of Design convinced him that this was his true vocation. He had begun by illustrating for the book publishers and for the magazines, meeting at first with the usual rebuffs and disappointments; but, refusing to be discouraged, he had kept on and soon the tide turned. His drawings began to be accepted. They appeared first in one magazine, then in another, until one day, to his great joy, he received an order from an important firm of publishers for six wash drawings to be used in illustrating a famous novel. This was the beginning of his real success. His illustrations were talked about almost as much as the book, and from that time on everything was easy. He was in great demand by the publishers, and very soon the young artist, who had begun his career of independence on nothing a year, so to speak, found himself in a handsomely appointed studio in Bryant park, with more orders coming in than he could possibly fill and enjoying an income of little less than $5,000 a year. The money was all the sweeter to Jefferson in that he felt he had himself earned every cent of it. This summer he was giving himself a well deserved vacation, and he had come to Europe partly to see Paris and the other art centers about which his fellow students at the academy raved, but principally—although this he did not acknowledge even to himself—to meet in Paris a young woman in whom he was more than ordinarily interested—Shirley Rossmore, daughter of Judge Rossmore of the United States supreme court, who had come abroad to recuperate after the labors on her new novel, "The American Octopus," a book which was then the talk of two hemispheres.

Jefferson had read half a dozen reviews of it in as many American papers that afternoon at the New York Herald's reading room in the Avenue de l'Opera, and he chuckled with glee as he thought how accurately this young woman had described his father. The book had been published under the pseudonym "Shirley Green," and he alone had been admitted into the secret of authorship. The critics all conceded that it was the book of the year, and that it portrayed with a pitiless pen the personality of the biggest figure in the commercial life of America. "Although," wrote one reviewer, "the leading character in the book is given another name, there can be no doubt that the author intended to give to the world a vivid pen portrait of John Burkett Ryder. She has succeeded in presenting a remarkable character study of the most remarkable man of his time."

He was particularly pleased with the reviews, not only for Miss Rossmore's sake, but also because his own vanity was gratified. Had he not collaborated on the book to the extent of acquainting the author with details of his father's life and his characteristics which no outsider could possibly have learned? There had been no disloyalty to his father in doing this. Jefferson admired his father's smartness, if he could not approve his methods. He did not consider the book an attack on his father, but rather a powerfully written pen picture of an extraordinary man.

The acquaintance of his son with the daughter of Judge Rossmore had not escaped the eagle eye of Ryder, Sr., and much to the financier's annoyance and even consternation he had ascertained that Jefferson was a frequent caller at the Rossmore home. He immediately jumped to the conclusion that this could mean only one thing, and fearing what he termed "the consequences of the insanity of immature minds," he had summoned Jefferson peremptorily to his presence. He told his son that all idea of marriage in that quarter was out of the question for two reasons: One was that Judge Rossmore was his most bitter enemy, the other was that he had hoped to see his son, his destined successor, marry a woman of whom he, Ryder, Sr., could approve. He knew of such a woman, one who would make a far more desirable mate than Miss Rossmore. He alluded, of course, to Kate Roberts, the pretty daughter of his old friend, the senator. The family interests would benefit by this alliance, which was desirable from every point of view.

Jefferson had listened respectfully until his father had finished and then grimly remarked that only one point of view had been overlooked—his own. He did not care for Miss Roberts; he did not think she really cared for him. The marriage was out of the question. Whereupon Ryder, Sr., had fumed and raged, declaring that Jefferson was opposing his will as he always did, and ending with the threat that if his son married Shirley Rossmore without his consent he would disinherit him.

Jefferson was cogitating on these incidents of the last few months when suddenly a feminine voice which he quickly recognized called out in English:

"Hello! Mr. Ryder."

He looked up and saw two ladies, one young, the other middle aged, coming at a brisk pace and [illegible] had drawn up to the curb. Jefferson jumped from his seat, upsetting his chair and startling two nervous Frenchmen in his hurry, and hastened out, hat in hand.

"Why, Miss Rossmore, what are you doing out driving?" he asked. "You know you and Mrs. Blake promised to dine with me tonight. I was coming round to the hotel in a few moments."

Mrs. Blake was a younger sister of Shirley's mother. Her husband had died a few years previously, leaving her a small income, and when she had heard of her niece's contemplated trip to Europe she had decided to come to Paris to meet her and incidentally to chaperon her. The two women were stopping at the Grand Hotel close by, while Jefferson had found accommodations at the Athenee.

Shirley explained. Her aunt wanted to go to the dressmaker's, and she herself was most anxious to go to the Luxembourg Gardens to hear the music. Would he take her? Then they could meet Mrs. Blake at the hotel at 7 o'clock and all go to dinner. Was he willing?

Mrs. Blake said she would get out here. Her dressmaker was close by, in the Rue Auber, and she would walk back to the hotel to meet them at 7 o'clock. Jefferson assisted her to alight and escorted her as far as the porte cochere of the modiste's, a couple of doors away. When he returned to the carriage, Shirley had already told the coachman where to go. He got in, and the fiacre started.

"Now," said Shirley, "tell me what you have been doing with yourself all day."

Jefferson was busily arranging the faded carriage rug about Shirley, spending more time in the task perhaps than was absolutely necessary, and she had to repeat the question.

"Doing?" he echoed, with a smile. "I've been doing two things—waiting impatiently for 7 o'clock and incidentally reading the notices of your book."

HAS SAVED THOUSANDS

Operation of Binder Twine Plant In Jackson a Big Success.

Twine Sold Cheaper In Michigan This Year Than at Any Previous Season For Fifteen Years.

Jackson, Mich.—The binder twine plant at Jackson prison, which has just completed its first year's work, has made good every promise made by Governor Warner when he recommended and induced the legislature to provide for installing the plant. It has made good in three ways: It has reduced the cost of binder twine to every farmer in the state; it will yield a profit this first season, which shows the future possibilities of the plant to take care of a goodly portion of the expense of maintaining the prison, and it furnishes an income to those prisoners employed in the plant who have families to support which will go far towards relieving misery in many homes and instill new manhood in the convicts.

Those familiar with the history of the binder twine bill when it was before the legislature will recall that it was long doubtful whether the governor would have a chance to sign the bill. The "boxers" were opposed to the bill. There were mysterious moves which retarded the passage of the measure. Nothing definite came to the surface, but there were occurances which recalled to many how corporations had in the past killed bills which the people wanted, but which the corporations did not.

A visit to the plant to which the seventy convicts employed at the machines manufacturing binder twine will cause anyone not familiar with the process of making cordage to consider it wonderful. Warden Armstrong has not only improved prison management at Jackson since his appointment, but in tackling this new thing in prison economics he has made it a success the first year. It opens the way to the use of convicts to combat other trusts. The legislature appropriated $50,000 to equip the plant and $125,000 for the revolving fund with which to buy raw material. The plant was started last April and has manufactured 1,100,000 pounds, or 550 tons, this season so far. The full capacity of the plant, if there was sufficient money in the revolving fund to buy the raw material required, is 4,000,000 pounds a year. This is about one-third the binding twine required in the state to tie up the crops each year.

How Twine Is Sold.

There was careful consideration at the starting of the plant as to what was the best manner of handling the output to give the widest distribution over the state and place the twine in the farmers' hands with the least additional cost to them beyond the price at the prison. After ascertaining how the twine was disposed of in other states, Gov. Warner and the prison board decided the twine could be best and most fairly distributed by contracts with the Grange and Gleaners, the two big farmers' organizations of the state. The Grange, however, had contracted for a supply for its members, and so the output was placed in the hands of the Gleaners for distribution, with the proviso, however, that the twine was to be sold to any farmer at the same price it was sold to members. In this way the farmers have been saved the middleman's profit, and it has worked out admirably, so far as is known everybody being supplied who has made application and with no [illegible], such as some farmers getting the full of the twine and others being refused any.

Twn Cents Less Than Trust Price.

The price of the twine this season has been $7.95 per hundred, cash, or $8.20 for payment Oct. 1. This price is two cents a pound less than the price fixed by the trust for its twine, which means much to the farmers who have used the state twine. It has forced the trust price down to every farmer in the state, for the trust has sold twine a cent cheaper this year than last. Twine has sold for a lower price this year than in fifteen years. Warden Armstrong says the raw material costs a cent less this year than last, but judging by previous operations it is fair to say that the trust and not the farmers of Michigan would have profited by this decrease in the cost had it not been for the competition of the state plant, and Governor Warner says that in thus forcing the trust to treat the people fairly he believes the plant has paid for itself.

Warner Says Lesson Is Valuable.

"We had so much trouble inducing certain legislators to allow the establishment of the plant," says the governor, "that I feel the lesson it has given the people of the state as to what can be accomplished along these lines by proper investments will open the way for easier victories for the people in the future when questions between them and the big corporations come before the legislature."

The plant finished the season the first of July. It was shut down for two weeks and started on next season's supply. The people of the state who go to Jackson should not fail to go to the prison and see the plant being operated, for it is a most interesting process to watch.

Still Hoping.

Vote for FRANCIS H. DODDS for Congress

Mr. Francis McNamara is one of the very ablest attorneys of the Isabella bar, and a man in public life who is regarded as thoroughly honorable, and a fellow practitioner in the legal profession for whom he will publicly pay such a beautiful tribute as follows here is a safe man for the people of the eleventh district to entrust their interests with at Washington. Here is what Mr. McNamara says concerning Mr. Francis H. Dodds:

"I have known Francis H. Dodds, candidate for the republican nomination for congress in this district at the primary election to be held September 1st next, for over twenty years. For that period, and particularly for the last fifteen years, I have been his neighbor and friend, and have been associated with him in the trial of important cases, either as associate or opposing counsel. My acquaintance has been an intimate one.

"The lawyer to his associates at least, cannot hide his true character, and there is no profession that demands higher ideals and more rigid honesty than the legal profession. I have yet to find Francis H. Dodds guilty of one dishonorable act. His life in this community has been an open book. In his professional practice he has ever been jealous of the rights of his clients, but he has never allowed their interests to swerve him from the path of honesty. He possesses not only the ability but also the moral courage to make an ideal congressman. He is worthy of the support of every voter in the district.

How to Clean Doors.

Doors and window frames require special attention at cleaning time. Clean the paint with warm water and a little ammonia. Take a clean soft flannel and wet as much as the arm can reach. Wash and wring the flannel and rub the paint till quite clean. Dry the surface thoroughly and polish with a soft cloth. If the paint is left damp it shows the marks of the washing and loses its polish. For very light paint wring a cloth out of hot water, dip it in whiting and rub till quite clean. Then wash it and polish with a clean wash leather.

How to Free Clogged Drainpipes.

A convenient and inexpensive way to open up a clogged drainpipe is to pour a half cup of gasoline in the sink or basin drain which is clogged and to allow it to stand for about an hour without letting the water run. The result will surprise you and save the trouble and expense of a visit from the plumber.

How to Economize In Ice.

Fifty pounds of ice every other day will last better and keep the icebox colder than twenty-five pounds a day. Besides, you save the iceman three calls a week and yourself his wet footprints; also you buy the ice tongs only one-half as often.

HIGHWAY DRAINAGE.

Tiles Are Best For Gravel or Stone Roads.

SOME POINTS ON THE WORK.

Underdrainage Below Surface With Farm Tiles a Great Protection—Side Ditches That Hold Water Make an Inferior Roadway.

The drainage, says Professor Ira O. Baker, is the very best preparation for a gravel or a stone road. Gravel or broken stone placed upon an undrained foundation is almost sure to sink gradually, whatever its thickness, whereas a thinner layer upon an underdrained roadbed will give much better service. "Roads tiled without gravel are better than roads graveled without tile."

The road should be underdrained so as to keep the water level well below the road surface. In most localities this can be accomplished reasonably well by laying a line of farm tile three or three and a half feet below the road surface along one side of the roadway. It is sometimes claimed that there should be a tile on each side of the road.

Some writers on good roads advocate the use of a line of tile under the middle of the traveled portion, and some advocate a line on each side of the wheelway. The object sought by these tiles is rapid drainage, and therefore it is urged that they should be laid near the surface. It is doubtful whether any water will reach the tile, since the road surface when wet is puddled by the traffic, which prevents the water percolating through the soil, and it is certain that in clay or loam the drainage thus obtained is of no practical value. More than one farmer has tried to drain his barnyard by laying tile near the surface, always without appreciable effect.

While a line of tile on one side of the road is usually sufficient, there is often a great difference as to the side on which it should be laid. If one side of the road is higher than the other, the tile should be on the high side to intercept the ground water that is flowing down the slope under the surface.

The tile should be laid in the bottom of the silt ditch below the frost line. Of course the tile should have a uniform grade and a sufficient fall and an adequate outlet. The size of the tile required will depend upon the length of the line and the grade of the ditch, but local experience in farm drainage is likely to be a better guide than any general statement that can be made. Farm drainage is almost certain to precede road drainage in any particular locality.

The side ditches are to receive the water from the surface of the traveled way and should carry it rapidly and entirely away from the roadside. They are useful also to intercept and carry off the water that would otherwise flow from the side hills upon the road. Ordinarily they need not be deep and if possible should have a broad, sloping side toward the traveled way to prevent accident if a vehicle should be crowded to the extreme side of the roadway. The outside bank should be flat enough to prevent caving. The proper form of ditch is easily made by the usual road-machine or road-grader. The side ditch should have a free outlet into some stream so as to carry the water entirely away from the road. No good road can be obtained with side ditches that hold the water until it evaporates.

Much alleged road work is a positive damage for this reason. Piling up the earth in the middle of the road is perhaps in itself well enough, but leaving undrained holes at the side of the road probably more than counterbalances the benefits of the embankment. A road between long artificial ponds is always inferior and is often impassable. It is cheaper and better to make a lower embankment and to drain thoroughly the holes at the side of the roads. Often the public funds can be more wisely used in making ditches in adjoining private lands than in making ponds at the roadside in an attempt to improve the road by raising the surface.

New Dust Killing Machine.

Consul General Robert J. Wynne reports that a new tar-spraying machine which the makers claim will do away with the dust nuisance has been tested on the roadway in front of the Horticultural hall, Westminster, London, before practically the whole of the municipal engineers, a large number of county surveyors and suburban engineers and two representatives appointed by the war office. After the tar spraying process a second machine scattered a level layer of granite grit and chips upon the tar, which when rolled formed a road with a fine, smooth surface, durable and dustless. A tar macadam road made in this way costs from 3s. 6d. to 4 shillings (85 to 97 cents) a square yard as against ordinary macadam, which costs on an average 2s. 6d. (60 cents) a square yard.

Useful Trees For Roads.

French roads are commonly bordered with shade trees. This is believed to be a protection of the roads against the effects of excessive heat and drought. Only such trees, however, are considered useful as have vertically descending roots. The spreading roots of other kinds might damage the road.

Beware of the Enemy's Figures.

The Trenton (N. J.) Times, in unfriendly editorial comment on Mrs. Armor's visit to New Jersey, attempts to show that Georgia has not been bettered by prohibition, and cites as proof the prison statistics of New Jersey and of Georgia for May 31, 1907, two months before the Georgia prohibitory law was enacted, and eight months before it went into effect. The population figures quoted in the comparison are those of 1900.

The Atlanta Georgian says in reply: "The prohibition law thus far has made an unexpected record. Our jails have been empty for the first time, and the law has shown signs of going a long way toward solving the problems that confront us of which the north knows nothing; but we have never hoped that the law which became effective January 1, 1908, would affect our past history."

The Georgian quotes comparative prison and population statistics of the two states for the same (1904), the only just method of comparison, and shows that even under partial prohibition Georgia had but 108 prisoners to the 100,000 of population, as against 131 to the 100,000 in license New Jersey.

COVELL ISSUES CHALLENGE

To Dodds to Meet Him in Public Debate on His Record.

At Hersey Saturday night Mr. Covell was present at the organization of a Covell Club of 175 members. In reply to an attack upon Mr. Covell, while in the state legislature, being made by the Dodds supporters, Mr. Covell openly challenged Mr. Dodds, his opponent to a public debate upon his record in the legislature. Mr. Covell made a forcible defense of his position while in the house of representatives and senate which satisfied those present who composed the audience that the statements were made for the purpose of prejudicing the people of the district against Mr. Covell. Mr. Covell seized the opportunity to deny some of the statements made in such a manner as to controvert any effect they may have had.

WILL BE CANDIDATES

Before the Republican County Convention September 8.

W. J. Pearson for Representative—J. M. Harris for Judge of Probate.

As the time for the county convention draws near the rumors in regard to candidates are assuming definite form.

For state representative the name of William J. Pearson, of Boyne Falls, is the only name heard on the republican side.

Mr. Pearson has long been one of the leaders of his party and under his generalship have many hard fought battles been won. The position of representative is one to which Mr. Pearson is peculiarly adapted, owing to his knowledge of men, and with the native powers of leadership with which he is endowed, coupled with his acknowledged common-sense, would at once become a power in legislation and credit to the county.

For judge of probate, Judge Harris authorizes us to say that he will be a candidate for re-nomination. The judge bases his claims to the place on his familiarity with the duties of what is probably the most important office in the county and his record as a public official, of which we have yet to hear a word of adverse criticism.

TO THE MASONIC HOME

Old Hugh McCurdy Leave His Valuable Estate?

The will of the late Hugh McCurdy, which has just been filed, disposes of an estate estimated at $80,000, of which $30,000 is money borrowed by Shiawassee county of McCurdy to help in the construction of the new court house. The $30,000 has never been paid. There is also $15,000 in real estate valuation.

Mrs. McCurdy receives a comfortable annuity, while the son, Spencer McCurdy, and wife have the use of the 115-acre farm in Caledonia township during their lives. A few small bequests are mentioned and the balance of the estate is bequeathed to the grand lodge F. & A. M., to be held by a trust company until such a time when it shall amount to $100,000. The income from the $100,000 is then to be used towards the support of the Masonic home in Grand Rapids.

The farm occupied by the son in Caledonia township will ultimately go to swell this legacy. According to an agreement made by the deceased to the city of Corunna when he gave them a park of 32 acres in which he lived, his widow may remain in the home a year after the date of his death. The park then goes into the complete control of the city.

George W. Baxter and Dr. Shaver of Boyne in R. R. Accident

Carriage in which they Were Riding Struck by Engine on B. C. C. & A.

George W. Baxter, editor of the Boyne Citizen, and Dr. H. E. Shaver of Boyne City were injured by a railroad accident near that city, Monday afternoon, from which Baxter may not recover.

The two men were driving between Boyne Falls and Boyne City, when about four o'clock, near a crossing, the train's whistle was heard, one of them remarking, "that must be the G. R. & I.," when all at once they saw the train was upon them. The men were hurled about fifty feet, the carriage was demolished, but the horse escaped without injury.

The train was stopped and went back to the scene of the accident and the two men were taken back to Boyne City, where it was found that Baxter had suffered a fracture of the skull. Dr. Shaver's injuries were of a minor nature.

Mr. Baxter is very popular in his home city and throughout the county, being a member of the board of supervisors.

HAS ARRIVED IN CITY

The Tussock Moth Has Made Appearance—Quick Action Needed.

The Tussock moth has made its appearance here, and every one should take most stringent measures to get rid of it. Many of the fruit trees, and some of the shade trees have been attacked, and unless the ravage of the worm is stopped, inestimable damage will quickly result. Notice the dried leaves and partly shriveled limbs and twigs on your trees, and then look closely for the cause, and you will find, either incysled in a sort of moth web, which may cover several feet of limb, or attached to the limb or twigs, a hairy, double-horned sort of caterpillar, and he is the fellow that does the damage.

There are several ways to deal with this scourge, and all of the methods might be applied beneficially, and ought to be done at once, and in some cities the authorities are compelling action to rid the trees of the pest.

Wherever a limb of a tree has been attacked, and it has begun to shrivel, the limb or branch should be sawed off and burned at once. Where the web has been formed among the twigs, get a long pole, with no oil-saturated rag on the end of it, set it afire and apply it thuroughly to all parts of the web. Trees that have not yet been attacked may be saved from the ravages of the pest by putting a coat of sticky fly paper about its trunk, and you will have caught the whole menagerie over night. Don't hesitate about getting to work to rid the city of the moth, for it works insidiously, and you are unaware of its appearance until a tree has been blighted, when but a little preventive will forestall the attack.

Go to the Laf-a-Lot and laugh while you live, for when you die, you will be a long time dead. 33tf

CAPTAIN BERDAN RESIGNS

As Street Commissioner at Meeting of Council Thursday.

Work for the Present Will Be Done Under Supervision of Street Committee.

The council met in regular session Thursday night, all members being present except Mayor Rose and Alderman Swinton, and was presided over by president pro tem Wilbur.

Sidewalk petitions were received from Myron Geer, H. O'Leary, Robert Madill and W. J. Weikel and walks ordered in.

The resignation of Harrison Berdan, as street commissioner, was received and accepted, all present expressing their regret that the city was to lose the services of so faithful and efficient officer.

The following resolution was passed by an unanimous vote in regard to his services:

Resolved, by the common council of the city of Charlevoix in regular session, that we tender to Captain Harrison Berdan a cordial vote of thanks for the thorough, efficient and painstaking manner in which he conducted the office of street commissioner of this city.

During the past four years and up to the time of the commencement of the present city administration, Mr. Berdan has filled the combined office of chief of police and street commissioner. In this period the city has made rapid strides in the improvement of its streets and sidewalks. All of this work has been under the direct supervision of Mr. Berdan. The results speak for themselves and are an enduring evidence of the skill, faithfulness and industry of Captain Berdan.

In dealing with all the difficult, perplexing and oftentimes unpleasant questions which have presented to him in the discharge of the duties of his office, the Captain has shown tact, wisdom and honesty in a rare degree and we feel that the people of the city are deeply indebted to him for what he has done in their behalf and that it is but just that expression be made at this time of the appreciation of the people and of the council for the services honestly rendered and work well done.

The captain announced as his reasons for taking the action that he had arrived at the time of life when he wanted to rest and felt that the cares and burdens of looking after the streets should be placed upon others.

The work of looking after the streets for the present will be done by the street committee.

The police were instructed to use the utmost diligence in collecting the proper licences from peddlers, and after passing upon the regular grist of bills, the council adjourned.

Captain Berdan retires after four years service as street commissioner, during most of that time having served also as chief of police. During his term of office the paving of our streets have been done under his supervision and the streets of Charlevoix are the records which he leaves behind him, as a faithful public servant, one which will be in evidence after other records are forgotten. He was a road builder, who had studied the subject, and leaves a vacancy in the official list which it will be hard to fill, but all unite in wishing him enjoyment of his well earned rest.

YOUNG LIFE GONE OUT

Ethel M. Cook Dies at Her Home in This City, Monday Morning.

Ethel M. Cook, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Cook, of this city, died at her parents home, Monday morning, of heart trouble after a long illness, being a few days over twenty-one years of age, leaving to mourn her loss, the parents and one brother, Byron, and sister, Linda, of this city.

Ethel was a general favorite among the young people of the city, being of a bright, lovable disposition. She was a graduate of the Charlevoix High school, class '07, and of the County Normal, class '05, and had been teaching school at Frederic for the past three years.

The funeral services were held Tuesday, Rev. R. A. Wright, in charge, who spoke feelingly of her life and disposition. Miss Putnam sang "Face to Face" and "One Sweetly Solemn Thought," accompanied by Mrs. Arha Cameron. The floral tributes were many and beautiful. The city council attended in a body, Mr. Cook being city treasurer.

The casket was borne by George Finucan, Clare Coulter, Lafayette Carey, Charles Wilkinson, Mason Rose and Harry Dodge, former schoolmates.

Burial took place in Brookside cemetery.

BUSINESS INCREASING

Of Charlevoix State Savings Bank Under New Management.

The Charlevoix State Savings Bank under its new management is steadily gaining an increased patronage the desire of the officers being to make it a local institution.

C. D. Danaher, of Chicago, Ill., a former stockholder in the Charlevoix State Savings bank, was in town Saturday negotiating with R. P. Foley and W. J. Rachow.

In conversation with Cashier W. J. Rashow he stated that the outside interests had all been purchased by Mr. Foley, president of the bank, Dudley E. Waters, A. T. Slaght and himself.

Since President Foley and Cashier Rachow have been managing the affairs of the bank, the Charlevoix State Savings Bank has become almost wholly a local institution and is enjoying a steady increase of deposits and clientage. The book value of the stock is now considerable above par.

ACCIDENTS AT EAST JORDAN

Three Occurred in That Vicinity Last Week

Mrs. Robert Casson, Frank Thompson and William Bowen Victims.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Carson were indulging in a horseback ride across the fields at their home south of town last week Wednesday evening, when the horse Mrs. Carson was riding bolted and ran away. Mrs. Carson, losing control of the animal, was thrown to the ground and seriously injured by the horse's hoofs as it passed over her. Besides an ugly wound just above her left elbow evidently made by the horse's shoe, a rib was fractured in her right side and she received several other painful bruises and she will be obliged to forego the pleasure of horseback riding for some time.

Frank Thompson, a workman employed by the East Jordan Lumber Company, with one of its steam log loader crews, met with a very painful accident on Friday afternoon last. He was setting the brakes on one of the Russell cars, which are used for hauling logs, and losing his balance, fell, his left hand being caught and crushed in the coupling as the cars came together. He was brought to town and Dr. C. A. Sweet dressed his injuries, finding it necessary to amputate two of the fingers.

Wm. Bowen, employed as night-watchman at the flooring factory was badly scalded about the right arm and leg early Thursday mooring. He was blowing off the boilers when in some manner the blow off pipe became disconnected. He will be laid up for several weeks.

A CREDIT TO THE TOWN

Hines & Co. drug store. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

Michigan Crop Report.

The lack of rain during the month of July has caused severe damage to corn, beans, potatoes, sugar beets and pastures, their condition being below that of one year ago.

The average estimated yield per acre of rye in the state is 15 bushels and in the northern counties 16 bushels.

The estimated average yield of oats per acre in the state, southern and northern counties is 31 and in the central counties 30 bushels.

The condition of potatoes as compared with an average in the southern counties is 71, in the central counties 82, in the nothern counties 89 and in the state 77.

The condition of beans compared with an average per cent, in the southern counties is 78, in the central counties 89, in the nothern counties 93 and in the state 84.

The condition as compared with an average of beets in the southern counties is 80, in the central and northern counties is 87, in the state 82.

The yield per acre of clover hay in tons, in the southern counties is 1.56, in the central counties 1.63, in the northern counties 1.42 and in the state 1.55.

The yield per acre of timothy hay in tons, in the southern counties 1.39, in the central counties 1.37, in the northern counties 1.12 and in the state 1.34.

The excessive drouth during the month of July caused a very heavy dropping of apples which has reduced the prospect for a crop in the state from 60 per cent July 1 to 47 per cent on August 1. The prospect for an average crop in the southern counties is 45, in the central counties 46, in the northern counties 53 and in the state 47.

The winter varieties that promise best are in their order: Baldwin, Greening, Northern Spy, Ben Davis, Russet, Wealthy, Wagner and King. Of the early sorts the most promising are Dutchess, Red Astrachan, Yellow Transparent, Maiden Blush, Famense and Early Harvest.

The California Cars here August 14, 15, 17, 18, will give our people a treat such as they probably may never have again and old and young should not miss it for the small price asked, and the beautiful souvenir they will get as a reminder of their visit.

DOLLIE AND THE MANEATER.

By Colin S. Collins.

Copyrighted, 1908, by Associated Literary Press.

"I can't help it because I am rich, can I?"

Paul Vinton spoke of his wealth as though it were a thing accursed. Dollie Darcy shook her head with judicial solemnity.

"I don't suppose that you can," she admitted. "At the same time, Paul, you cannot blame me for taking an interest in people who do things."

"Such as waiting on table?" retorted Vinton. "I don't see anything to command respectful admiration in a job like that."

"But he is a college man," reminded Dollie. "Just fancy a student so anxious to learn that he will wait on table in a hotel to gain the funds for his tuition!"

"He would do well to go to a grammar school first," growled Vinton. "He waited on me this morning and when I asked for eggs he told me that 'the eggs isn't very fresh.' That's good grammar for a college student, and then his slang is something weird."

"George Ade uses slang," cited Dollie defensively. "I'm sure that no one ever accused Mr. Ade of being common."

"Because he keeps his slang for his books and plays," reminded Vinton.

Dollie checked the sharp speech that sprang to her lips and hurried down the piazza steps to join a bespectacled youth who appeared around the corner of the hotel.

He was not an inviting sort of person. One ear was considerably larger than the other and an aggressive chin belied a mildness of appearance due to the large lensed spectacles he wore. His hands and feet were large and unmanageable and his clothes fitted him as though they had been made for a man of more generous build.

The Hotel Breeze had solved the servant problem by employing college students as waiters. It had become fashionable to take an interest in these struggling aspirants for learning, and Dollie Darcy was nothing if not fashionable. Even though it threatened a break with Paul Vinton—whom she expected to marry some day—she insisted on having her student to be interested in.

Dollie had picked out Brady as the favored one for the reason that he seemed the most forlorn and desolate one in the lot. There was something almost pathetic to her in the idea of this man who maltreated the English language so brutally seeking a higher education, and she found his personality interesting and at times amusing.

There were other times when the man bored her sadly, but she would not confess that she found him tiresome lest Paul should think the victory lay with him.

Every evening when the tables had been cleared and the dining room put in order Brady would slip down to the beach and walk or sit with Dollie, while Vinton sat on the piazza and vowed that he would leave the place for some better resort where the waiters were not the fad of the moment.

He never went, for on second thoughts he told himself it would be better to stay on and look after Dollie. She must tire of her fad presently, and perhaps on the rebound he might induce her to say the coveted "Yes."

Dismally Vinton realized that the waiting game was bound to be a long one, and chancing upon Dollie waiting on the sands for her waiter protege Paul was moved to reopen his argument.

Following an unusually hot day the humidity of an approaching storm deprived the sufferers of the relief of the night breezes. Dollie was tired and irritable and in no frame of mind for an argument. Both raised their voices slightly above the pitch of good breeding, and Brady, coming upon them suddenly, gathered that there had been a dispute.

"Has this guy been unbuttonin'-his lip?" he demanded of Dollie.

Perhaps it was the heat, perhaps it was the memory of some of the things that Vinton had said. At any rate, there was a barely perceptible pause before Dollie languidly responded:

"He has been very annoying. I am glad you have come," she said.

Brady picked up a pebble and tossed it down the beach.

"Go after it," he urged. "You ain't wanted here, Bo. Notify your feet to get busy with your shoes and pedal yara."

"I presume you are trying to urge me to go away," suggested Vinton coldly.

"You've got a fine pressmuer," commended Brady. "Gear it up a little higher. It's runnin' too slow."

"I am grateful for your advice," said Vinton with sarcasm that appeared to be lost upon the other, "but it is not my intention to take myself off until Miss Darcy signifies to me that my presence here is unwelcome."

"You heard her say that you made her tired," reminded Brady. "Be a nice little boy, Bo, and go play in the next yard. There's a fine cellar door there. Go slide down it."

Vinton looked inquiringly at Dollie, but she made no sign. Brady was displaying a new phase of his many sided character and she found it rather interesting. Vinton, too, puzzled her, and she wanted to see what he would do.

She had not long to wait, for, with a final appeal to take a walk before his feet hurt him and he couldn't, Brady advanced toward his antagonist.

Short and sharp was the encounter. Brady struck first, and Vinton, nothing loath, responded. In both men the primal instinct was aroused, and they fought for the favor of a woman as men in the stone age fought.

For the moment Vinton forgot Dollie's presence, forgot everything except his desire to avenge the blow.

Brady had slipped off his glasses at the first sign of trouble and he was somewhat at a disadvantage, but for all of that he had the best of the fight, though Vinton had taken boxing lessons from an old champion and was accounted more than ordinarily skillful at the game.

They were on a strip of the beach little frequented in the evening and the encounter attracted no attention. In five minutes Vinton was down and out and Dollie was kneeling beside him in the sand seeking to restore him to consciousness. He opened his eyes presently and smiled into Dollie's anxious face.

"It's all right," he said weakly. "That little college student of yours has the skill of a professional prize fighter."

"Sure!" assented Brady. "You was goin' some, Bo, but your company was too fast. I used to be the Cherry Hill maneater until me eyes went on the blink and I had to look for somethin' easier. I been teachin' the rah-rah boys to handle their hams lately. It's a puddin' alongside the other game. The doc told me to get some salt air for the summer an' I'm pickin' a piece of the coin while I'm doin' it. I fought Terry five rounds to a draw once," he added with pride.

"And now you are studying for college?" asked Dollie wonderingly.

"I was teachin'," explained the maneater. "I was professor of boxin'. What's all this row about college anyway? When the boss cook hired me he says, 'I s'pose you come from college?' And I told him I just come from there. Now you're harpin' on the same string."

"The waiters this season are all students working their way through college," explained Dollie. "That was why I"—

She paused in confusion and Brady completed the sentence for her.

"That was why you mushed me?" he asked good naturedly. "I'm sorry for you, sis, but I ain't the real goods. Better stick to his job lots over there. He's in your class. I ain't no heavyweight."

Dollie regarded Paul, nursing a rapidly blackening optic, and smiled. At the moment Vinton seemed anything but romantic.

"That's all right," interposed the maneater understandingly. "A bit of raw steak will fix that up. He's the man to tie to, all right. There ain't many chaps like him that could give me the run he did. You hook up."

"Thank you. I will take your advice," declared Dollie as she sank down on the sand beside Vinton, and seeing that he was no longer wanted the maneater slipped away rubbing his cauliflower ear reflectively.

"I hope he won't beat the little dame," he said musingly. "He sure can hit, even if he can't lick me." And the maneater never realized that with Cupid as referee Paul was the winner after all.

35,000 CHILDREN.

Children's Day at the Michigan State Fair.

It is estimated that at least 35,000 children will avail themselves of the invitation of the Michigan State Fair to be their guests Friday, Sept. 4th. This day has been set aside as Children's Day, and every child in Michigan under the age of twelve years who comes to the gate that day will be admitted free, no ticket being required. Most of the schools open the following Tuesday, and this will be the last gala day for the young people before they settle down to hard school work.

A program, prepared expressly for the little folks, will be announced later which provides for one continuous round of pleasure from morning until night. The little folks are not interested in horse racing, so there will be no racing on that day, and in order that they will be home in the evening, there will be no fireworks display that night, but there will be enough going on to make it a happy, busy day for the children. Jack Dallas, the most daring airship navigator in the country, will make two flights in his big airship, sailing about the grounds, high in the air, though always within view.

This is the first time since the location of the state fair in Detroit that children have been admitted free, and no doubt it will be one of the liveliest, merriest days of the big fair, because they will be on pleasure bent, and there will be something doing every minute.

IMPLEMENT DEPARTMENT LOOKS BRIGHTER.

V. V. Green, superintendent of the implement and machinery department of the Michigan State Fair, reports that space which has been assigned to his department is well taken, and, present indications are that every foot of available space will be gone before the fair opens. The 1907 machinery exhibit was very large, in fact it was supposed to be as extensive as could ever be made; but this year it is very apparent that the number of exhibits will be greatly increased, and there are a number of new things never before shown which will be seen at the coming fair. There is no department of the state fair that is of such educational interest to the farmer as the machinery department. Superintendent Green, who is secretary and treasurer of the Union Transfer and Storage company of Detroit, is thoroughly versed in the handling of all kinds of machinery, having spent the greater portion of his life at that business, and it may be depended upon that he will maintain the highest possible standard in his department, which will be appreciated by the farmers of the state.

GREAT CHANGE IN FOUR YEARS.

Four years have brought about great changes in the state fair grounds at Detroit. Where this beautiful white city now stands was only a barren space of farm lands. The great transformation scene has certainly been wonderful. To all appearances one would think the great improvements had been going on for years. The grounds are covered with large and commodious buildings, which have been built with permanency in view. The grounds have been graded, walks and roads built, and shrubbery, which was planted four years ago, has since done much toward beautifying the grounds, making them a credit to the state. The work of making improvements still progresses, a large number of men being employed at this time and will be until the opening of the great show, that the grounds may be in the holiday attire.

The grounds lie just west of the Detroit, Grand Haven & Milwaukee railroad and the Pontiac and Flint interurban railway and attract great attention from the thousands of passengers who pass the grounds daily, and who can form only a favorable opinion of this great enterprise which is doing so much along educational lines for the people of Michigan.

$5,000 WORTH OF CEMENT WALKS.

The Michigan State Fair association is building $5,000 worth of cement walks, leading from the entrance near Woodward avenue to the grand stand, and also about the grounds. These walks are broad and will accommodate many people. In case of damp weather they will be a great convenience for the visitors who travel from one part of the grounds to another.

MAKING A WHITE CITY.

The state fair buildings are undergoing a great transformation scene this year. All the buildings are receiving a coat of white paint, which adds very materially to their attractiveness. To cover these buildings with paint requires a large force of men and many barrels of paint. While the work was commenced early in the season, it will not be completed before Sept. 1st.

CHAPTER IV.

"TELL me, what do the papers say?"

Settling herself comfortably, back in the carriage, Shirley questioned Jefferson with eagerness, even anxiety. She had been impatiently awaiting the arrival of the newspapers from "home," for so much depended on this first effort. She knew her book had been praised in some quarters, and her publishers had written her that the sales were bigger every day, but she was curious to learn how it had been received by the reviewers.

Shirley was not beautiful, but hers was a face that never failed to attract attention. It was a thoughtful and interesting face, with an intellectual brow and large, expressive eyes, the face of a woman who had both brain power and ideals, and yet who, at the same time, was in perfect sympathy with the world. She was fair in complexion, and her fine brown eyes, alternately reflective and alert, were shaded by long dark lashes. Her eyebrows were delicately arched, and she had a good nose. She wore her hair well off the forehead, which was broader than in the average woman, suggesting good mentality. Her mouth, however, was her strongest feature. It was well shaped, but there were firm lines about it that suggested unusual will power. Yet it smiled readily, and when it did there was an agreeable vision of strong, healthy looking teeth of dazzling whiteness. She was a little over medium height and slender in figure and carried herself with that unmistakable air of well bred independence that bespeaks birth and culture. She dressed stylishly, and, while her gowns were of rich material and of a cut suggesting expensive modistes, she was always so quietly attired and in such perfect taste that after leaving her one could never recall what she had on.

"Tell me," she repeated, "what do the papers say about the book?"

"Say?" he echoed. "Why, simply that you've written the biggest book of the year, that's all!"

"Really! Oh, do tell me all they said!" She was fairly excited now, and in her enthusiasm she grasped Jefferson's broad, sunburnt hand which was lying outside the carriage rug. He tried to appear unconscious of the contact, which made his every nerve tingle, as he proceeded to tell her the gist of the reviews he had read that afternoon.

"Isn't that splendid?" she exclaimed when he had finished. Then she added quickly:

"I wonder if your father has seen it."

Jefferson grimed. He had something on his conscience, and this was a good opportunity to get rid of it. He replied laconically:

"He probably has read it by this time. I sent him a copy myself."

The instant the words were out of his mouth he was sorry, for Shirley's face had changed color.

"You sent him a copy of 'The American Octopus?'" she cried. "Then he'll guess who wrote the book."

"Oh, no, he won't," rejoined Jefferson calmly. "He has no idea who sent it to him. I mailed it anonymously."

Shirley breathed a sigh of relief. It was so important that her identity should remain a secret. As daughter of a supreme court justice she had to be most careful. She would not embarrass her father for anything in the world.

Suddenly Jefferson asked her:

"Have you heard from home recently?"

"I had a letter from father last week. Everything was going on at home as when I left. Father says he misses me sadly and that mother is ailing, as usual."

She smiled, and Jefferson smiled too. They both knew by experience that nothing really serious ailed Mrs. Rossmore, who was a good deal of a hypochondriac and always so filled with aches and pains that on the few occasions when she really felt well she was genuinely alarmed.

The cab stopped suddenly in front of beautiful gilded gates. It was the Luxembourg, and through the tall railings they caught a glimpse of well-kept lawns, splashing fountains and richly dressed children playing. From the distance came the stirring strains of a brass band.

The coachman drove up to the curb, and Jefferson jumped down, assisting Shirley to alight.

They entered the gardens, following the sweet scented paths until they came to where the music was. The band of an infantry regiment was playing, and a large crowd had gathered. Many people were sitting on the chairs provided for visitors for the modest fee of two sous; others were promenading round and round a great circle having the musicians in its center. The dense foliage of the trees overhead afforded a perfect shelter from the hot rays of the sun, and the place was so inviting and interesting, so cool and so full of sweet perfumes and sounds, appealing to and satisfying the senses, that Shirley wished they had more time to spend there.

"Isn't it delightful here?" said she. "I could stay here forever, couldn't you?"

"With you—yes," answered Jefferson, with a significant smile.

Shirley tried to look angry. She strictly discouraged these conventional, sentimental speeches which constantly thing her sex in her face.

"Now, you know I don't like you to talk that way, Mr. Ryder. It's most undignified. Please be sensible."

Quite subdued, Jefferson relapsed into a sulky silence. Presently he said:

"I wish you wouldn't call me Mr. Ryder. I meant to ask you this before. You know very well that you've no great love for the name, and if you persist you'll end by including me in your hatred of the hero of your book."

Shirley looked at him with amused curiosity.

"What do you mean," she asked. "What do you want me to call you?"

"Oh, I don't know," he stammered, rather intimidated by this self possessed young woman, who looked him calmly through and through. "Why not call me Jefferson? Mr. Ryder is so formal."

Shirley laughed outright, a merry, unrestrained peal of honest laughter, which made the passersby turn their heads and smile, too, commenting the while on the stylish appearance of the two Americans whom they took for sweethearts. After all, reasoned Shirley, he was right. They had been together now nearly every hour in the day for over a month. It was absurd to call him Mr. Ryder. So, addressing him with mock gravity, she said:

"You're right, Mr. Ryder—I mean Jefferson. You're quite right. You are Jefferson from this time on, only remember"—here she shook her gloved finger at him warningly—"mind you behave yourself! No more such sentimental speeches as you made just now."

Jefferson beamed. He felt at least two inches taller, and at that moment he would not have changed places with any one in the world. To hide the embarrassment his gratification caused him he pulled out his watch and exclaimed:

"Why, it's a quarter past six. We shall have all we can do to get back to the hotel and dress for dinner."

Shirley rose at once, although loath to leave.

"I had no idea it was so late," she said. "How the time flies!" Then mockingly she added: "Come, Jefferson—be a good boy and find a cab."

They passed out of the gardens by the gate facing the Theatre de l'Odeon, where there was a long string of fiacres for hire. They got into one, and in fifteen minutes they were back at the Grand hotel.

At the office they told Shirley that her aunt had already come in and gone to her room, so she hurried upstairs to dress for dinner, while Jefferson proceeded to the Hotel de l'Athenee on the same mission. He had still twenty-five minutes before dinner time, and he needed only ten minutes for a wash and to jump into his dress suit, so, instead of going directly to his hotel, he sat down at the Cafe de la Paix. He was thirsty, and calling for a vermouth frappe he told the garcon to bring him also the American papers.

The waiter returned with the vermouth and the newspapers. All he could find were the London Times, which he pronounced Toozums, and some issues of the New York Herald. The papers were nearly a month old, but he did not care for that. Jefferson idly turned over the pages of the Herald. His thoughts were still running on Shirley, and he was paying little attention to what he was reading. Suddenly, however, his eyes rested on a headline which made him sit up with a start. It read as follows:

"Judge Rossmore Impeached—Justice of the Supreme Court to Be Tried On Bribery Charges."

The dispatch, which was dated Washington two weeks back, went on to say that serious charges affecting the integrity of Judge Rossmore had been made the subject of congressional inquiry and that the result of the inquiry was so grave that a demand for impeachment would be at once sent to the senate. It added that the charges grew out of the recent decision in the Great Northwestern Mining company case, it being alleged that Judge Rossmore had accepted a large sum of money on condition of his handing down a decision favorable to the company.

"Mind you behave yourself!"

Jefferson was thunderstruck. He read the dispatch over again to make sure there was no mistake. No, it was very plain—Judge Rossmore of Madison avenue. But how preposterous, what a calumny! He paid for his vermouth and hurried away to his hotel to dress.

It was just striking 7 when he reentered the courtyard of the Grand hotel. Shirley and Mrs. Blake were waiting for him.

They drove up the stately Champs Elysees, past the monumental Arc de Triomphe and from there down to the Bois. All were singularly quiet. Mrs. Blake was worrying about her new gown, Shirley was tired, and Jefferson could not banish from his mind the terrible news he had just read. He avoided looking at Shirley until the latter noticed it and thought she must have offended him in some way. She was more sorry than she would have him know, for with all her apparent coldness Jefferson was rapidly becoming very indispensable to her happiness.

It was nearly 10 o'clock when they had finished. They sat a little longer listening to the gypsy music, weird and barbaric. Very pointedly, Shirley remarked:

"I for one preferred the music this afternoon."

"Why?" inquired Jefferson, ignoring the petulant note in her voice.

"Because you were more amiable," she retorted rather crossly. But she could never remain angry long, and when they said good night she whispered demurely:

"Are you cross with me, Jeff?"

He turned his head away, and she saw that his face was singularly drawn and grave.

"Cross—no. Good night. God bless you!" he said, hoarsely gulping down a lump that rose in his throat. Then grasping her hand he hurried away.

Completely mystified, Shirley and her companion turned to the office to get the key of their room. As the man handed it to Shirley he passed her also a cablegram which had just come. She changed color. She did not like telegrams. She always had a dread of them, for with her sudden news was usually bad news. Could this, she thought, explain Jefferson's strange behavior? Trembling, she tore open the envelope and read:

Come home at once. MOTHER.

CHAPTER V.

THEY were four days out from port. Two days more and they would sight Sandy Hook, and Shirley would know the worst. She had caught the North German Lloyd boat at Cherbourg two days after receiving the cablegram from New York. Mrs. Blake had insisted on coming along in spite of her niece's protests. Shirley argued that she had crossed alone when coming; she could go back the same way. Besides, was not Mr. Ryder returning home on the same ship? He would be company and protection both. But Mrs. Blake was bent on making the voyage. She had not seen her sister for many years and, moreover, this sudden summons from America had upset her own plans.

The alarming summons home and the terrible shock she had experienced the following morning when Jefferson showed her the newspaper article with its astounding and heartrending news about her father had almost prostrated Shirley. The blow was all the greater for being so entirely unlooked for. That the story was true she could not doubt. Her mother would not have cabled except under the gravest circumstances. What alarmed Shirley still more was that she had no direct news of her father. For a moment her heart stood still. Suppose the shock of this shameful accusation had killed him? Her blood froze in her veins, she clinched her fists and dug her nails into her flesh as she thought of the dread possibility that she had looked upon him in life for the last time. She remembered his last kind words when he came to the steamer to see her off and his kiss when he said goodby, and she had noticed a tear of which he appeared to be ashamed. The hot tears welled up in her own eyes and coursed unhindered down her cheeks.

Suddenly she heard a familiar step behind her, and Jefferson joined her at the rail. The wind was due west and blowing half a gale, so where they were standing—one of the most exposed parts of the ship—it was difficult to keep one's feet, to say nothing of hearing any one speak.

"It's pretty windy here, Shirley," shouted Jefferson, steadying himself against a stanchion. "Don't you want to walk a little?"

He had begun to call her by her first name quite naturally, as if it were a matter of course. Indeed, their relations had come to be more like those of brother and sister than anything else. Shirley was too much troubled over the news from home to have a mind for other things, and in her distress she had turned to Jefferson for advice and help as she would have looked to an elder brother.

He was sorry for Judge Rossmore, of course, and there was nothing he would not do on his return to secure a withdrawal of the charges. That his father would use his influence he had no doubt, but meantime he was selfish enough to be glad for the opportunity it gave him to be a whole week alone with Shirley.

Thus events, combined with the weather, conspired to bring Shirley and Jefferson more closely together. The sea had been rough ever since they sailed, keeping Mrs. Blake confined to her stateroom almost continuously. They were therefore constantly in one another's company, and slowly, unconsciously, there was taking root in their hearts the germ of the only real and lasting love—the love born of Official Call for Republican State Convention.

To the Republican Electors of the State of Michigan:

The state convention of the Republicans of Michigan is hereby called to meet at the Light Guard armory in the city of Detroit on Tuesday, the 29th day of September, 1908, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon, for the purpose of nominating candidates for state offices, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before the convention.

In accordance with the provisions of law and the action of the Republican state central committee, every county will be entitled to one delegate for each two hundred and fifty of the total vote cast therein for the Republican candidate for secretary of state at the last election and one additional delegate for a moiety of 126 votes or more.

Pursuant to law, Tuesday, the 8th day of September, 1908, is hereby designated as the day on which shall be held in each county, the county convention of the Republican party for the election of delegates to the Republican state convention herein called, for the selection of delegates to congressional, senatorial and representative district conventions in such districts as have not adopted the direct voting system, and for the transaction of other business provided for by law or which may otherwise properly come before said county convention.

In counties that have not adopted the direct voting system for the nomination of county officers, delegates to the county convention will be chosen under the caucus system.

Under the resolutions of 1858, no delegate will be entitled to a seat in the state convention who does not reside in the county he proposes to represent.

The delegates from the several counties in each congressional district are requested to meet in district caucus at 9:30 o'clock a. m. on the day of the state convention, and select officers as follows, to be presented to the state convention for confirmation:

1—One Vice President.
2—One Assistant Secretary.
3—One member of the committee on "Credentials."
4—One member of the committee on "Permanent Organization and Order of Business."
5—One member of the committee on "Resolutions."

By order of the Republican state central committee.

GERRIT J. DIEKEMA, Chairman.
DENNIS E. ALWARD, Secretary.
Grand Rapids, July 29, 1908.

Charlevoix county is entitled to seven delegates.

MR. TAFT'S speech of acceptance proclaims the purpose of his administration if elected president. If will be to "clinch" the polices of President Roosevelt. He is in hearty sympathy with the president's effort to arouse the public conscience and to correct the abuses that have grown up with the substitution of corporate organization for individual control of industry. He reprobates those evils as keenly as the president himself, and no great lawbreaker can expect to find a less thorny course under the next republican administration than under the present one. But Mr. Taft sees that the work of arousing the public conscience has been accomplished, and that the duty of the next administration will be to perfect the machinery for carrying out the national policy of regulation promptly, smoothly and with least destructive effect on business. Mr. Roosevelt's function was to awaken the public mind to the necessity of checking serious abuses and to set in motion the machinery for their correction. Mr. Taft's will be to develop that machinery, to see that it is exactly adapted to its purpose and completely performs its work.

The work of initiation is over and public regulation in its broad outlines has been created. The patient filling in of its details remains to be accomplished, as the operation of existing laws reveals defects—some of which Mr. Taft points out in his speech—or as conditions so change as to call for the modifications to meet them. Such a work is progress, and Mr. Taft is progressive in spirit; his administration will be progressive, for progress does not consist merely of innovations. The greater part of it is the patient working out of details, the laborious laying of stone on stone. Mr. Taft conceives this to be the function of the coming administration, and the judgment of the nation will coincide with his. No one wants a turning back from the path along which Mr. Roosevelt has directed the steps of the country, but every one feels the need of a period of just constructive work—of a "subordinate and ancillary" character, Mr. Taft calls it—as the republican candidate outlines in his speech of acceptance. The republic needs the "clinching" of the Roosevelt policies by such a sober, sane, broad-minded courageous statesman as Mr. Taft, and withal by a man thoroughly in sympathy with the president's aims and informed by the same moral purposes.—N. Y. Tribune.

LAST week in speaking of the congressional contest in this district, we stated that Mr. Dodds conceded more votes to Mr. Covell in the southern counties than at the time of his former visit. That was our understanding, but we have since been informed that Mr. Dodds does not now and has not at any time conceded that Mr. Covell was any stronger in the southern end of the district than he was two years ago.

We make this correction because we desire at all times to be fair and if at any time, through inadvertence, or otherwise we make what can be construed as a false or misleading statement we will correct the same.

In regard to the congressional contest we believe that both the candidates are able competent men and it would be a source of pride to this district to have either of them chosen as our representative, and in making our choice of candidates the personality of the men did not enter into the question. What we considered and what we ask the republicans of Charlevoix county to consider is the following questions:

Is not the northern end of the district entitled to the representative at this time, if her candidate has equal ability with the candidate presented from the southern end?

Is not Mr. Covell, by reason of his previous official experience, better qualified to represent the people at Washington than his opponent who has never had any experience in public office?

Our answer to these questions was in favor of Mr. Covell. As far as Mr. Covell being stronger in the south than he was two years ago, our own personal knowledge of conditions existing there, with the evidence brought us by men who have been over the ground recently, tells us that he is much stronger and with proper support in the north is sure to be a winner.

Wilson Grange No. 719.

Something is always doing in Wilson grange. That's the secret of our success.

Wilson grange met Saturday August 8, in regular session.—In the course of the business session two candidates were obligated in the first and second degrees. Deer Lake grange was represented by about thirty-five members. Pine Lake and South Arm granges were also in evidence. Brother Richard Lewis of Charlevoix, came down to get his share of the ice cream, arriving just in time.

The program rendered by Deer Lake was one of exceptional merit and we expressed our appreciation of same by a rising vote of thanks. We will return the compliment sometime in the near future.

Number of our own members present fifty-four. Total attendance ninety-one.

IMPROVEMENTS AT WEST MICH. FAIR

New Station at Mill Creek of Greatest Benefit.

G. R. & I. and Pere Marquette Passengers will be Landed Directly Opposite North Entrance to Grounds—$3,500 in New Cement Walks—22-Acre Addition Secured.

Of especial interest to out-of-town patrons of the West Michigan State Fair, which will be held in Grand Rapids Sept. 14-18, is the announcement that since last year's fair the Pere Marquette and the Grand Rapids & Indiana railroads have united in the erection of a new, modern railroad station at Comstock Park, which is used jointly by the two roads.

The new station is at Mill Creek, located directly opposite the upper entrance to the fair grounds. Each railroad has built new cement walks alongside the tracks, extending 400 or 500 feet in either direction. Secretary E. D. Conger states that these walks will be extended by the fair officials across the highway and street railway tracks to an enclosure within the grounds. Inside this enclosure will be two ticket offices, so that visitors arriving at the fair by either of these roads may have every convenience for entering the grounds conveniently and promptly.

The added convenience of a station at this point will be greatly appreciated, especially by patrons from the north. The entrance is conveniently located, just north of the new sheep shed and at the apex of the splendid new system of cement walks which have been laid inside the grounds since the last fair.

During the past year the fair management has expended about $3,500 on new cement walks. At the close of the fair last September all the old board walks were torn up and the excavations were filled with sand taken from the hills to the northwest of the fair grounds. The new walks insure good footing in every direction from the grand stand and main exhibition building, no matter what may be the weather conditions.

Last fall the fair officials purchased from H. D. Plomb's Sons a tract of 22 acres of land lying to the north and adjacent to the fair grounds. Because of lack of funds to properly fence and improve this addition to the grounds, it will not be opened to the public this year. But a successful fair this season will certainly insure its being improved and made available for exhibition purposes in 1909. According to present plans, the agricultural field and one or two other departments of the fair will probably be located on this addition at that time.

The new Comstock Park station and the new system of cement walks about the grounds are two features which will make for the comfort of all patrons of the fair, and the fair management is to be congratulated on these notable improvements to the already fine grounds with their exceptional surroundings.

How to Relieve a Sick Headache.

To cure a sick headache drink quickly a cup of strong catnip tea. It probably will induce vomiting. After, the stomach is well cleared out drink no other cupful of the tea to quiet and soothe the stomach.

How to Keep Violets Fresh.

Violets may be kept fresh several days if at night the flowers be covered with paraffin paper and the stems put into a glass of water. Then set into an air tight tin pail. Keep in a cool place.

Dusty wall paper can be easily cleaned by rubbing gently with a clean, soft piece of flannel.

MUELLER
FURNACES

The three important factors in addition to workmanship and quality of material, are—

1. Adaptation to perfect and uniform combustion.

2. Proportion of effective heating surface, (area exposed to air supply) to amount of fuel consumed (size of fire pot.

3. Construction and form adapted to heat the largest possible amount of air by absorbing the largest amount of heat generated, and sending the least heat possible up the chimney.

We claim that our styles of Furnaces present a larger surface heated directly by the radiate heat of combustion and larger surface exposed to the air supply than others of equal and even larger dimensions of fire pot.

Let us figure with you and explain further the good points of the Mueller Hot Air Furnace. 'Phone 193

Grouping of Accident Reports.

The American Anti-accident association, whose headquarters are at Sharpsville, Pa., recently adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, That in view of the appalling number of accidents occurring daily throughout the United States, resulting in the killing and maiming of over 1,000 men, women and children and resulting in enormous financial losses, and recognizing the powerful influence of the public press as an educational factor, the association hereby appeals to the press of America to use its influence in the matter of prevention of accidents by adopting the plan of placing all accidents under a regular heading, as is done with sporting news, financial and other features; further

Resolved, That it is the belief of this association that such featuring of accidents would tend to bring the matter more closely to the attention of the masses, making a deeper impression upon the public mind, causing people to more carefully consider their causes and possible prevention, which, we believe, would result in a lasting benefit to mankind.

A Shampoo.

Once in three weeks the hair should be washed. Always after washing the scalp should be rinsed in cold water to contract the pores. A good shampoo is made of a raw egg beaten in half a gill of lime water. This is well rubbed over the head before washing in clear water. Every other night the scalp may be massaged with a mixture of boracic acid and alcohol, a dram of the former to three ounces of the latter.

To Currycomb Fish.

"Be sure not to forget a new currycomb," said some one when the members of a prospective camping party were making their list of supplies. "This made me curious, as I knew there was to be no horse at the camp. Inquiry disclosed the fact that a currycomb is better than anything for taking the scales from fish."—Good Housekeeping.

Tuesday a slight fire was quickly put out in the store-room of L. S. See's grocery. If it had spread it would have been a very disastrous one and the reason it was extinguished so quickly cannot be laid to our system of fire alarm, as coming just at the noon hour, but very few people knew there was a fire in town. Have we got to wait until the city burns up before we get a suitable alarm?

The Fisk Quartet, colored, which gave such satisfaction here one year ago, will give a concert in the Charlevoix Theater Monday evening, August 24th. These talented musicians must not be confused with the Mississippians who were in Charlevoix last winter. The Fisk Quartet are known as the best colored singers in the world. One of their number gives added interest to the program by readings and impersonations. Watch for fuller announcements later.

THEATRICAL

"Realism is all right in its place," says Mr. George S. Hall, who comes to the Charlevoix Theater at the head of his company Thursday, August 20, but I do not believe in its introduction in readings." One of Mr. Hall's favorite readings, one which he will give during his local appearance, is Trowbridge's well known sketch "The Vagabond." He has often been importuned to use a good dog in this as most of the dialogue is addressed to an animal supposed to be with him. He has steadfastly refused, however. "As a boy," he says, "I served my apprenticeship with a circus and without decrying that form of endenvor, I have no desire to return to it. Animals belong in circuses and possibly in vaudeville, certainly not on the concert stage and in legitimate drama. I undertake to create the illusion of a dog being with me and when I fail in this I am sure that the audience will let me know." It might be added that no audience has yet complained.

Fagan's Electric Theater continues to give the largest lot of amusement to be found for the price in the city. Miss Florence Browning is appearing nightly in special songs, and while not on the bill, Master Teddy Stanton, the child artist, occasionally appears.

WILD WEST SHOW

Two Performances at Petoskey, Saturday, August 15.

ONE HUNDRED INDIANS IN COSTUME

Miller Bros.' Company, Recruited Entirely From 101 Ranch, Bliss, Oklahoma—Free Parade—Free Show on Grounds.

Miller Bros.' 101 Ranch Wild West Show, recruited entirely from the great 101 Ranch, at Bliss, Okla., will appear in Petoskey, Saturday, August 15, giving two performances and inaugurating the day with a big free street parade and free show on the grounds. Many residents of this vicinity will take advantage of the opportunity to see this famous amusement institution.

The Miller Brothers entered the show business last year when the directors of the Jamestown Exposition urged them, as representatives of the cattle-raising business, to give an arenic illustration of its features. The Millers hurried back to the ranch, recruited another show and sent it on to Brighton Beach, New York City, where for six weeks it broke metropolitan records of attendance and favor.

The organization which is coming to this city is a consolidation of the two which astonished the country last year. It is a living page from frontier history, without professionalism or theatrics. Every figure and feature is original with the 101 Ranch—cowboys, cowgirls, Indians, bucking horses and trained cow-ponies, champions of lariat, the gun and the bow and arrow; long-horned steers, pure-blooded buffaloes, emigrant schooners and prairies stage coaches. Without variation of illusion the sports, pastimes, hardships, chivalries, perils and daily happenings of the ranch are reproduced.

Miller Brothers have aspired to make their preliminary street parade one that will remain a glorious memory to all who view its wonders. More than 100 Indians are a fantastic feature, and every person and animal with the organization is required to be in line. The cavalcade stretches more than a mile in length, and is a moving summary of the west which knows no barbed wire or blocked trails.

The Modern Woodmen of America will give an excursion to Boyne City on the Lena Knobloch Friday evening. Fare 35 cents. A dance will be held at Boyne City that evening.

The Cause of Many Sudden Deaths

There is a disease prevailing in this country most dangerous because so deceptive. Many sudden deaths are caused by it—heart disease, pneumonia, heart failure or apoplexy are often the result of kidney disease. If kidney trouble is allowed to advance the kidney-poisoned blood will attack the vital organs or the kidneys themselves break down and waste away cell by cell.

Bladder troubles most always result from a derangement of the kidneys and a cure is obtained quickest by a proper treatment of the kidneys. If you are feeling badly you can make no mistake by taking Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and sold by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sized bottles. You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful new discovery and a book that tells all about it, both sent free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co. Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper.

Atty.-Gen. Bird has held that county boards of election commissioners should prepare ballots for each political party having registered its vignette with the secretary of state for the nomination of candidates for governor and lieutenant-governor at the September primary. The fact that candidates for the offices named may not have filed petitions for their nomination, makes no difference in the duty devolving upon the election commissioners, the law providing that the enrolled voters of each political party shall vote for party candidates for governor and lieutenant-governor at the general primary.

Under this opinion of the attorney-general blank ballots for all duly recognized parties will be provided for primary election day, September 1.

An investigation by Detectives Eli Baker, Downey and Fox, however revealed the fact that Flott had been with three alleged bunco men and lost his money matching half dollars. Flott went to Detroit two weeks ago and figured out a system to beat the stock market.

Efforts will be made by the legislative committee of the State Pharmaceutical association to secure the passage of a law by the next legislature to regulate the itinerant vendors of medicines, nostrums and appliances for the treatment of disease. It is said that since Ohio has driven out the drug peddlers Michigan has been overrun with them, and legislative committee of the druggists' association has been given reason to hope that the proposed bill be passed. John E. Peck, of Grand Rapids, is advising the pharmacists to expend money for advertising only in newspapers and to reject program and other classes of advertising.

At the meeting of the association a bill to prevent fraud and deception in the sale of drugs was agreed to. It is intended to supplement the national pure food and drugs act. Deploring the sale of liquor by druggists at soda fountains in local option counties the association favors a bill to prevent the granting of licenses to druggists permitting the sale of wines and liquors at soda fountains. It is also the plan of the association to so amend the law that the sale of malt liquors in drug stores will be prohibited.

The most interesting fight Michigan has witnessed in years in that being fought out in the Eighth district, between Representative J. W. Fordney, of Saginaw, and J. W. Fitzgerald of St. Johns. When Fitzgerald first announced his candidacy it was not taken seriously by the Fordney men and little was done to counteract it. Of late, however, the St. Johns man's campaign has been meeting with such success that Fordney has now taken the stump. The congressman is the owner of a large touring car and he has begun campaigning with it a la Warner, selecting Tuscola county as the initial scene of activity.

Personalities have been indulged in to a considerable extent and bitterness is beginning to crop out in places. The Fordneyites have challenged Fitzgerald's Republicanism, asserting that he was a silver advocate in 1896 and that he voted against McKinley. This Fitzgerald denies.

Bucklen's Arnica Salve Wins.

Tom Moore, of Rural Route 1, Cochran, Ga., writes: "I had a bad sore come on the instep of my foot and could find nothing that would heal it until I applied Bucklen's Arnica Salve. Less than half of a 25 cent box won the day for me by effecting a perfect cure." Sold under guarantee at F. G. Hines & Co. drug store.

Comparative Cost.

The campaign for good roads is in the saddle in Michigan and it would be a good plan to organize a school of instruction that shall take up every phase of the good roads and bad roads systems.

Let us have detailed information about what the cost is of the construction of the several kinds of roads. Familiarize the business man, the farmer, the mail carrier, the general user of the roads with all the figures pertaining to the cost. Also familiarize the public as to the various methods of promoting and constructing the roads.

Let the people study and memorize all the figures on these and the cost of the several kinds of transportation. Let all investigate the question of cheapening products to the consumers that we may secure not only our produce at cheapest cost of transportation, but also that the farmer may haul to his farm at the least expense his supplies, his lumber, his fuel, his machinery, etc.

Some figures along this line are interesting to start the thinkers in new lines, for instance it is established that it costs to transport.

By sea freights, one-tenth of one cent per ton per mile.

By railroads, one cent per ton per mile.

By good roads, seven cents per ton per mile.

By ordinary country roads, twenty-five cents per ton per mile.

Just think of the difference!

Then think some more!—Mancelona Herald.

A Grand Family Medicine.

"It gives me pleasure to speak a good word for Electric Bitters," writes Mr. Frank Conlan of No. 436 Houston St., New York. "It's a grand family medicine for dyspepsia and liver complications; while for lame back and weak kidneys it cannot be too highly recommended." Electric Bitters regulate the digestive functions, purify the blood, and impart renewed vigor and vitality to the weak and debilitated of both sexes. Sold under guarantee at F. G. Hines & Co. drug store. 50c.

THEATRICAL

Full of Realism.

A Dangerous Friend, the melodrama by Fred G. Conrad, which will be presented at the Charlevoix theater Friday evening, August 28, has the merit to belong to the commendable class of plays which may be rightly called genuine melodramas. This means that "A Dangerous Friend" is not a lurid, murderous, gun-play thriller, but a wholesome play of the most natural and deepest human appeal. The strong heart interest is illuminated with some of the best comedy ever seen in a popular drama. The characters are all well drawn and the scenes individually and collectively of unique and unbroken interest. Mr. Conrad has laid the scenes in New York and California and he has made the Hebrew, who is a conspicuous character in the drama, honest and high-minded, though he is the tool of the evil genius of the story. There are five acts and some of the stage pictures are remarkably elaborate scenic achievements, full of realism and impressive display.

Last week at the Laf-a-Lot theater the three Phelps won out big with their rural act, Uncle Josh in the city. Owing to the favor they won, Manager Spencer has held them over for another week, when Mr. Phelps, who is a versatile comedian, will change his acts giving different comedy parts each night. "Mack," the quaint comedian and coon shouter is making many friends in Charlevoix as his act is out of the ordinary. The pictures and song are good and, taken all in all, an hour spent at the Laf-a-Lot is worth many dollars to any one who enjoys a hearty laugh.

Canadian Women Aroused on Liquor Question.

The political activity of American women in the struggle against the saloon bids fair to be duplicated by the women of Canada. The Woman's Christian Temperance Union has, of course, long been alive to the situation, and now the National Federation of Women (French) has declared itself on the subject. Miss Barry, editor of the Journal de Francois, says:

"The women of the National Federation, St. Jean Baptiste Society, are determined to do all in their power to help the movement against alcoholism. Ah, women have suffered long enough; they have wept long enough. If their prayers, supplications and tears have been so far powerless, they will substitute in their place measures, efforts, acts, and we shall see whether the homes will continue to be wretched, whether the children will always be feeble or crippled. Canadian women, my sisters, your task is a hard and painful one, but let no rebuke discourage you. Success must inevitably crown your energy and perseverance."

Government Responsibility.

Apropos of the passage of a bill by Congress providing for the pensioning of the families of men who lose their lives in the government life-saving service, a correspondent from Oklahoma suggests that similar provision should be made for the dependent ones of those who have been shot down while in the performance of duty as special police officers employed to enforce the government prohibitory law. No less than five deputy inspectors were killed by liquor outlaws in Indian Territory during the months that William E. Johnson was engaged in the work of suppressing the illegal traffic in liquor, as the special representative of the federal government.

A government that provides generously for those who fought in defense of the flag would create greater respect for that flag if some recognition were made of the sacrifice of life involved in the effort to enforce government's mandates respecting certain of its citizens. Better still, if it would cast out forever the viper of liquor "revenue," there would be no call for alleviation of the wounds of the serpent's fangs.

jecting nfluer than mere physical raction, the nolder, more enduring ection that is born of mutual symby, association and companionship. efferson had been casting furtive nces at his companion, and as he ted her serious, pensive face he ught how pretty she was. He wonred what she was thinking of, and ddenly inspired no doubt by the mysrious power that enables some people read the thoughts of others, he said braptly:

"Shirley, I can read your thoughts. ou were thinking of me."

She was startled for a moment, but mediately recovered her self possesion. It never occurred to her to deny t. She pondered for a moment and hen replied:

"You are right, Jeff, I was thinking f you. How did you guess?"

He leaned over her and took her and. She made no resistance. Her delicate, slender hand lay passively in his big brown one and met his grasp frankly, cordially. He whispered:

"What were you thinking of me—good or bad?"

"Good, of course. How could I think anything bad of you?"

She turned her eyes on him in wonderment; then she went on:

"I was wondering how a girl could distinguish between the feeling she has for a man she merely likes and the feeling she has for a man she loves."

Jefferson bent eagerly forward so as to lose no word that might fall from those coveted lips.

"In what category would I be placed?" he asked.

"I don't quite know," she answered laughingly. Then seriously she added: "Jeff, why should we act like children? Your actions, more than your words, have told me that you love me. I have known it all along. If I have appeared cold and indifferent, it is because"—She hesitated.

"Because?" echoed Jefferson anxiously, as if his whole future depended on that reason.

"Because I was not sure of myself. Would it be womanly or honorable on my part to encourage you unless I felt I reciprocated your feelings? You are young. One day you will be very rich. The whole world lies before you. There are plenty of women who would willingly give you their love."

"No, no!" he burst out in vigorous protest. "It is you I want, Shirley—you alone."

Grasping her hand more closely, he went on, passion vibrating in every note of his voice: "I love you, Shirley. I've loved you from the very first evening I met you. I want you to be my wife."

Shirley looked straight up into the blue eyes so eagerly bent down on hers, so entreating in their expression, and in a gentle voice full of emotion she answered:

"Jefferson, you have done me the greatest honor a man can do a woman. Don't ask me to answer you now. I like you very much. I more than like you. Whether it is love I feel for you, that I have not yet determined. Give me time. My present trouble and then my literary work"—

"I know," agreed Jefferson, "that this is hardly the time to speak of such matters. Your father has first call on your attention. But as to your literary work I do not understand."

"Simply this: I am ambitious. I have had a little success—just enough to crave for more. I realize that marriage would put an extinguisher on all aspirations in that direction."

"Is marriage so very commonplace?" grumbled Jefferson.

"Not commonplace, but there is no room in marriage for a woman having personal ambitions of her own. Once married her duty is to her husband and her children, not to herself."

"That is right," he replied; "but which is likely to give you greater joy—a literary success or a happy wifehood? When you have spent your best years and given the public your best work, they will throw you over for some new favorite. You'll find yourself an old woman with nothing more substantial to show as your life work than that questionable asset, a literary reputation. How many literary reputations today conceal an aching heart and find it difficult to make both ends meet? How different with the woman who married young and obeys nature's behest by contributing her share to the process of evolution. Her life is spent basking in the affection of her husband and the chubby smiles of her dimpled babes, and when in the course of time she finds herself in the twilight of her life, she has at her feet a new generation of her own flesh and blood. Isn't that better than a literary reputation?"

He spoke so earnestly that Shirley looked at him in surprise. She knew he was serious, but she had not suspected he thought so deeply on the subject. Her heart told her that he was voicing the true philosophy of life. Then she said:

"Why, Jefferson, you talk like a book. Perhaps you are right. I have no wish to be a bluestocking and desert in my old age, far from it. But give me time to think. Let us first ascertain the extent of this disaster which has overtaken my father. Then if you still care for me, and if I have not changed my mind," here she glanced slyly at him, "we will resume our discussion."

Again she held out her hand, which he had released.

"Is it a bargain?" she asked.

"It's a bargain," he murmured, raising the white hand to his lips. A fierce longing rose within him to take her in his arms and kiss passionately the mouth that lay temptingly near his own, but his courage failed him. After all, he reasoned, he had not yet the right.

A few minutes later they left the deck and went downstairs to dress for dinner. That same evening they stood again at the rail watching the mysterious phosphorescence as it sparkled in the moonlight. Her thoughts traveling faster than the ship, Shirley suddenly asked:

"Do you really think Mr. Ryder will use his influence to help my father?"

Jefferson set his jaw fast and the familiar Ryder glenn came into his eyes as he responded:

"It's a bargain," he murmured.

"Why not? My father is all powerful. He has made and unmade judges and legislators and even presidents. Why should he not be able to put a stop to these preposterous proceedings? I will go to him directly we land, and we'll see what can be done."

So the time on shipboard had passed, Shirley alternately buoyed up with hope and again depressed by the gloomiest forebodings. The following night they passed Fire Island, and the next day the huge steamer dropped anchor at quarantine.

CHAPTER VI.

A MONTH had passed since the memorable meeting of the directors of the Southern and Transcontinental railroad in New York, and during that time neither John Burkett Ryder nor Judge Rossmore had been idle. The former had immediately set in motion the machinery he controlled in the legislature at Washington, while the judge neglected no step to vindicate himself before the public.

Ryder for reasons of his own—probably because he wished to make the blow the more crushing when it did fall—had insisted on the proceedings at the board meeting being kept a profound secret, and some time elapsed before the newspapers got wind of the coming congressional inquiry. No one had believed the stories about Judge Rossmore, but now that a quasi official seal had been set on the current gossip there was a howl of virtuous indignation from the journalistic muck rakers. What was the country coming to? they cried in double leaded type. After the embezzling by life insurance officers, the rascality of the railroads, the looting of city treasuries, the greed of the trusts, the grafting of the legislators, had arisen a new and more serious scandal, the corruption of the judiciary. The last bulwark of the nation had fallen. The country lay helpless at the mercy of legalized sandbaggers. Even the judges were no longer to be trusted. The most respected one among them all had been unable to resist the tempter. The supreme court, the living voice of the constitution, was honeycombed with graft. Public life was rotten to the core!

Neither the newspapers nor the public stopped to ascertain the truth or the falsity of the charges against Judge Rossmore. It was sufficient that the bribery story furnished the daily sensation which newspaper editors and newspaper readers must have. The world is ever more prompt to believe ill rather than good of a man, and no one, except in Rossmore's immediate circle of friends, entertained the slightest doubt of his guilt. It was common knowledge that the "big interests" were behind the proceedings, and that Judge Rossmore was a scapegoat, sacrificed by the system because he had been blocking their game. If Rossmore had really accepted the bribe, and few now believed him spotless, he deserved all that was coming to him. Senator Roberts was very active in Washington preparing the case against Judge Rossmore. The latter being of the party which was in the minority, and "the interests" controlling a majority in the house, it was a foregone conclusion that the inquiry would be against him, and that a demand would at once be made upon the senate for his impeachment.

Almost prostrated by the misfortune which had so suddenly and unexpectedly come upon him, Judge Rossmore was like a man demented. His reason seemed to be tottering, he spoke and acted like a man in a dream. Naturally he was entirely incapacitated for work, and he had applied to Washington to be temporarily relieved from his judicial duties. He was instantly granted a leave of absence and went at once to his home in Madison avenue, where he shut himself up in his library, sitting for hours at his desk wrestling with documents and legal tomes in a pathetic endeavor to find some way out, trying to elude this net in which unseen hands had entangled him.

FOR THE CODLING MOTH

August is the Proper Month in Which to Spray Apple Trees.

So Says L. R. Taft, Horticulturist at the College.

Even though apple trees are carefully sprayed in the spring it is seldom possible to have the winter varieties free from worms. This is due to the fact that the second brood of worms appears in August after the effect of the spring spraying has been lost. The moths appear anywhere from August 10th to 25th and deposit their eggs for the most part upon the foliage. These hatch in about ten days and the small worms feed upon the leaves, or perhaps upon the small fruits, and at length eat their way into the apples, generally at the side, selecting, if possible, a point where two fruits are in contact or where a leaf rests upon the apple. From these facts it can be seen that it is possible to prevent injury to the fruit by spraying the trees before the eggs hatch, or about the middle of August. For this purpose, there is nothing better than arsenate of lead used at the rate of two pounds in fifty gallons of water or, in the case of varieties subject to the attack of apple scab, it may be applied in Bordeaux mixture, but owing to the danger of spotting the fruit, this should not contain more than two pounds of copper sulphate and two pounds of stone lime in fifty gallons. Care should be taken to thoroughly spray the trees covering the leaves as well as the fruits, as this will greatly increase the chances of destroying the small worms.

That this treatment will be effectual has been conclusively demonstrated many times during the last few years as while the orchards that have not been sprayed at all, or that do not receive the August application, have had the fruit nearly ruined by the codling moth, the trees that were sprayed between August 10th and 15th have been practically free from worms, thus, in some cases doubling the value of the crop.

The use of arsenate of lead at this time will also be very helpful in destroying the fall web worm and other leaf-eating insects that often do serious harm to apple trees during the fall months.

While it is somewhat more expensive than paris green, which is often used for the same purpose at the rate of about five ounces in fifty gallons of water, it will be much more effectual as it has far greater adhesive qualities and hence remains much longer on the trees, the paris green being readily washed off by rains. It also has the advantage of not injuring the foliage while paris green if used in water without of lime sometimes does serious harm.

Especially if the trees were not sprayed with Bordeaux mixture earlier in the season, its use should not be omitted at this time even though the variety is one that is not much injured by apple scab, the use of a fungicide in August will prevent the attack of various fungi and the leaves will be kept longer on the trees in a healthy condition, thus aiding in the ripening of the wood and in the production of fruit sprouts for the crop next year.

You may all laugh at luck and think it funny, but many a man and woman are wearing lucky sea beans as watch charms, which they got as souvenirs on the California Cars and are trying them.

Moths and Fires.

Moths and flames are universally connected, yet few people suspect that danger could arise therefrom. The insects are of such frail structure that generally they get destroyed before it is possible for them to inflict injury, and it is hardly credible that the wings would ignite and retain the flame long enough to enable the moth to fly to its surroundings. That, however, has occurred. The moth was a very large one, and its wings must have been very dry, so that when it floundered through the flame it set fire to one wing and darted on to a curtain near by, which at once flared up. It is possible that many summer evening fires in the country could be attributed to a source of this kind. It is notorious that mysterious fires often arise at sunset in the hot months.—Strand Magazine.

The monster shark on the California Cars has been visited by thousands and thousands of people all over the United States, and people of education and refinement pronounced it a wonderful specimen from the deep sea, worth ten times the price of admission.

The California Car has a limited number of the lucky sea beans, which they give away to visitors as souvenirs.

Vote for FRANCIS H. DODDS for Congress

The Clare Cleaver says: There is none of the make-shift about Frank Dodds—he is the same sound, kindly, sensible, scholarly, benevolent, statesman-like gentleman three hundred and sixty-five days out of a year. He is nat a palitician in any sense of the term, but only a plain citizen who desires to represent his people in our great national legislature at Washington. And who has a better right to demand recognition at the hands of his people than Frank Dodds? From the very first day he began to "wield the birch" in the wilderness of the central parl of his district up to the present time he has been a thorough student of social, economic and political questions. He is unquestionably an authority on them. In addition he knows the needs of his constituents as they do themselves. Mr. Dodds is not what the Cleaver calls a "glad-hand man," slobbering over people when he meets them is not his forte. Thank God for it. Deliver us from the jelly-fish, pap promising, fraternally yours, etc., vote seeker, Mr. Dodds meets you with the quiet, unassuming manner that is characteristic of him at all times. He is the same today, tomorrow, before election and after election. Frank Dodds is strictly the man for the common people. The county press of the district is strongly advocating his candidacy.—Adv.

Courier Grange Column

Marian Center Grange No. 956.

Marion Center Grange No. 956 met in regular session, August 5, and was opened in usual form in the fourth degree by the worthy assistant steward, in the chair in the absence of the master and overseer.

After the usual order of business, the grange was opened in the lower degrees and Mrs. Maud Cook and Mrs. Henry Black Jr., were initiated in the first and second degrees.

The lecturer's program was carried out as follows:

Song, by the grange chorus.
Song, Brother Jay Adams.
Recitation, Sister Edith Adams.
Reading, Brother Henry Black Jr.
Song, Brother William Withers.

The secretary reported $7.89 receipts from the social.

Grange closed in regular form.

CATTLE SHOW WILL BE THE BEST EVER.

West Michigan State Fair Attracts Great Exhibits by Increasing the Number and Value of Premiums—Breeders' Associations Offer Special Awards.

In the high standard of its past cattle shows the West Michigan State Fair, which is to be held in Grand Rapids Sept. 14-18, has established a record which, under ordinary conditions, it would be hard to beat.

But with the additional inducements of a largely increased premium list, the total amount of which is $4,600, af four cash awards in each division, and the added special premiums of the American Shorthorn Breeders' association, it is a reasonable assumption that this year's entries will show as large an increase over those of last year as 1907 showed over 1906. The number of exhibits of cattle in all classes in 1906 was 287 head; in 1907 it was nearly 400 head.

The importance of this cattle show is recognized by the Holstein-Freisian Breeders' association and by the American Shorthorn Breeders' association, both of which offer special cash premiums. The specials for Shorthorns are offered this year for the first time and amount to $300. This means that exhibitors of Shorthorn cattle at the West Michigan State Fair will have opportunity to carry away no less than $690 in cash premiums.

The special dairy tests which have been features of the last two West Michigan fairs will be repeated this year. One hundred dollars is offered for the purpose af encouraging economical production and business methods in dairying. The test is based upon the cost af feed and value of milk and butter produced. Four prizes, from the first af $50 to the lowest one of $10, will be given in this competition. The practical detailed work of the test will be under the supervision of the State Dairy and Food Department. Hon. A. E. Palmer is superintendent of this division.

A PHILIPPINE VILLAGE.

One of the Big Attractions for West Michigan State Fair Week.

In line with its policy to offer to its patrons only the best attractions that can be secured, the West Michigan State Fair has secured a Philippine village to exhibit on the fair grounds in Grand Rapids, Sept. 14-18. All the characteristics and habits of the crafty little brown men of our newest territorial possession may be studied at close range, the settings of the village being reproduced with the utmost fidelity. The rites and ceremonies, the constant dancing and feasting of the natives of the far-away islands will be shown throughout the entire day, as will their native industries and primitive customs. The huts in which they seek shelter are of native Philippine material, imported especially for the purpose from the Isle of Luzon.

The variety and quality of the attractions which charge admissions and have been granted privileges within the grounds is far above the average usually seen at fairs. Among the number are "Buckskin Ben," who was seen there last year with his "Wild West" show. The favor which this attraction met with led the management to close the contract for the reappearance at the 1908 fair.

In addition there will be the merry-go-round, the Ferris wheel, and a novelty—the latter consisting of an "ocean wave," which is very much out of the ordinary. This is a mammoth affair, said to weigh 15 tons, and will be transported direct to the fair grounds from the great Forest Park amusement park in Cleveland, Ohio, where it has proved the biggest klud of a hit all season.

Enter Your Products.

Every farmer or breeder should not fail to enter his choice products at the West Michigan State Fair. He often thinks that among so many entries he will have no chance for a prize. His neighbor thinks the same. Then when they visit the fair and see others walk off with ribbons won on specimens far inferior to their own their chagrin is great. But the fault is their own. The successful competitor was more enterprising. If his product was not as high-class. Enter your products at the fair. It will pay you.

Needed.

The professor had been quizzing his psychology class and was evidently somewhat disappointed with the result.

VALUE OF GOOD ROADS

Dusty Highways Mean Disease, Says Government Expert.

VALUE OF IMPROVING THEM.

Where Thoroughfares Are Good Children Are Clean and Well Cared For and Vice Versa—How California Learned an Economic Lesson.

"I have noticed wherever I see bad roads I invariably see neglected, unkempt, unwashed children. If I travel along a good road I see children well cared for. I do not say that one directly follows the other, but they undoubtedly go together. A community that is negligent of its roads will be negligent of its children, and a community that is negligent of its children will not produce good citizens, nor, above all things, will it have a high standard of public health."

This observation on cause and effect was made by Dr. Allerton S. Cushman, assistant director of the office of public roads of the United States department of agriculture, at a meeting of the American Public Health association.

Dr. Cushman was asked to justify the statement. "It is, I think, justified by a day spent in an automobile in any country section," said he, "and, insisting as I do on the condition, I think it has a bearing on the question so frequently asked by unthinking Americans, 'What possible relation can there be between the public road and public health?'

"If the medical men of the world know what they are talking about the relation is intimate. Dirt and dust mean disease. Cleanliness and sanitary surroundings work for a better citizenship. The relation of science to mundane things is evident, if one will use even a percentage of the powers of deduction which Conan Doyle gave to Sherlock Holmes. Science holds in her archives a delightful little story which well illustrates my purpose. It is related that at one time the flavor of the famous Staffordshire cheese had departed and a splendid industry was endangered. Sir John Lubbock, the great naturalist, made a prolonged investigation and finally reported to the farmers that in his judgment the best restorative measure possible would be to import a great number of cats and set them free in Staffordshire.

"Naturally the unbelieving scoffed at the proposed antidote, for they deemed the suggestion ridiculous. They asked a reason for so extraordinary a prescription.

"'The peculiar flavor of the Staffordshire cheese comes from a hybrid clover which formerly grew here in great abundance,' said Sir John. 'The bumblebee is the one means of cross fertilizing that clover. The field mice have increased very rapidly in numbers of late, and they are destroying the nests of the bumblebees. If you can destroy the mice, the bees can work on that clover, and Staffordshire cheese will soon be as good as ever. Get cats therefore.'

"I don't vouch for the story," continued Dr. Cushman, "but I indorse it for its power of illustrating the delicate equilibrium which under our complex civilization exists between the public health and public utilities. Nobody will deny that the 2,150,000 miles of public roads of America constitute the national dust factory and furnish fully 90 per cent of the dust we inhale. The delicate breathing apparatus of the human body was never meant to harbor such substances as every passing breeze blows from the thoroughfares, and the percentage of people dying from disease carried by dust is higher than is generally believed.

"When the public will concede that to be a fact the director of public roads and the state and county road builders and overseers will get a greater degree of popular support than they now receive. The American finds dusty roads a menace only when it is brought home to him that they cost him money. That was demonstrated to the orange growers of California a few years ago, when dust covered fruit no longer commanded so high a price as when free from dust. The result was an aroused interest in road improvement and in dust suppression. Appeals on the score of cleanliness and good health never stirred the Californians, but a slump in the price of oranges brought about a wonderful era of activity. The outcome was gratifying and California soon had dustless, oiled roads. In that state the oils possess a higher asphaltum base than the oils of any other section of the world, and when they are spread on the roads the volatile portion of the oil evaporates and the asphaltum remains as a binder.

"The utmost immediate success of this plan attracted the attention of highway engineers throughout the world. In France and some of our eastern states it was at once assumed that oiling was the best road treatment and that the longed for solution of the dust nuisance problem had been found. This has not been proved to be the case, because in many localities the only oil available possesses a petroleum rather than an asphaltum base. It has been found that when the volatile portion evaporates the oil left behind becomes greasy and similar in consistency to vaseline. Such quality of oil does not adhere and bind the road, but is picked up and scattered by passing traffic.

"If, then, as the doctors say, dust means dirt, dirt means disease, and disease means death, dusty roads have no place in our national economics."

BENJ. BROWN

LUCKY BEAN SAVED SAILOR.

Providence Placed Talisman in His Hand When He Was Thrown Unconscious Among Cannibals

Of all the many mysterious products of the ocean, none can compare with the sea-bean. Scientists are divided as to its origin, as no one has ever seen the shrub or vine on which it grows, and it is never found save when the bosom of the deep has been rent by a hard storm, when the sea-beans, cast forth from some mysterious depth, are found scattered along the beach, derelicts of the tide. There are numerous varieties, large and small, and some are very rare, especially the large liver bean, and the banded bean. The savage tribes which inhabit the South Seas regard them as almost sacred, and look upon the lucky possessor of one of the rare varieties as particularly favored by the gods. Dusky belles, having in their possession these rare products of the deep, will fight for their treasure against all comers, as they believe that the sea-bean gives them unusual power, especially in love, and that any man on whom their affections are set, must yield to their charms if they but touch him with the lucky bean. One touch of the bean binds their lover to them forever.

Mr. Leak, manager of the Stanislaus county exhibit cars from California, is the fortunate possessor of a rare specimen which has a thrilling history which would seem to prove the superstition of the savages of the South Sea Islands. It was given to him by a sailor friend, who was wrecked in a mighty storm which swept the tropical seas. The sailor, unconscious and nearly dead, was washed ashore on an island, and when he recovered his senses he found himself surrounded by a crowd of savage men and women. They were cannibals, and his fate would undoubtedly have been a horrible one, but suddenly a native saw grasped in the sailor's hand, one of the rarest of the sea-beans. Where it came from and how it happened that he held it when he was cast upon the beach he never knew, but the superstitious natives looked upon him as one especially protected by the gods, and the bean proved to him a lucky one indeed for it undoubtedly saved him from a terrible fate. Some years ago Mr. Leak befriended this old sailor in San Francisco, and as a reward this lucky bean was presented to him, and he values it highly. "I am not superstitious," said Mr. Leak in speaking of this bean, which he has had made into a watch charm, "but I have not had any very bad luck since I was presented with the lucky bean by my old sailor friend Seth."

Waste Effort.

Most of us think our duty done if, when stillness is enjoined, we sit quietly in a chair. Yet finger tips, mouth or foot may be moving restlessly all the time, depriving us of the full benefit of rest. Quietness should be applied to everything we do. To prove its necessity watch yourself for a day and see how many needless movements you make. Perhaps you are at a desk, and as you write you draw your eyes toward your nose. This habit tenses all the muscles around our eyes, draws up those near the nose and so far down as the chin. Besides being unrestful it is a sure beauty destroyer, making one cross looking. Equally bad is it to drum with the fingers, lock and unlock them, rub the hands round and round or keep them ever in motion. Yet how often does one see hands that are kept perfectly still in the lap?—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

A Perverted Quotation.

One evening when Stephen Phillips was sea fishing from a boat off Weymouth he was surprised to hear his companion, a common fisherman of the neighborhood, quote a line from "Paolo and Francesca" to indicate that he thought it was no use to continue fishing that night. The line was, "Now the tide turns, and now the sole goes home."—Westminster Gazette.

SPELLMAN'S PERFORMING BEARS.

One af the greatest attractions for the coming state fair, which will command no little attention, is the Spellman bears, numbering seven, all trained and in charge of Mrs. Frank P. Spellman. It is the most talked of and interesting animal act in the world. Mrs. Spellman thoroughly understands her bevy of bears and has them under perfect control at all times. They do all kinds of tricks and stunts willingly. The New York Hippedrome is the biggest theater in the world. Mrs. Spellman's bears were on the program in this great hippedrome several months. This act is absolutely free and will take place in front of the grand stand every afternoon and evening. They have been taught to ride in an automobile, and every morning they will be taken down town from the state fair grounds in a big machine and will ride about the streets of Detroit. They seem to enjoy auto riding, as they lean back in the car, paying little or no attention to anyone they pass, unless some mischievous boy attempts to bother them, when they will reach out their paws to protect themselves. This is a wonderful act, free to everybody, and should be seen to be appreciated.

Success of Prison Labor on Roads.

After a trial of eleven weeks the employment of convicts and local prisoners at highway building in the Panama canal zone is said by the division of municipal engineering to have passed the experimental stage, according to the Canal Record, which recently reached Washington. Three distinct ends were in view in the programme submitted by the special committee on the employment of prisoners, which was approved last February. The first of these was the improvement of the prisoners' condition; second, the opening up to development of the fertile valleys of the canal zone, and, third, reimbursing the government for the expense of maintaining its penal system, the latter view having been justified.

THREE CANDIDATES FOR GOVERNOR

On the Republican Ticket Warner, Bradley, and Earle.

MAKE YOUR CHOICE SEPTEMBER 1.

To Take Part in the Primaries You Must be an Enrolled Voter.

Brief Sketches of the Men and Their Claims—No Opposition to Kelley for Lieutenant Governor.

Three candidates have filed their petition and entered the race for the republican nomination for governor.

FRED M. WARNER.

The present governor of Michigan was born in 1865 and came to this country when three months old. His mother dying he was adopted by P. Dean Warner, of Farmington, which has been his home ever since. Received his education in the public schools and the Michigan Agricultural College.

Is one of the largest cheese manufacturers in the world and has extensive farming and banking interests. Has served two terms each as state senator, secretary of state and governor. Was opposed by a faction in the senate in his efforts to secure the passage of an honest primary law, anti-lobbyist bill and equal taxation of telegraph and telephone companies.

Asks for a re-nomination so he may be able to complete the work, which he has commenced.

DR. JAMES B. BRADLEY,

Auditor general of Michigan, was born in Shiawassee county in 1858. Graduated from Rush Medical College in 1886 and has since practiced his profession in the city of Eaton Rapids. Has also been engaged in manufacturing and farming. Was elected auditor general of Michigan in 1904, and re-elected in 1906. Has made a good record as a public official. Is making his campaign on the grounds that a third term is dangerous to the state and promises in his platform a state wide primary law, to which he is a recent convert, and economy in the business of the state. Is backed by the old machine forces of the state.

HORATIO S. EARLE,

State highway commissioner, was born at Mt. Holly, Vermont, in 1853. Was educated in the common schools, supplemented by a course at Black River Academy at Ludlow, Vermont.

Followed the occupation of farming for a number of years, since has been a travelling salesman and manufacturer. Has served a term in the state senate.

Is famous as an advocate of good roads, and through his efforts secured the passage of the good roads law against strong opposition. His platform declares among other things for convict labor to build good roads, a state board of trade, less politics and more business.

Is a man with a strong personality, and if elected would undoubtedly give the state a good administration out of the beaten track.

DEMOCRATIC CANDIDATE

Lawton T. Hemans was born in the state of New York in 1861, coming to Michigan when four years of age. Graduated from the law department of the University of Michigan in 1889 and has practised his profession since. Has been a member of the State House of Representatives and was a member of the Constitutional convention. Would make a good governor if the Democrats should happen to win.

LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR.

The name of Patrick H. Kelley will be the only name which will appear on the republican ticket. Mr. Kelley was born in Cass county in 1866 of Irish parentage. Received his education in the public schools, Valparaiso and State Normal schools. Followed the occupation of teaching until 1899, when he entered the law department of the University of Michigan graduating in 1900; since has practised his profession. Has served as member state board of education, superintendent of public instruction and lieutenant-governor. Is a very popular speaker and strong advocate of the platform of Governor Warner.

The democratic party has no candidate for lieutenant-governor. The prohibition candidates for governor and lieutenant governor are John W. Gray and Henry C. Carpenter.

JOHN JAMISON KILLED

By a Flying Bolt at East Jordan Mill Last Week.

Was a Highly Esteemed Citizen—Melvin Sheldon also Injured.

In an accident at Mill B of the East Jordan Lumber Co. Tuesday morning of last week, Foreman John Jamison received injuries, which proved fatal before the day was done and Melvin Sheldon received several broken ribs and other internal injuries.

Mr. Sheldon was operating a circular saw, cutting up four-foot bolts for use at the Chemical Works. One of these bolts went wrong and Mr. Sheldon was just reaching for the controlling lever when the saw caught the bolt, which was about six inches in diameter, and threw it with terrible force. Mr. Jamison was watching the machine and evidently the bolt struck the side of his face a glancing blow, crushing in the flesh and smashing the skull, and knocking the unfortunate man into a corner of the room. Mr. Sheldon was struck in the side and knocked down a stairway. He immediately climbed back up the stairway but was forced to lie down.

The injured men were at once taken to Dr. Sweet's office and everything that medical skill could do to alleviate their suffering was done. Mr. Jamison's condition gradually grew worse and the end came just before midnight.

Mr. Jamison has been in the employ of the Lumber Co. for nearly twenty years and has been for years foreman of what is known as the big mill. He leaves a wife and one child, Anna, a girl about fourteen years of age, besides a number of relatives—Mrs. W. P. Parter being a sister of the deceased. Mr. Jamison was a member of the Presbyterian church, and a conscientious, christian gentleman. At the time of his death he was a member of the session and superintendent of the Sabbath school. A man of unbounded integrity, his untimely demise is universally mourned by all.

The funeral services were held from the Presbyterian church Friday afternoon, conducted by the pastor, Rev. A. D. Grigsby, and attended by a host of friends who came to pay their last tribute of esteem.

LARGEST WEST OF PENNSYLVANIA

Charlevoix County Pomona Grange Has That Honor.

MET AT DEER LAKE LAST THURSDAY

Meeting Was One of Importance to the Order.

Places Fixed for the Holding of District Conventions—Next Meeting at Ironton.

Charlevoix County Pomona Grange met with Deer Lake Grange Thursday with a good attendance.

The meeting was called to order in the afternoon by Worthy Master E. B. Ward, who announced that owing to the fact that a large number of those present had not received the degree of Pomona, the meeting would be held in the fourth degree.

The worthy master explained the aims and objects of the Pomona, calling attention to the fact that Charlevoix county had the largest Pomona west of Pennsylvania.

After short greetings from representatives of the different granges present, all reporting a healthy grange sentiment, Treasurer Black reported that there was a balance in the Pomona treasury of $140.

Secretary John Murphy tendered his resignation, which was accepted, giving as his reason his contemplated removal from the county. John A. Newville was appointed secretary to fill the vacancy.

The question of having a grange speaker at the county fair was referred to the executive committee. It was decided to have the second day of the fair Grange Day, and the secretary was instructed to secure suitable badges.

After the appointing of the usual committees, the grange took a recess until after supper, the time being spent in exchanging fraternal greetings.

On re-assembling, the committee on reports of subordinate granges reported that they had found in the secretary's hands reports as follows:

	No. members	per cent
Pine Lake	82	40
Boyne River	58	50
Boyne Valley	25	60
Union	30	32
Norwood	59	33
Wilson	80	40
South Arm	98	21
Marion Center	78	19
Maple Grove	68	41
Deer Lake	56	43

No reports being received from Rock Elm, Peninsula, Ironton, Horton Bay, Clarion and Barnard Granges. It was recommended that Boyne Valley be declared the banner grange of the county. The committee also recommended that the next meeting be held with Ironton Grange. The report was accepted.

Worthy Master Ward called attention to the district plan of electing delegates to the state grange, which made it more representative for a county situated like this, and the grange decided that the district convention should be held as follows on the last Saturday in September: No. 1, Charlevoix; No. 2, East Jordan; No. 3, Boyne Falls. The master was directed to issue a circular letter to the granges explaining the plan.

A class of fourteen were instructed in the degree of Pomona. Throughout the meeting a good program was furnished by different members.

Deer Lake's new hall is a source of pride to its members and the order in Charlevoix county.

The meals served their guests by Deer Lake were up to the grange standard. Couldn't be beat.

The ten granges making reports showed a membership of 696. If the same per cent of members are in the six not reported (and we are informed there is) Charlevoix has over one thousand patrons which, in proportion to rural population, would make it the banner grange county of the state.

FOR STATE SENATOR

29th Senatorial District

FRED R. MING

Candidate for Republican nomination for State Senator, for second term. He asks the voters of the 29th senatorial district to look up his vote on questions in which they were vitally interested, and if his support and vote on the 2c railroad law, the binder twine bill, the railroad commission bill, and other measures of equal importance to them has met with their approval, he asks for their support at the September primaries.

HERE ARE SOME OF THE THINGS THAT SENATOR MING STANDS FOR:

He believes that the law relative to state tax lands should be so amended that the actual home seeker should have first preference, and that these lands should not be sold to tax-title sharks to be denuded of timber by them, and again returned to the state a barren waste. But the portion of these lands that are not homesteaded should be deeded to the counties in which they lie, to be used by such counties for internal improvement, such as road and bridge building; for 93 per cent of these lands lie in the newer counties of the state.

That all property should bear its just proportion of taxes, no more nor less, and that all corporate property should be assessed under the same law as the farms, homes and business places are assessed.

That the regulation of the express companies in this state should come under the supervision of the state railway commissioners as other common carriers.

He believes that all bills introduced in the legislature should be open to free and fair discussion before the proper committees, but as the people send to the capital no secret lobbyists, no others should be allowed.—Adv.

CIRCUIT COURT IN SESSION

Criminal Calendar Soon Disposed of—One Case Tried

William Scott Pleads Guilty—John Coffey Convicted of Violation of Fishing Laws.

Circuit court opened on time Monday forenoon.

The cases of the people vs. Nowland and Houlton for violation of the liquor law were continued. The people vs. VanUnskirk same offense was dismissed, the defendant having gone out of the business. In the cases of the people vs. Apostle and VanDusen, the complaining witnesses withdrew the complaints, leaving the prosecutor no option except to ask a dismissal.

The case of the people vs. John Coffey, violation of the fishing laws went to a jury, who brought in a verdict of not guilty. We understand the case will be appealed.

Carey W. Dunton, of Manistique appeared for the defendant.

William Scott, of Boyne Falls, plead guilty to larceny of a watch and was remanded for sentence.

The case of Barthell vs. Clink, settled.

Today the case of Belmer vs. the Boyne City Tanning Co., is being tried, Nichols and Nichols and E. N. Clink appearing for the plaintiff and J. M. Harris and Knowles & Converse for the defense.

PERE MARQUETTE WRECK

Freight Train Met a Small Accident Near Bell's Landing.

An accident occurred last Thursday about 1:30 p. m., when two cars of crushed stone jumped the track near Bell's landing, a small village about four miles this side of Petoskey, thereby tying up transportation for a short time. The cause was a split rail.

The Traverse City wrecking crew was immediately called for, and they did some very fast work in clearing up the wreck. Meanwhile, a sleeper and a freight engine was used to take passengers from here as far as the wreck and from there the passengers were transferred around the wreck to the dummy train which made connections to Petoskey.

WAS BADLY INJURED

Mrs. Fred Hellar Victim of Runaway at Boyne City Last Week.

The breaking of the carriage tongue on the vehicle they were driving Tuesday morning resulted rather seriously for Mrs. Fred Hellar of Advance.

Mrs. Hellar and her husband were driving some distance from their home Tuesday morning when the bolt which fastens the tongue to their light wagon got broken frightening the horses causing them to run away. When they saw it would be impossible to get the team under control, Mr. Hellar jumped out followed by his wife, but the latter must have alighted in a rather rough spot for she sustained a fracture of her leg which will lay her up for some time. The horses continued until they reached Beeman's corner in this city, where they became detached from the rig. One of the front wheels was found a short distance away evidently having been torn from the hub by some obstruction along their route.

BOILER EXPLODED

On Steamer Leelanau Between Leland and Fouch

While Carrying an Excursion Crowd—Two Killed, Many Injured.

The boiler of the little steamer Leelanau exploded at 8 o'clock Monday morning while the boat was en route from Leland to Fouch on Carp lake with about thirty-five passengers aboard, many of whom were on their way to attend the Miller Bros. Wild West show. The boat was behind time and the engineer, Edward Hardy, states the boiler was carrying eighty pounds of steam to increase the speed.

The boat reached a point opposite Ittingham when the boiler exploded. The force of the blast demolished the pilot house and all of those injured were in the bow of the boat. Engineer Hardy, who stood beside the boiler did not receive a scratch, as the force of the explosion went forward. Hardy says he had shut off steam temporarily to fasten a loosened bolt in the engine when the entire top of the boiler immediately blew off.

Those in the bow of the boat were nearly all thrown into the water, many of them being terribly scalded. Mrs. Isabel LaBonte, of Traverse City, was sitting near the pilot-house conversing with her brother, Charles Mosier, captain of the boat, and she was badly mangled and her body thrown many feet out into the lake. The body has not yet been recovered.

John Harting of Leland, was at the wheel in the pilot house. He was terribly injured and died in the hospital at Traverse City at 1:40 Monday afternoon.

The upper works of the steamer were blown to pieces. The passengers, who were thrown into the water, either swam ashore or clung to wreckage and were rescued by farmers along the shore who were the first to offer assistance.

The injured were rushed to Traverse City. Several of those classed as seriously injured may die.

Numbered among the passengers were resorters from various points who have been spending the summer at the various places along the lake, where the boat stopped this morning on her fatal trip.

The boat was badly damaged, but was towed to a wharf. She is fifty-one feet long with twelve-foot beam. Last season she was rebuilt. Engineer Hardy has been on the steamer since last spring and says the boiler has not been inspected in that time.

The other injured are:

Russel Mills, Ann Arbor, scalded. Condition critical.

Stanley Mills, Ann Arbor, scalded, serious.

A. H. Cook, Traverse City, badly scalded.

Miles Atwood, Leland, slighly scalded.

Richard Steffens, Leland, slightly scalded.

Mrs. Ralph Hastings, Traverse City, badly injured.

Ralph Hastings, city treasurer, Traverse City, slightly injured.

Ten others slightly hurt.

Don't fail to hear the best colored singers in the world Monday evening at the Charlevoix theater. Tickets to any part of the house for 35 cents at the Ivy drug store. 34tf

NEW JUVENILE COURT LAW

Its Aims, Objects, Purposes and What it Has Accomplished

SO FAR IN THE COUNTY OF CHARLEVOIX

Explained in Interesting Article by Judge Harris.

The History of the Efforts to Reform Juvenile Offenders in Michigan Will Bear Study.

Some method other than direct criminal procedure for the dealing with juveniles under the age of 17 years has been a subject of much study and discussion throughout several of the states for a number of years and many philanthropic people have devoted much time to its discussion with the result that a law with distinctive features for the regulation, control and punishment of juvenile offenders has been adopted in many of the states.

The perfection of a workable juvenile court law was early attained in the state of Illinois and its application most thoroughly worked out in the city of Chicago under the direction of Judge Mack, who for several years had given the subject careful study and who was appointed judge of the first juvenile court established for that city.

The state board of corrections and charities and probate judges of Michigan have been studying the subject of a juvenile court law for a number of years and have attempted from time to time to frame a law that would produce the results sought to be attained and at the same time be in harmony with the established courts and legal procedure provided for by our constitution.

The purpose to be achieved is to so handle juvenile offenders that their errors might be corrected without submitting them to the ignominy of imprisonment and to the society of general criminals and offenders and to effect a reform of any immoral habits or degeneracy with which they might be afflicted.

Minors have been divided into three general classes, viz.:

(1.) The dependant child, meaning one who is dependant upon charity through the inability of parents or those obligated to support it to provide for its physical wants and education.

(2.) Neglected children, meaning those whose parents, though of sufficient ability to support and care for the child neglect to do so.

(3.) Delinquent children are those who have failed to obey the laws of the land and who have acquired unsteady and irregular habits.

There is no marked difference in the treatment of the child, whether they be dependant or neglected and so in dealing with juveniles there would really be only two classes:

(1.) Dependant and neglected children.

(2.) Delinquent children.

In dealing with the second class or neglected children it often happens that the parents are guilty of evading their lawful obligations to care for the child and therefore must be compelled to care for it or punished for their unlawful neglect.

The legislature of Michigan have made three distinct attempts to provide for an effective constitutional juvenile court law. The legislature of 1905 passed an act providing for juvenile courts, (act No. 312, public acts of 1905) which was speedily declared unconstitutional by the supreme court for the reason that the act attempted to confer judicial powers upon circuit court commissioners. The court, in its opinion, discuss not only the legal question but the merits of the juvenile court law as found reported in the 142 Michigan reports on page 96.

The legislature of 1907, general session passed another juvenile court law, (act No. 325 public acts

About fifty people from here attended the Gleaner picnic, it being a model day for a picnic. There were about one thousand present.

FROM ATWOOD.

Mrs. Green, of Elk Rapids, is the guest of Miss Mabel Weed tor a few days.

A little baby girl came to brighten the home of Frank Mason last Thursday.

John Parson and Wm. Easteott left Monday for Palmyra, Wisconsin, to visit friends and relatives.

The L. A. S. will serve an old fashioned supper at the town hall Thursday evening. Come and fill the hall.

Miss Anna Byers, of Mansfield, Ohio, neice of Martha Byers is here for the summer. Well we guess to have a good time.

There are some Bentleys, Deckers and Hizings,-of-Chicago, visiting at the Boss home for a few days, more coming next week.

The Best Pills Ever Sold.

"After doctoring 15 years for chronic indigestion, and spending over two hundred dollars, nothing has done me as much good as Dr. King's New Life Pills. I consider them the best pills ever sold," writes B F. Aycock, of Ingleside, N. C. Sold under guarantee at F. G. Ullins & Co. drug store. 25c.

FROM BARNARD.

Miss Effie Willis has returned home after a visit at Onaway.

Mr. and Mrs. John Walker and the Misses Willis visited at Godbold's Sunday.

Lacy Oldham was playing wild west and fractured his shoulder. At last reports he was getting along nicely.

The M. E. members had a pleasant time Friday evening on the lawn of Allen Bolhuis. Proceeds for benefit of the church.

Barnard is still flourishing. Everything looks good, but we need a good rain. The farmers have got nearly all their grain cut and the sound of the threshing machine is heard in the neighborhood.

FROM IRONTON.

Mrs. Sam Currie is on the sick list this week.

Miss Winifred Flanders, of Chicago, is home for her summer vacation.

There has never been so many summer people in Ironton as at the present season.

There will be a concert at the Congregational church Saturday evening, August 22.

Miss Nellie Muddangh, of East Jordan, is engaged to teach Ironton school the coming year.

Mr. and Mrs. Rollie Neilson and Mr. Neilson's mother, all of Chicago, are here for the summer.

FROM SOUTH CHARLEVOIX

The farmers were busy last week threshing out their peas.

Helen Webster is quite sick and under the doctor's care.

Mr. and Mrs. Johnston are spending a week visiting friends at Eastport.

Newton Balch, who recently moved to Boyne City, will soon return Charlevoix.

Mr. and Mrs. I.S. Webster had the pleasure of entertaining on Wednesday their friends, Mr. and Mrs. H. A. Thorp, of Columbus, Ohio.

The residents of South Charlevoix have all the advantage of living in the country, such as wading in the dust and mud without any side walk, with added advantage of paying city taxes.

Farmers and Fruit Growers, Take Notice:

The Advance Cider Mill will be open for custom work, Wednesday, August 19, and close until Wednesday, September 2. It will run every Wednesday after the latter date until November 4. It is one of the best cider mills in the state. H. J. MAIDEN, Proprietor, Advance, Michigan.

Joseph Wolf, aged 67, of Fife Lake committed suicide about 9:00 o'clock Wednesday evening by taking strychnine. He leaves a widow and six children.

Mr. Wolf was of a very jovial disposition and well liked. No reason is known for his rash act, though it was feared for the last few days that he might make the attempt and he had been quite closely watched.

Wednesday evening he held the strychnine in his hand and his family tried to take it from him. He refused to give it up, but promised not to take it. About 9 o'clock in the presence of his family he suddenly swallowed the poison and died two hours later. He was a pioneer and prominent farmer.

Bargains in Used Steinway Pianos.

If you know of anyone who wishes a very good piano at a moderate cost, he will be interested in the fact that just at the present time the well-known music house of Lyon & Healy, Chicago, have a large salesroom entirely filled with used Steinway Uprights. These Steinways embrace a wide variety of styles. All of them, of course, are genuine Steinways and all of them are in fine condition, but there is a great difference in the cost.

Besides these instruments Lyon & Healy are also now offering at a great Triple Clearing Sale, all the pianos formerly owned by the Thompson Music Co., the Henly Music Co. and the big Thearle Piano Co. You can have any of these fine new instruments at 20 to 40 per cent less than usual prices.

These pianos will be sold either for cash or upon very easy monthly payments. Freight on an upright piano is only a matter of a few dollars. All of these instruments are fully guaranteed to be exactly as represented. The opportunity to secure one will undoubtedly be taken advantage of by the shrewd buyers in this vicinity.

A letter to Lyon & Healy, 77 Adams street, will bring full particulars.

Resolutions of Respect.

To the officers and members of White Rose Hive, No. 443.

Your committee, to whom was given the sad duty of drafting resolutions of respect to the memory of our late sister, Mrs. Ruth Beanbian, respectfully submit the following:

Whereas, the angel of death has again entered our hive and taken from us our beloved sister.

Resolved, that while we submit to the inevitable and bow in humble submission to his divine will, we do not the less mourn the untimely death of our worthy sister. There is no fraternity so firmly cemented but that its golden links may be severed by his holy will.

Resolved, that the sincere and heart felt sympathy of this hive be extended to her husband and daughter in this dark hour of bereavement and commend them to the guidance and care of our Heavenly Father, who careth for all.

Resolved, that these resolutions be placed on the record books of our hive, a copy sent to the sorrowing family and that they be published in the Charlevoix paper.

THE LION AND THE MOUSE.

By CHARLES KLEIN.

A Story of American Life Novelized From the Play by ARTHUR HORNBLOW.

CHAPTER VI—Continued.

What an end to his career! To have struggled and achieved for half a century, to have built up a reputation year by year, as a man builds a house brick by brick, only to see the whole crumble to his feet like dust! To have gained the respect of the country, to have made a name as the most incorruptible of public servants, and now to be branded as a common bribe taker! Could he be dreaming? It was too incredible! What would his daughter say—his Shirley? Ah, the thought of the expression of incredulity and wonder on her face when she heard the news cut him to the heart like a knife thrust. Yet, he mused, her very unwillingness to believe it should really be his consolation. Ah, his wife and his child—they knew he had been innocent of wrongdoing. The very idea was ridiculous. At most he had been careless. Yet he was certainly to blame. He ought to have seen the trap so carefully prepared and into which he had walked as if blindfolded. That extra $50,000 worth of stock, on which he had never received a cent interest, had been the decoy in a carefully thought out plot. They, the plotters, well knew how ignorant he was of financial matters, and he had been an easy victim. Who would believe his story that the stock had been sent to him with a plausibly worded letter to the effect that it represented a bonus on his own investment? Now he came to think of it, calmly and reasonably, he would not believe it himself. As usual, he had mislaid or destroyed the secretary's letter, and there was only his word against the company's books to substantiate what would appear a most improbable if not impossible occurrence.

It was his conviction of his own good faith that made his present dilemma all the more cruel. Had he really been a grafter, had he really taken the stock as a bribe, he would not care so much, for then he would have foreseen and discounted the chances of exposure. Yes, there was no doubt possible. He was the victim of a conspiracy; there was an organized plot to ruin him, to get him out of the way. The "interests" feared him, resented his judicial decisions, and they had halted at nothing to accomplish their purpose. How could he fight them back, what could he do to protect himself? He had no proofs of a conspiracy; his enemies worked in the dark; there was no way in which he could reach them or know who they were.

He thought of John Burkett Ryder. Ah, he remembered now! Ryder was the man who had recommended the investment in Alaskan stock. Of course. Why did he not think of it before? He recollected that at the time he had been puzzled at receiving so much stock, and he had mentioned it to Ryder, adding that the secretary had told him it was customary. Oh, why had he not kept the secretary's letter? But Ryder would certainly remember it. He probably still had his two letters in which he spoke of making the investment. If those letters could be produced at the congressional inquiry they would clear him at once, so, losing no time and filled with renewed hope, he wrote to the Colossus a strong, manly letter, which would have melted an iceberg, urging Mr. Ryder to come forward now at this critical time and clear him of this abominable charge, or in any case to kindly return the two letters he must have in his possession, as they would go far to help him at the trial. Three days passed and no reply from Ryder. On the fourth came a polite but frigid note from Mr. Ryder's private secretary. Mr. Ryder had received Judge Rossmore's letter and in reply begged to state that he had a vague recollection of some conversation with the judge in regard to investments, but he did not think he had advised the purchase of any particular stock, as that was even with his most intimate friends. He had no wish to be held accountable in case of loss, etc. As to the letter which Judge Rossmore mentioned as having written to Mr. Ryder in regard to having received more stock than he had bought, of that Mr. Ryder had no recollection whatever. Judge Rossmore was probably mistaken as to the identity of his correspondent. He regretted he could not be of more service to Judge Rossmore and remained his very obedient servant.

It was very evident that no help was to be looked for in that quarter. There was even decided hostility in Ryder's reply. Could it be true that the financier was really behind these attacks upon his character? Was it possible that one man, merely to make more money, would deliberately ruin his fellow man whose hand he had grasped in friendship? He had been unwilling to believe it when his friend ex-Judge Stott had pointed to Ryder as the author of all his misfortunes, but this unsympathetic letter, with its falsehoods, its lies, plainly written all over its face, was proof enough. Yes, there was now no doubt possible. John Burkett Ryder was his enemy, and what an enemy! Many a man had committed suicide when he had incurred the enmity of the Colossus. Judge Rossmore, completely discouraged, bowed his head to the inevitable, but he sent for his old friend ex-Judge Stott.

They were lifelong friends, having become acquainted nearly thirty years ago at the law school, at the time when both were young men about to enter on a public career. Stott, who was Rossmore's junior, had begun as a lawyer in New York and soon acquired a reputation in criminal practice. He afterward became assistant district attorney and later, when a vacancy occurred in the city magistrature, he was successful in securing the appointment. On the bench he again met his old friend Rossmore, and the two men once more became closely intimate. The regular court hours, however, soon palled on a man of Judge Stott's nervous temperament, and it was not long before he retired to take up once more his criminal practice. He was still a young man, not yet fifty, and full of vigor and fight. He had a blunt manner, but his heart was in the right place, and he had a record as clean as his close shaven face. He was a hard worker, a brilliant speaker and one of the cleverest cross examiners at the bar. This was the man to whom Judge Rossmore naturally turned for legal assistance.

Stott was out west when he first heard of the proceedings against his old friend, and this indignity put upon the only really honest man in public life whom he knew, so incensed him that he was already hurrying back to his aid when the summons reached him.

Meantime a fresh and more serious calamity had overwhelmed Judge Rossmore. Everything seemed to combine to break the spirit of this man who had dared defy the power of organized capital. Hardly had the news of the congressional inquiry been made public, than the financial world was startled by an extraordinary slump in Wall street. There was nothing in the news of the day to justify a decline, but prices fell and fell. The bears had it all their own way, the big interests hammered stocks all along the line, "coppers" especially being the object of attack. The market closed feverishly, and the next day the same tactics were pursued. From the opening, on selling orders coming from no one knew where, prices fell to nothing, a stampede followed, and before long it became a panic.

Pandemonium reigned on the floor of the Stock Exchange. While faced dishevele brokers shouted and struggled like men possessed to execute the orders of their clients. Big financial houses which stood to lose millions on a falling market rallied and by rush orders to buy attempted to stem the tide, but all to no purpose. One firm after another went by the board, unable to weather the tempest, until just before closing time the stock ticker announced the failure of the Great Northwestern Mining company. The drive in the market had been principally directed against its securities, and after vainly endeavoring to check the bear raid it had been compelled to declare itself bankrupt. It was heavily involved, assets nil, stock almost worthless. It was probable that the creditors would not see 10 cents on the dollar. Thousands were ruined, and Judge Rossmore among them. All the savings of a lifetime—nearly $75,000—were gone. He was practically penniless at a time when he needed money most. He still owned his house in Madison avenue, but that would have to go to settle with his creditors. By the time everything was paid there would only remain enough for a modest competence. As to his salary, of course he could not touch that so long as this accusation was hanging over his head, and if he were impeached it would stop altogether. The salary, therefore, was not to be counted on. They must manage as best they could and live more cheaply, taking a small house somewhere in the outskirts of the city, where he could prepare his case quietly without attracting attention.

Stott thought this was the best thing they could do, and he volunteered to relieve his friend by taking on his own hands all the arrangements of the sale of the house and furniture, which offer the judge accepted only too gladly. Meantime Mrs. Rossmore went to Long Island to see what could be had, and she found at the little village of Massapequa just what they were looking for—a commodious, neatly furnished two story cottage at a modest rental. Of course it was nothing like what they had been accustomed to, but it was clean and comfortable, and, as Mrs. Rossmore said, rather tactlessly, beggars cannot be choosers. Perhaps it would not be for long. Instant possession was to be had, so a deposit was paid on the spot, and a few days later the Rossmores left their mansion on Madison avenue and took up their residence in Massapequa, where their advent created quite a flutter in local social circles.

Stott was given a room in the cottage so that he might be near at hand to work with the judge in the preparation of the defense, and he came out from the city every evening. It was now June. The senate would not take action until it convened in December, but there was a lot of work to be done and no time to be lost.

The evening following the day of their arrival they were sitting on the porch enjoying the cool evening air after dinner. The judge was smoking. He was not a slave to the weed, but he enjoyed a quiet pipe after meals, claiming that it quieted his nerves and enabled him to think more clearly. Besides, it was necessary to keep at bay the ubiquitous Long Island mosquito. Mrs. Rossmore had remained for a moment in the dining room to admonish Eudoxia, their new and only maid of all work, not to wreck too much of the crockery when she removed the dinner dishes. Suddenly Stott, who was perusing an evening paper, asked:

"By the way, where's your daughter? Does she know of this radical change in your affairs?"

Judge Rossmore started. By what mysterious agency had this man penetrated his own most intimate thoughts? He was himself thinking of Shirley that very moment, and by some inexplicable means—telepathy modern psychologists called it—the thought current had crossed to Stott, whose mind, being in full sympathy, was exactly attuned to receive it. Removing the pipe from his mouth, the judge replied:

"Shirley's in Paris. Poor girl, I hadn't the heart to tell her. She has no idea of what's happened. I didn't want to spoil her holiday."

He was silent for a moment; then after a few more puffs he added confidentially in a low tone, as if he did not care for his wife to hear:

"The truth is, Stott, I couldn't bear to have her return now. I couldn't look my own daughter in the face."

A sound as of a great sob which he had been unable to control cut short his speech. His eyes filled with tears, and he began to smoke furiously, as if ashamed of this display of emotion. Stott, blowing his nose with suspicious vigor, replied soothingly:

"You mustn't talk like that. Everything will come out all right, of course. But I think you are wrong not to have told your daughter. Her place is here at your side. She ought to be told even if only in justice to her. If you don't tell her, some one else will or, what's worse, she'll hear of it through the newspapers."

"Ah, I never thought of that!" exclaimed the judge, visibly perturbed at the suggestion about the newspapers.

"Don't you agree with me?" demanded Stott, appealing to Mrs. Rossmore, who emerged from the house at that instant. "Don't you think your daughter should be informed of what has happened?"

"Most assuredly I do," answered Mrs. Rossmore determinedly. "The judge wouldn't hear of it, but I took the law into my own hands. I've cabled for her."

"You cabled for Shirley?" cried the judge incredulously. He was so unaccustomed to seeing his ailing, vacillating wife do anything on her own initiative and responsibility that it seemed impossible. "You cabled for Shirley?" he repeated.

"Yes," replied Mrs. Rossmore triumphantly and secretly pleased that for once in her life she had asserted herself. "I cabled yesterday. I simply couldn't bear it alone any longer."

"What did you say?" inquired the judge apprehensively.

"I just told her to come home at once. Tomorrow we ought to get an answer."

Stott meantime had been figuring on the time of Shirley's probable arrival. If the cablegram had been received in Paris the previous evening, it would be too late to catch the French boat. The North German Lloyd steamer was the next to leave, and it touched at Cherbourg. She would undoubtedly come on that. In a week at most she would be here. Then it became a question as to who should go to meet her at the dock. The judge could not go, that was certain. It would be too much of an ordeal. Mrs. Rossmore did not know the lower part of the city well and had no experience in meeting ocean steamships. There was only one way out—would Stott go? Of course he would, and he would bring Shirley back with him to Massapequa. So during the next few days while Stott and the judge toiled preparing their case, which often necessitated brief trips to the city, Mrs. Rossmore, seconded with sulky indifference by Eudoxia, was busy getting a room ready for her daughter's arrival.

"By the way, where's your daughter?"

Eudoxia, who came originally from County Cork, was an Irish lady with a thick brogue and a husky temper. She was amiable enough so long as things went to her satisfaction, but when they did not suit her she was a termagant. She was neither beautiful nor graceful; she was not young, nor was she very clean. Her usual condition was disheveled, her face was all askew, and when she dressed up she looked like a valentine. Her greatest weakness was a propensity for smashing dishes, and when reprimanded she would threaten to take her traps and skidoo. This news of the arrival of a daughter filled to fill her with enthusiasm. Firstly, it meant more work; secondly, she had not bargain-

Official Call for Republican State Convention.

To the Republican Electors of the State of Michigan:

The state convention of the Republicans of Michigan is hereby called to meet at the Light Guard armory in the city of Detroit on Tuesday, the 22th day of September, 1908, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon, for the purpose of nominating candidates for state offices, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before the convention.

In accordance with the provisions of law and the action of the Republican state central committee, every county will be entitled to one delegate for each two hundred and fifty of the total vote cast therein for the Republican candidate for secretary of state at the last election and one additional delegate for a majority of 125 votes or more.

Pursuant to law, Tuesday, the 6th day of September, 1908, is hereby designated as the day on which shall be held in each county, the county convention of the Republican party for the election of delegates to the Republican state convention herein called, for the selection of delegates to congressional, senatorial and representative district conventions in such districts as have not adopted the direct voting system, and for the transaction of other business provided for by law or which may otherwise properly come before said county convention.

In counties that have not adopted the direct voting system for the nomination of county officers, delegates to the county convention will be chosen under the caucus system.

Under the resolutions of 1858, no delegate will be entitled to a seat in the state convention who does not reside in the county he proposes to represent.

The delegates from the several counties in each congressional district are requested to meet in district caucus at 9:30 o'clock a. m. on the day of the state convention, and select officers as follows, to be presented to the state convention for confirmation:

1—One Vice President.
2—One Assistant Secretary.
3—One member of the committee on "Credentials."
4—One member of the committee on "Permanent Organization and Order of Business."
5—One member of the committee on "Resolutions."

By order of the Republican state central committee.

H. I. McMILLAN, Secretary.

SHALL IT BE "WE" OR "THEY"?

As the time for the primary election draws near the old line politicians are becoming alarmed over the growth of Warner sentiment, and are endeavoring by multiplying the candidates for nomination to defeat the purpose of the primary law and throw the nomination back into the convention, where the discredited and disreputable methods of the machine politician can again prevail.

The people are acquiring knowledge as to the personality of the men who are opposing the renomination of Governor Warner, and are questioning the underlying motives for this opposition. They doubt the sincerity of the terrible outcry being made over the third term question and the assertions that such a precedent, if established, would be dangerous to the state. The danger of a third term does not appear to them as great as the peril of a candidate whose sponsors are found in the ranks of those opposed to the measures desired by the people, and whose campaign is being promoted and directed by the very forces, whose past methods and attitude have made imperative the reforms they are now trying to nullify and evade.

The people argue that if a majority of the party is competent to choose a nominee for congress, why should they not be competent to select a nominee for governor, and do not discern any reason why the offices of governor and lieutenant governor should be surrounded by a sacredness which applies to no other office, and for which the only basis is the mere vapid asser-tion of recognized foes to the popular demands. They believe that the true reason for the forty per cent clause in the primary law, and the desperate efforts to perpetuate that clause is exposed by the efforts of the machine politicians to increase the number of candidates to an extent which would frustrate the real purpose of direct nominations, and continue the thralldom of the party to the bosses.

The only thing that can prevent the re-nomination of the governor now is the failure of the voters to turn out to the primaries and vote for the man of their choice.

Be sure you are enrolled, and don't fail to cast your vote on September 1; for a full vote means the enthronement of the whole people and the discomfiture of the elements whose wishes if fully realized would make a farce of popular government.

FIRST OF SEPTEMBER

is the Date of the Primary Election—Enrollment August 29.

At the primary election to be held Tuesday, September 1, candidates of all political parties for governor and lieutenant governor will be named by direct vote and in this county, the republican electors will also vote for candidates for representative in congress and state senator.

To take part in this election it will be necessary for all who are already enrolled to do so August 29, when the board of enrollment will be in session, if not convenient to appear before the board in person for enrollment, blanks for the purpose can be secured of any member of the board of enrollment.

Charlevoix Winning Games.

Saturday the Charlevoix ball club met the East Jordan team and in a good game showed them that Charlevoix had gathered a fast bunch together. Monday and Tuesday the fast Manistee club went up against Charlevoix's pride and took Monday's game by a score of 3 to 2. Tuesday, however, Charlevoix again proved the stuff they were made of and when the game was over it was 12 to 6 in favor of the locals. With this class of ball being put up day after day, the management should be congratulated.

THEATRICAL

One of the Best of Its Kind.

One of the best plays of the season, "A Dangerous Friend," will be at the Charlevoix theater Friday evening, August 28.

"A Dangerous Friend" is an American play of a melodramatic character without being coarsely sensational. The interest of the audience is not assaulted with murder, shooting, vile sentiment and exaggerated brutality, but on the contrary is maintained very cleverly with plenty of comedy, natural pathos, genuinely impressive scenes and a group of good characters. Fred G. Conrad, the author, has introduced love and heorish, with triumphant virtue, in live strong and picturesque acts of surpassing vividness. The play comes under the direction of the author and very naturally he has taken especial care in selecting the company to present his drama.

The program at the Laf-a-Lot this week is something in the way of a surprise to theater goers of Charlevoix. There is no doubt that the Utopia Duo are the best musical artists that ever have been seen here and are the hit of the bill at each performance. McDonald and Hoffman, the clever sketch artists, are a close second, as we seldom see a team of people who can change their act each evening and still give the satisfaction these people are this week. The rest of the show is up to the standard including the illustrated song by Miss Browning.

Fagan's Electric theater has begun selling two tickets for five cents. Mr. Fagan says the same high class entertainment will be given as before the price was reduced.

Don't miss Mack, Stoddard and Mack at the Laf-a-Lot all next week.

WOMAN'S MISSIONARY SOCIETY

"Soaring" by Schumann—Miss Jessie Brown.
The glory kindergarten Mrs. A. M. Burdick.
Letter from Miss Julia C. Hocking, Tokyo, Japan—Mrs. A. T. Burnett.
Secretary Taft's views on foreign missions—Mrs. H. R. Fowler.
Offering.
Solo, "Flee as a bird—Mrs. A. L. Coulter.

Don't miss Mack, Stoddard and Mack at the Laf-a-Lot all next week.

Additional Local

A committee on the Carnegie library has been appointed with Dr. Crouter as chairman, and are busy soliciting funds. Several sites are in prospect and the chances are good for success.

The John Harting, who was killed by a boiler explosion on Carp Lake, particulars of which are published on the first page, was a son of John Harting, formerly of this city and a nephew of William Harting Sr., who now lives on the south terrace, and who went to Traverse City, Tuesday, to take the body of his brother to his home at Leland for burial.

H. A. Jersey, who has spent a good portion of his time for the past two or three years in Oklahoma where he has extensive real estate interests, has now purchased a controlling interest in a monthly publication called the "Oklahoma Lawyer." It is a legal periodical devoted entirely to matters in which attorneys are interested and is the only one published in the state. Coulgate is the publication office and Mr. Jersey has already assumed the editorship and management. Mr. Jersey is entirely competent to edit such a paper and his many friends here will predict a successful continuance of the paper.—Boyne City Journal.

WAS IN TOWN MONDAY

Senator Fred R. Ming, Who Seeks a Renomination.

Senator Fred R. Ming, of Cheboygan, was in the city Monday looking after his campaign for renomination. The senator says that he found some opposition to him on account of the change in the senatorial districts, but he thinks it the question is considered, the people will realize that everybody can't be suited in a reapportionment bill. He invites inspection of his record and platform, which is published elsewhere.

Terrifying, Indeed.

An authority upon chemistry was lecturing before a well known woman's club and illustrating his remarks with experiments. All went well until he paused a moment and then said, "I'm very sorry, but I must ask any of the ladies who use face powder containing bismuth to leave the room during this experiment, as the gases I am about to set free have a peculiar affinity for bismuth and turn it purple."

Whereupon the entire audience save three courageous sisters rose and fled from the room.

DO YOU GET UP WITH A LAME BACK?

Kidney Trouble Makes You Miserable

Almost everybody who reads the newspapers is sure to know of the wonderful cures made by Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It is the great medical triumph of the nineteenth century; discovered after years of scientific research by Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, and is wonderfully successful in promptly curing lame back, kidney, bladder, uric acid troubles and Bright's Disease, which is the worst form of kidney trouble.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is not recommended for everything but if you have kidney, liver or bladder trouble it will be found just the remedy you need. It has been tested in so many ways, in hospital work, in private practice, among the helpless too poor to purchase relief and has proved so successful in every case that a special arrangement has been made by which all readers of this paper who have not already tried it, may have a sample bottle sent free by mail, also a book telling more about Swamp-Root and how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. The regular fifty cent and dollar sizes are sold by all good druggists.

Home of Swamp-Root.

Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

NEW JUVENILE COURT LAW

1907) several features of which were thought to be unconstitutional by a great many and finally the attorney general advised the state institutions that the act was unconstitutional and the Reform school at Lansing refused to receive juveniles committed under the act.

At a special session of the legislature, following the adjournment of the regular session in the fall of 1907, the subject was again brought to the attention of the legislature, by a special message from the governor, and the legislature at that special session revised the law passed at the general session and passed a new act, which is number six of the laws of the extra session of 1907 in which those features that were deemed unconstitutional have been largely eliminated and the juvenile court law became an established institution of Michigan upon the adjournment of the extra session.

Under the old law all minors came under the jurisdiction of the justice of the peace, subject only to approval of the probate or circuit judges, and the proceedings were not unlike the proceedings for adult offenders. The child was taken into custody, and in many cases, if delinquent, was confined in the common jails where there were criminals and the like and if he had violated a law he was promptly committed to the reform school or some other penal institution.

The purpose of the present law is to overcome this condition. The juvenile is not arrested. The basis of the proceedings is a petition filed with the probate court, which under the terms of the act a division of said court has been created which is called the juvenile division. Upon the filing of this petition by any person who has suffered by the transgressions of the child or by a public officer or by the parents or guardians of the child the court thereupon notifies the county agent and it then becomes the duty of the county agent to investigate the facts and report them to the court. If, upon the filing of the report of the county agent, it appears that the child is either a dependant or neglected child, he is committed temporarily to the custody of the county agent and if upon further investigation of the facts by the court it is found to be for the best interest of the child it may be committed to the public school at Coldwater or the court may find a permanent home with some charitably inclined people and turn the child over by adoption or otherwise to this home. If, by the petition or upon investigation by the county agent or the court, the child is found to be a delinquent child, that is, it is found that the child has been in the habit of violating the law or is unmanagable or truant, the court may then commit the child to the custody of a probation officer appointed by the court and define the terms of the probation or the court may direct the county agent to act as a probation officer or may act itself. If this is done, the child is usually placed in the care of its parents or guardian and caused to report to the probation officer. A line of conduct may be outlined for the child and it becomes the duty of the probation officers to see that these requirements are being complied with and the salutary effect of the above provision of the law is already discernable. In many instances short periods of probation result in making an unmanagable child managable or in reforming a bad habit commenced which is not a fixed habit. This is done without arrest or imprisonment.

The probate court of this county has been proceeding under this act since the first of November last and has investigated, approximately, twenty cases and out of the twenty cases four have been committed to the reform schools, two boys and two girls. The others have been disposed of in most instances, by remanding them to the custody of their parents or guardians with the request that they report to a probation officer, usually the court itself, and in some instances some one designated by the court. In one or two instances where there have been petty thieving indulged in by a number of boys the offense has been traced to them and all of them have been brought in.

One of the powers given the court is to require in cases of damage or theft that the value of the damage or article stolen shall be made good to the losers by the delinquent and they have been kept on probation for a number of months wherein it has been stipulated that they must refrain from using tobacco and from drinking and it is believed beneficial permanent cures have been brought out. This is also done in a quiet way and the attention of the public is not attracted.

The above is a simple and brief outline of the workings of the law. If your space would permit there is a great deal that might be said upon the various features of the law that would be interesting for the public to know and at some future time I would be interested to discuss separately features of the law.

JOHN M. HARRIS,
Judge of Probate.

Bucklen's Arnica Salve Wins.

Tom Moore, of Rural Route 1, Cochran, Ga., writes: "I had a bad sore come on the instep of my foot and could find nothing that would heal it until I applied Bucklen's Arnica Salve. Less than half of a 25 cent box won the day for me by effecting a perfect cure." Sold under guarantee at F. G. Hines & Co. drug store.

NO GAMBLING, NO LIQUOR.

West Michigan State Fair Will Live up to Established Precedent of Clean Fair.

When the old state fair was held in Grand Rapids, gambling devices of all kinds, including wheels of fortune, were seen on every hand about the grounds, to the great detriment of the fair. Money that was brought to the city for other purposes was diverted from its rightful uses to line the pockets of the gaming concessionaires, the result being most harmful.

When the West Michigan State Fair was organized one of the first things the officials decided upon was to do away with all forms of gambling and make the attempt to conduct a fair without the revenue derived from the sale of these privileges. The attempt was eminently successful, and people manifested so evident an interest in a cleaner fair in preference to the older system, that last year it was determined to prohibit the sale of liquor within the grounds. Though in 1906 the sale of the liquor privilege had added nearly $1,600 to the treasury of the fair, the fair of 1907 was found to be a success without it, and in spite of two days of extremely bad weather.

President William H. Anderson announces that the same policy which resulted in the establishment of a clean fair will govern this year. There will be no gambling, and no liquor will be sold on the grounds of the West Michigan State Fair in Grand Rapids, Sept. 14-18.

THIS YEAR IT WILL BE THE MIDWAY.

The world's fair at Chicago in 1893 named the amusement feature of the big show the Midway. Since that time new names have been coined. The Glade, the Pike, the Wanderlust, etc. have gone their way. Each year when the new name has been coined it has been necessary to educate the people as to its meaning. The word Midway is known to everyone as the amusement row—the place to go for a good time, where something is constantly doing—and that is the name which will be used this year at the state fair.

The location of the Midway this year will be one street south of that of a year ago, being in direct line with the street railway depot, commencing just east of the Administration building. This space was originally intended for the Midway, but, not being easy accessible to the center of the electrical equipment, the shows were located further north.

It should be of interest and satisfaction to the exhibitors of livestock, and to the public as well, to know that during the state fair of 1908 most careful attention will be given to sanitary conditions. Every precaution will be used to see that the grounds are kept in the best of condition, and all places will most thoroughly disinfected. It has been decided to use the celebrated disinfectant "Kreso" for this purpose. The livestock department all stables, pens, barns, ect., for the exhibition animals will be thoroughly disinfected before they are occupied, and a constant supervision in this respect will be carefully given throughout the entire meeting. This will prevent any contagious disease among the stock. It will also destroy all foul odors, making it both healthful and pleasant for the visitors in every respect. This forms a safeguard to the visiting public and to the exhibitors of livestock as well.

STATE BANDS AT THE FAIR.

Arrangements are being made for the engaging of bands to furnish the music at the coming state fair. For some time past the bands from large cities have been engaged, and this year it is very apparent that the money spent for music will go to the bands located in the smaller cities out in the state.

THE MAN FROM MARS.

How Our Modern Capitalism Surprised and Puzzled Him.

And the man from Mars stopped beside a busy field filled with men, most of whom were working hard, while a few seemed to do nothing but eat, drink and make merry.

And as he watched one of those who worked came and lay down by the roadside. And the man from Mars engaged him in conversation.

"What is this I see in the field yonder?" queried the man from Mars.

"That is a community of human beings," replied the workman.

"What are they doing?" pursued the man from Mars.

"They are struggling for existence. Some, you see, are producing, while some are merely consuming."

"Why do they not all produce?" asked the man from Mars.

"Well," replied the workman, "by common consent those who work are entitled to receive back a fair share of what they produce. There are a few among us whom God in his infinite wisdom has appointed to consume what the workers do not get."

"Does it work out all right?" continued the man from Mars.

"Yes, most of the time," answered the workman. "As long as the consumers do their duty the workmen's dinner pails are full, but sometimes even though much is consumed and destroyed by war and otherwise, and even though the many men are taken from the ranks of the producers for the army and navy, it is found that things are produced faster than they are consumed."

"What happens then?" asked the Martian.

"Then we have overproduction," said the workman. "The principal trouble with our system is that the workman suffers most when we have too much. When we have overproduction the consumers who own the land will not allow us to produce any more, and then, as there is no production, we cannot get a fair share of it, and then our dinner pails become empty, and then we have to beg, steal or starve."

"And is the community contented with this arrangement?" queried the man from Mars, arising to depart.

"Well, you see," said the workman, "being a Christian community, we also have ministers who teach us to be meek and humble and content with our lot, and, besides, to change it would be revolutionary, and revolutions are not good unless they have already happened."—Ellis O. Jones in Life.

GUILTY CAPITALISM.

Growth of Socialism Due to Inordinate Greed of Plutocracy.

We suppose our country is "hooked" for Socialism. Greed of speculators is bringing it on. Exploitation of public utilities hurries it forward. Operators everywhere are seizing their opportunity to capitalize the wants of the public, in ways to create great properties and to obtain great dividends. The people believe that the only check to these schemes of plutocracy lies in a Socialist movement, under which the productive forces may be transformed into socialized effort. The Oregonian has not been willing to see this change, but in the contest that is coming, forced by the greed of capitalism and of exploitation, it finds itself compelled to yield to new conditions. In the contest between greed and privilege on the one hand and popular rights on the other it will follow the demands of the people because it belongs to the people. It must stand with them rather than with those who contend for the fictions of privilege and of vested rights. It will take its place in the ranks of the proletariat and struggle with and for the proletariat rather than with or for those who have adopted the modern scheme of capitalizing the needs of the multitude and making the multitude pay dividends on the capitalization. Everything tends toward this new diversion or alignment. It is emphasized by the demand of President Roosevelt for regulation and control of the railroads. It is furthered by efforts everywhere exerted and witnessed in Portland as elsewhere today to capitalize public functions and to turn them to private profit for support of "first families" in luxury and idleness. It is not no issue which this newspaper has sought. Gladly, rather, it would have avoided or averted it. But it is upon us today, and it challenges attention, and tomorrow and next year its demands will be more imperative still. The astonishing growth of it is due to the inordinate greed of a plutocracy which never will admit that it has had enough.—Portland Oregonian.

ed for it. When she took the place it was on the understanding that the family consisted only of an elderly gentleman and his wife, that there was practically no work, good wages, plenty to eat, with the privilege of an evening out when she pleased. Instead of this millennium she soon found Stott stalled as a permanent guest, and now a daughter was to be foisted on her. No wonder hardworking girls were getting sick and tired of housework!

That evening Stott and the judge came home earlier than usual, and from their dejected appearance Mrs. Rossmore divined bad news. The judge was painfully silent throughout the meal, and Stott was unusually grave. Finally the latter took her aside and broke it to her gently. In spite of their efforts and the efforts of their friends the congressional inquiry had resulted in a finding against the judge, and a demand had already been made upon the senate for his impeachment. They could do nothing now but fight it in the senate with all the influence they could muster. It was going to be hard, but Stott was confident that right would prevail. After dinner as they were sitting in silence on the porch, each measuring the force of this blow which they had expected, yet had always hoped to ward off, the crunching sound of a bicycle was heard on the quiet country road. The rider stopped at their gate and came up the porch, holding out an envelope to the judge, who, guessing the contents, had started forward. He tore it open. It was a cablegram from Paris and read as follows:

Am sailing on the Kaiser Wilhelm today.
SHIRLEY.

CHAPTER VII.

THERE was greater activity in the Rossmore cottage at Massapequa than there had been any day since the judge and his wife went to live there. Since daybreak Eudoxia had been scouring and polishing in honor of the expected arrival, and a hundred times Mrs. Rossmore had climbed the stairs to see that everything was as it should be in the room which had been prepared for Shirley. It was not, however, without a passage at arms that Eudoxia consented to consider the idea of an addition to the family. Mrs. Rossmore had said to her the day before:

"My daughter will be here tomorrow, Eudoxia."

A look expressive of both displeasure and astonishment marred the classic features of the hireling. Putting her broom aside and placing her arms akimbo, she exclaimed in an injured tone:

"And it's a daythter you've got now? So it's three in family you are! When I took the place, it's two you tould me there was!"

"Well, with your kind permission," replied Mrs. Rossmore, "there will be three in future. There is nothing in the constitution of the United States that says we can't have a daughter without consulting our help, is there?"

The sarcasm of this reply did not escape even the dull edged wits of the drudge. She relapsed into a dignified silence and a few minutes later was discovered working with some show of enthusiasm.

The judge was nervous and fidgety. He made a pretense to read, but it was plain to see that his mind was not on his book. He kept leaving his chair to go and look at the clock; then he would lay the volume aside and wander from room to room like a lost soul. His thoughts were on the dock at Hoboken.

By noon every little detail had been attended to, and there was nothing further to do but sit and wait for the arrival of Stott and Shirley. They were to be expected any moment now. The passengers had probably got off the steamer by 11 o'clock. It would take at least two hours to get through the customs and out to Massapequa. The judge and his wife sat on the porch counting the minutes and straining their ears to catch the first sound of the train from New York.

"I hope Stott broke the news to her gently," said the judge.

"I wish we had gone to meet her ourselves," sighed his wife.

The judge was silent, and for a moment or two he puffed vigorously at his pipe, as was his habit when disturbed mentally. Then he said:

"I ought to have gone, Martha, but I was afraid. I'm afraid to look my own daughter in the face and tell her that I am a disgraced man, that I am to be tried by the senate for corruption, perhaps impeached and turned off the bench as if I were a criminal. Shirley won't believe it; sometimes I can't believe it myself. I often wake up in the night and think of it as part of a dream, but when morning comes it's still true—it's still true!"

He smoked on in silence. Then happening to look up he noticed that his wife was weeping. He laid his hand gently on hers.

"Don't cry, dear; don't make it harder for me to bear. Shirley must see no trace of tears."

"I was thinking of the injustice of it all," replied Mrs. Rossmore, wiping her eyes.

"Fancy Shirley in this place, living from hand to mouth," went on the judge.

"That's the least," answered his wife. "She's a fine, handsome girl, well educated and all the rest of it. She ought to make a good marriage." No matter what state of mind Mrs. Rossmore might be in, she never lost sight of the practical side of things.

"Hardly with her father's disgrace hanging over her head," replied the judge wearily. "Who," he added, "would have the courage to marry a girl whose father was publicly disgraced?"

Both relapsed into another long silence, each mentally reviewing the past and speculating on the future. Suddenly Mrs. Rossmore started. Surely she could not be mistaken! No, the clanging of a locomotive bell was plainly audible. The train was in. From the direction of the station came people with parcels and hand bags and presently there was heard the welcome sound of carriage wheels crunching over the stones. A moment later they saw coming round the bend in the road a cab piled up with small baggage.

"Here they are! Here they are!" cried Mrs. Rossmore. "Come, Eudoxia!" she called to the servant, while she herself hurried down to the gate. The judge, fully as agitated as herself, only showing his emotion in a different way, remained on the porch, pale and anxious.

The cab stopped at the curb, and Stott alighted, first helping out Mrs.

"Father, father, what have they done to you?"

Blake. Mrs. Rossmore's astonishment on seeing her sister was almost comical.

"Milly!" she exclaimed.

They embraced first and explained afterward. Then Shirley got out and was in her mother's arms.

"Where's father?" was Shirley's first question.

"There—he's coming!"

The judge, unable to restrain his impatience longer, ran down from the porch toward the gate. Shirley, with a cry of mingled grief and joy, precipitated herself on his breast.

"Father, father," she cried between her sobs, "what have they done to you?"

"There, there, my child! Everything will be well—everything will be well!"

Her head lay on his shoulder, and he stroked her hair with his hand, unable to speak from pent up emotion.

A Healing Ministry.

She was a tiny mite of a tenement house baby just recovering from a life and death grapple with that dread disease, pneumonia, but she lifted her pale little face to gaze at the caller, something she had been unable to do a week before.

"Yes, ma'am, she's better though she's still an' peakin'," said the fond mother, smiling proudly from the baby in her arms to the visitor. "I thought one while I was goin' to lose her spite of the doctor an' the nussin', for even after she seemed to mend in some ways she didn't seem to care for anythin' or to take notice of anythin', till father came with the flowers."

"Came with flowers," echoed her listener with interest.

"Yes, ma'am. You see my father's night watchman at a florist's way over in B—," naming a suburb of the big inland city, "and though he's awful fond of the children, he can't get to see them often, cause it's a long way from his home to his work an' back an' he's gettin' old, an' it's late enough when he gets to the house, an' havin' to sleep day times. But when he heard how sick baby was he felt pretty bad an' thought he'd have to come and see her.

"Where he works they give him flowers sometimes, an' sometimes they throw them out the kind that won't sell but father he always gathers them up when they throws them out an' carries them home in his dinner-pail, he's that fond of flowers, father is. So that mornin' they let him have a lot of pinks, a whole handful of pinks, a whole handful of them, an' when he came in through the kitchen door he jest held them out to me.

"I was settin' in this very chair with my baby in my arms, her little white face close up against my bosom, an' her eyes shut tight, though she wasn't sleepin.' That's the way she lay half the time, not knowin' nothin'. An' father, he crept up close an' looked at her, his lip a-tremblin', an he held out the flowers to me an' I took them, a great big bunch of pinks, all I could get my hand 'round. An' when I took them, baby she opened her eyes, languid-like, feelin' me sir—an' she see them, an' she jest lifted her poor little head an' bent it forward an' buried her little white face in them flowers an' lay there just as if she was drinkin' all the sweets of them in.

"I looked at father an' he at me, an' his eyes was full of tears. She had been lying for all the world like a dead child for days, not eatin' or smilin' till she see them flowers; an' then, ma'am!—why if you could have seen the cunnin'-like way of her jest burying her face in them flowers, an' layin' there among them as if they was exactly what she wanted, you'd a cried yourself, as father an' I did. An' if you'll believe me, she seemed to pick up from that day. She's been better ever since."

For nearly forty years New Discovery has stood at the head of throat and lung remedies. As a preventive of pneumonia, and healer of weak lungs it has no equal. Sold under guarantee at F. G. Vote for FRANCIS H. DODDS for Congress

Mr. Dodds stands best at home, where he is best known. He is not an office holder by profession, and is a man who can be depended upon to put principle first, rather than follow the dictates of any party "boss." He is a clean man, who as a representative will grow in favor, and if he shall be selected, the people of this district will be as ably represented in the nation's council as any district under the flag. As congressman, his characteristics would place him in the class of those who will lead and direct rather than follow as a boss might dictate. If you want a congressman in office to help put through any questionable measures, you will do well to skip Dodds. He isn't that kind. But if you want the Eleventh Michigan district to be a power in shaping national legislation, you can do no better in September than cast your vote for Frank H. Dodds.—Isabella County Republican. Courier Grange Column

Deer Lake Grange No. 1269.

Deer Lake Grange met in regular session August 15, with sixteen in attendance and was called to order by Worthy Master H. O. Barber.

Bill of Frank Nelson for $1.50 for line fence allowed.

Discussion on the oat crop resulted in the decision that they are the best crop this year their has been in the past five years.

Brother H. J. Korthase announced that if it doesn't rain soon the potato crop will be very light.

Attendance was small on account of the busy time.

Barnard Grange No. 986.

Barnard Grange assembled at the hall Wednesday, August 12, and was called to order by the worthy master, who filled the vacant officers chairs by appointment.

Secretary read a communication from the state master.

Brother Oldham gave twenty-five select pieces on his phonograph, which were delightful. It was decided not to have a plowing match this year.

Every member, who is insured in the Grange Mutual, is requested to be present at the next meeting September 9.

After refreshments were served by the ladies, the grange closed in form.

Maple Grove Grange No. 1255.

Met in regular session August 18, and was opened in regular form by Worthy Master Wooden. Sister Howe resigned as lecturer and sister Wooden was appointed to fill vacancy.

Lecturer's hour consisted of readings and songs. Number of members present twenty-seven, visitors one. Next meeting September 1. A full attendance is desired.

Don't forget the picnic August 29. A splendid program has been arranged. There will be addresses by prominent grange workers, athletic sports and dancing both afternoon and evening.

HELD SUCCESSFUL MEETING

Baptist Summer Assembly at Cadillac Heavy Increase in Value.

The Northern Michigan Baptist Assembly, which was held on the shore of Lake Mitchell, near Cadillac, came to a successful close Sunday evening. The meetings were well attended and the addresses and sermons were inspiring. The prospect is good for a larger crowd and a stronger program next season.

A local organization has purchased the adjoining property and a boulevard will be constructed around the lake which will make all the property around that lake beautiful and valuable.

The Baptist Association sold considerable stock at their meeting and the enterprise has a good prospect for the future.

Rev. F. H. Bayles, of this city, is a member of the board of directors.

Fisk Quartet Monday Evening.

The Fisk Quartet of Nashville, Tenn., will give one of their delightful entertainments at the Charlevoix Theater Monday evening, August 24. It will be remembered that the quartet was here one year ago, and all who heard them were enthusiastic in their praise. They are beyond doubt the finest colored singers in the world and no one should miss the opportunity to hear them. The dialect readings of Mr. Myers gives a delightful variety to the concert. The readings are taken from Paul Laurence Dunbar, and Mr. Myers has the reputation of being the best of all Mr. Dunbar's interpreters.

Tickets to any part of the house including reserve seat may be secured at the Ivy drug store for 35 cents. Reserve seat board open Friday morning at nine o'clock. Entertainment will commence at 8:00 o'clock.

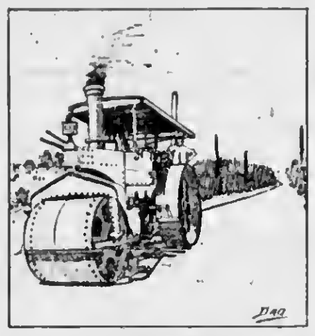
ROLLER ARMED WITH SPIKES.

Machine That Rips Up a Road For Repair Work.

A big machine has been at work on the roadway at the north end of Lincoln park, in Chicago. It is a monster steam roller, with a double row of spikes in one of the wheels, and the function of the contrivance is to loosen up the old material in the roadway, preparatory to covering it with a fresh coating of crushed stone. As the wide tired wheel rolls on the roadway the spikes sink in the old stone material that has hardened from many years' wear. This serves to loosen the material, so that when the fresh supply of crushed stone is applied it may be forced down into the old bed by running an ordinary steam roller over it. The spikes are removable, so that the wheel may be used also for a packing grist.



NEW ROAD MACHINE.

Scores of persons gather around the big sharp toothed crusher and ask all kinds of questions. When the puncher has been rolled along the road until the rows of holes reach the width of the driveway it presents the appearance of a sheet of perforated postage stamps, and the whole operation has to be explained for the benefit of the onlookers.

GOOD ROAD CONGRESS.

Purpose and Features of the International Gathering at Paris.

Colonel Charles S. Bromwell, Clifford Richardson and William Page have been appointed by President Roosevelt to represent the United States at the International road congress to be held in Paris during October, 1908.

Napoleon was a great advocate of road building, and since his time France has spent between $500,000,000 and $600,000,000 on her highways. The advent of the automobile has proved a serious menace to the surface of the roads, and the purpose of this congress is to hear opinions of experts on the subject and to condense them into a practical idea of the treatment and care of the surface of a road.

This congress, to which the governments of the various nations have been officially invited to appoint representatives, will be opened Oct. 11 and will be in session seven days.

It is proposed during the life of the congress to give several festivals in Paris and also excursions, one particularly to Nice, to enable the members to visit especially fitted up roads or roads in course of preparation.

The United States government has made several tests at Washington lately, principally by taking photographs of the clouds of dust raised by each automobile, going at different rates of speed at from five to sixty miles an hour. These dust clouds were weighed in order to determine how much of the surface of the road was taken off by a motor going at an excessive rate of speed. This point and a number of others which have been ascertained by the government of the United States undoubtedly will be brought to the attention of the congress by one of the American representatives, and it is more than likely that Colonel Bromwell will read a paper.

SPLIT LOG DRAG EFFECTIVE.

Heavy Rains Give Implement a Fine Chance to Prove Itself.

The heavy fall of rain that the Red river valley and northern Minnesota experienced recently proves beyond doubt the extreme efficacy of the split log drag as a good roadmaker. The streets of Thief River Falls and many of the rural highways leading into the city have been consistently worked by these drags for two years. The results were most apparent and striking the other week, just following the heavy rains.

In spite of the amount of traffic that the streets of Thief River Falls carry daily, they are in excellent condition, nicely graded and as hard as a paved street. The country roads that have been dragged for two years are as passable as during the driest season in summer, while the roads that have not been worked by the drags are almost impassable.

The Human Lungs.

At birth respiration is at the rate of 44 o inhuits; at five years, 26; at fifteen to twenty years, 20; at twenty to twenty-five years, 18.7; at twenty-five to thirty years, 16; at thirty to fifty years, 18.1.

A man of ordinary size inhales at rest 33.6 cubic inches of air; walking one mile an hour, 52; two miles, 60; three miles, 75; four miles, 91.

The total amount of air passing through the lungs in twenty-four hours is from 686,000 to 1,568,390 cubic inches, according to activity.

The vital capacity of a man five feet to five feet one inch is 174 cubic inches of air; five feet one inch to five feet two inches, 182 cubic inches, and so on.

New Constitution Endorsed.

At the meeting of the executive committee of the state grange held at Lansing last week, the following resolution was unanimously adopted: "That while the new proposed constitution falls short in some particulars, we believe that, as a whole, it more nearly meets the needs of the state at present than the old one, and we therefore favor its adoption."

He Obeyed Orders.

A ranchman noticed a small bunch of teal that were in the habit of using a pond not far from his dwelling. He requested Legrand to try his luck with them the next morning when they could be easily found. Legrand, however, was short of ammunition, so the ranchman gave him a shell, which he jokingly remarked was enough for a good shot and he expected him to come back with the whole bunch, numbering six. On the ensuing day Legrand departed before sunrise, but returned to breakfast empty-handed. "No ducks, Legrand?" He shook his head. "No ducks." The next morning the result was the same. "No ducks, Legrand?" "No ducks."

The third morning a shot was heard. Legrand returned with three beautiful blue winged teal hanging from each shoulder.

"Legrand, how did you manage to have so much luck all of a sudden when you were not able to get anything the two preceding mornings?"

"Today," he replied, "was the first time I could get them lined up so that I could bag them all at one shot."—Forest and Stream.

REPRESENTATIVE JAS. H. MONROE

Answers the Attacks on Mr. Covell's Official Career.

By the Records Shows He Was Not a Member of the Immortal Nineteen as Charged

ROOSEVELT A FRIEND

To the Voters of the Eleventh Congressional District of Michigan:

My attention has recently been called to certain articles appearing in some newspapers in this district relative to the legislative record of the Hon. George G. Covell of Traverse City, now a candidate for the nomination as a member of congress from this district, and as having led experience as a member of the Michigan legislature through four sessions [illegible]

HON. GEORGE G. COVELL

[illegible] and as an interested long-standing member of the state grange, and the associations of which we are told the farmers usually exist, have taken the pains to review Mr. Covell's actions as shown by the records.

I find in relation to the claim that he was a member of what is known as the "Immortal Nineteen," that such so-called organization did not exist, nor was it known until after Mr. Covell ceased to be a member of either branch of the Michigan legislature.

The claim is further made that Mr. Covell opposed the repeal of the Michigan Central special charter, and I find from an investigation of the record that this bill did not come up for consideration at any time during the time Mr. Covell was a member of either branch of the legislature. Duty was in the hands of the committee on railroads up to the time of the final adjournment of the regular session of 1897, but that said bill came up before the special session called by the late Governor Pingree. At the time of the extra session Mr. Covell had ceased to be a member of that body by tendering his resignation to the lieutenant governor on the 20th day of March, 1897, and that the late James W. Matthews, did on the 12th day of April following take his seat as a member of that body from the twenty-seventh senatorial district.

Richard Lewis, in the office of county clerk, has demonstrated a carefulness in safeguarding the interests of the county. Is a strong man among the farmers.

Daniel S. Payton during his two terms as treasurer has made a record as one of the best officers in the state. Is always ready to give information to the people who say they can't afford to let him leave the public service.

Romeo A. Emery now serving his first term as register of deeds, has long been a party worker and is a careful, painstaking official. Will have no opposition and probably will be Charlevoix's only candidate.

A. B. Nicholas has been prosecuting attorney previously, where he gave entire satisfaction. Is an able attorney and would make a good man in the position.

The other gentlemen are all well qualified for the different positions.

ANNUAL SUMMER INSTITUTE

Of Charlevoix County Teachers at Charlevoix Next Week.

A Program [illegible] Mrs. [illegible] Delegates Can Attend [illegible]

Last [illegible] Michigan [illegible] August 24, [illegible]

[illegible] of Charlevoix county [illegible]

The annual summer institute will convene in Charlevoix on Monday morning, August 24, at 8 o'clock a. m. and will continue for one week.

Many teachers have been unable to attend the institutes which have been held earlier in the summer on account of their attendance at summer schools, or other engagements. Coming as it does this year, just the week prior to the opening of the school term, it would seem that no very good reason could be offered for non attendance.

Supt. Woodbey, of Charlevoix, and Miss Jessie M. Haines, Principal of the normal training school, will have charge of the program.

Particular attention will be given to methods of teaching and the general management of the school.

Teachers are benefited by the association with each other, and by the discussion of plans.

In this institute we expect that you will take part, and that each will profit by the experience of the other.

Each teacher in the county will be expected to attend, and it is hoped that every one will take part in the discussions.

Very little time will be taken for academic work, but instead, every effort will be made to strengthen the teacher's ability in presenting a subject to a class.

The state department expresses the opinion, and educators everywhere endorse it, that no teacher who is loyal to her profession will fail to attend teachers' meetings.

Wages are being advanced, and the standard of the teacher is being raised, and the teacher who fails to take an interest in the things pertaining to her profession will soon find herself out of the profession.

Plan to be in Charlevoix on Monday morning at 10 o'clock and to remain for every session.

The expense will not be very high, and you will carry to work many helpful suggestions.

Respectfully,

J. H. MILLOKER

GREAT DAY FOR CHARLEVOIX

Will be the Annual Picnic in Honor of the Sugar Beet.

DURING SECOND WEEK IN SEPTEMBER

Board of Commerce are Arranging for a Grand Celebration.

Citizens are Contributing Liberally, Prizes Offered, Splendid Opportunities to Merchants.

As the time for the annual sugar beet picnic draws nearer the Board of Commerce is receiving additional matter, in which everybody in Charlevoix should take an interest, and at a meeting of the board of directors, held August 22, the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved, that the Chairman appoint a committee of five to arrange for the charge of, and award suitable prizes for the exhibits of the annual harvest picnic at the sugar factory and city," and the following committee was named:

R. A. Emery, A. J. Dunn, E. H. Ward, Thomas Simpson, L. W. Conklin.

The committee to name at this time the election of A. J. Dunn secretary and E. W. Conklin treasurer.

At a meeting of the committee held last night, it was reported that contributions were coming in liberally and the following prizes were announced. A prizes of $15 to the farmer bringing in the largest load of children under 15 years of age, children to be counted at the bridge. A sack of candy to all children in largest load taking part in contest.

Further contests are being arranged and will be announced next week as well as the date.

In the southern portion of the state these picnics are taken advantage of by the merchants, who make it a bargain day, and offer some bargain in their line and make it not only a holiday, but a money-saving day for the hundreds of farmers who attend. It is hoped that Charlevoix merchants will take advantage of the opportunity.

THE RECORD OF GEORGE G. COVELL

Shown Up to the People, in Its True Color.

BY HON. PERRY F. POWERS, CADILLAC

Former Auditor General of the State of Michigan.

Mr. Powers Lives in Wexford, the Next County to Covell's and Knows Him Well.

Former Auditor General Perry F. Powers, in the last issue of the Cadillac News and Express, shows up George Covell just as he is. Read what he says:

It is reported that Hon. George Covell was greatly displeased over references to some phases of his legislative record. It is quite likely it all he was. All of our readers may well know who George Covell is and what he is now doing. He was a member of the lower house of the state legislature for several years, was a state senator from the [illegible] district for one term, was district attorney for ten years or more, and is now in the midst of his third attempt to have the [illegible] beams of the eleventh congressional district nominate him [illegible]

It has been stated in this paper and the statement is there [illegible] deliberately repeated that the Covell record as a whole [illegible] shows him to be unworthy of the high honor he now seeks. We are confident that if the republicans of the district will look up his record they will not vote for him. He voted to prevent the repeal of the Michigan Central charter. The repeal of that charter, which have opened the way, five years before it was accomplished, for the taxation of Michigan railroads on the property basis on which they are now being taxed. The record of the vote to which we refer can be found on page 1508 of the second volume of the senate journal of 1897. Covell's vote was in the interests of the Michigan Central railroad and against the interests of the people of Michigan. Mr. Covell will not deny that. He knew it at the time. Not one dollar of all the added millions that have come to the primary school fund of our state through railroad taxes would have been added had Covell remained in the state senate and continued to successfully vote as he did on the 25th day of

NO ONE DEFENDS KEYES.

"Boxer" Senator, Whose Record Warner Attacked, Is Without a Defender.

The utter defenselessness of the "boxer" senators in a primary campaign was never better illustrated than by the recent attack made by Governor Warner upon "Boxer" Senator Keyes of the Barry-Eaton district for his misrepresentation of his constituents on every important issue before the last legislature. To date not a single voice in defense of "Boxer" Keyes has been heard, not even that of Dr. J. B. Bradley, who lives in Keyes' district and whose personal friend and supporter Keyes is. This is especially noteworthy, since Governor Warner concluded his arraignment of Senator Keyes with a challenge directed at Bradley to come out in defense of Keyes' course in the senate if he dared.

The attack upon Keyes and the challenge to the opposition to defend him if it dares constitutes the greatest coupe de etat of the campaign. It puts Warner's principal opponent, Bradley, in a most uncomfortable and trying position. The latter dare not go to his friend's support and defense, since that involves a defense of Keyes' course in the legislature, where he worked and voted against policies which have the well nigh universal support of public opinion in Michigan. On the other hand, he cannot join Warner in denouncing Keyes' record without laying himself open to the charge of political ingratitude, since Bradley was chiefly responsible for Keyes' election to the senate. Such a course would also still further alienate from him practically the only organized support he is receiving, that of the "boxer" element in Michigan. Warner certainly has put Bradley in a bad hole, from which escape seems impossible.

As the campaign progresses Warner is demonstrating more and more his skill and astuteness as a political leader. He not only champions policies which are popular with the masses, but he has so managed his campaign as to emphasize the weakness and vulnerability of his opponent. So successful has he been in this feature of his campaign and so so unpopular have the "boxer" element become that even the single newspaper of influence in the state actively opposing Warner's renomination has been compelled to turn its back upon the "boxers" and join the governor in denouncing them.

Literary Notes

Womans' Home Companion for September.

"The most beautiful queen on any throne," that is what Kellogg Durland calls the Empress of Russia, in his great series of articles, entitled 'The Romance of the Empress," which begins in the Woman's Home Companion for September. Mr. Durland, who is the author of "The Red Reign," spent a year in Russia, getting together all the facts of the romantic and sad life of the most powerful queen in the world.

In this issue Irving Bacheller begins a new series of Cricket Tales, which bids fair to be even more popular than was his famous "Eben Holden."

Other stories are "The Golden Wedding," by Alice Brown; "The Derelict," by Juliet Wilbor Tompkins; "The Girl in the Mirror," by Hulbert Footner; "Dare You to Love Me?" by Annie Hamilton Donnell, and "The Minister's Barrels," by Hettie Bosley Goldrick.

Jack London on his trip around the world which he is making for the Woman's Home Companion in his little boat, the Snark, has stopped long enough to send the magazine from far-off Tahiti a description of "The Nature Man" whom he ran across in that distant Pacific island.

Jean Webster, who wrote "When Patty Went to College," has been in Japan and tells in the September number how she, with three or four girl friends, set up housekeeping in "The House of Wisteria Water."

Paderewski has selected for Companion readers the best program of modern Polish music, which is accompanied by the full music of the most beautiful of the numbers in the great pianist's program: "Stojowski's Folk Dance."

The September number is the great Fall Fashion Number of Woman's Home Companion, and contains many things of interest for every woman.

THE LION AND THE MOUSE.

Mrs. Beissmore could not recover from her stupefaction on seeing her sister. Mrs. Blake explained that she had come chiefly for the benefit of the voyage and announced her intention of returning on the same steamer.

"So, you see, I shall bother you only a few days," she said.

"You'll stay just as long as you wish," rejoined Mrs. Rossmore. "Happily we have just one bedroom left." Then, turning to Eudoxia, who was wrestling with the baggage, which formed a miniature Matterhorn on the sidewalk, she gave instructions:

"Eudoxia, you'll take this lady's baggage to the small bedroom adjoining Miss Shirley's. She is going to stop with us for a few days."

Taken completely aback at the news of this new addition, Eudoxia looked at first defiance. She seemed on the point of handing in her resignation there and then. But evidently she thought better of it, for, taking a cue from Mrs. Rossmore, she asked in the sarcastic manner of her mistress:

"Four is it now, m'm? I suppose the constitootion of the United States allows a family to be as big as one likes to make it. It's hard on us girls, but if it's the law, it's all right, m'm. The more the merrier!" With which broadside she hung the bags all over herself and staggered off to the house.

Stott explained that the larger pieces and the trunks would come later by express. Mrs. Rossmore took him aside while Mrs. Blake joined Shirley and the judge.

"Did you tell Shirley?" asked Mrs. Rossmore. "How did she take it?"

"She knows everything," answered Stott, "and takes it very sensibly. We shall find her of great moral assistance in our coming fight in the senate," he added confidently.

Realizing that the judge would like to be left alone with Shirley, Mrs. Rossmore invited Mrs. Blake to go upstairs and see the room she would have, while Stott said he would be glad of a washup. When they had gone Shirley sidled up to her father in her old familiar way.

"I've just been longing to see you, father," she said. She turned to get a good look at him, and, noticing the lines of care which had deepened during her absence, she cried: "Why, how you've changed! I can scarcely believe it's you. Say something. Let me hear the sound of your voice, father."

The judge tried to smile.

"Why, my dear girl, I"—

Shirley threw her arms round his neck.

"Ah, yes, now I know it's you," she cried.

"Of course it is, Shirley, my dear girl. Of course it is. Who else would it be?"

"Yes, but it isn't the same," insisted Shirley. "There is no ring to your voice. It sounds hollow and empty, like an echo. And this place," she added dolefully, "this awful place"—

She glanced around at the cracked ceilings, the cheaply papered walls, the shabby furniture, and her heart sank as she realized the extent of their misfortune. She had come back prepared for the worst, to help win the fight for her father's honor, but to have to struggle against sordid poverty as well, to endure that humiliation in addition to disgrace—ah, that was something she had not anticipated! She changed color, and her voice faltered. Her father had been closely watching for just such signs, and he read her thoughts.

"It's the best we can afford, Shirley," he said quietly. "The blow has been complete. I will tell you everything. You shall judge for yourself. My enemies have done for me at last."

"Your enemies?" cried Shirley eagerly. "Tell me who they are so I may go to them."

"Yes, dear, you shall know everything, but not now. You are tired after your journey. Tomorrow sometime Stott and I will explain everything."

"Very well, father, as you wish," said Shirley gently. "After all," she added in an effort to appear cheerful, "what matter where we live so long as we have each other?"

She drew away to hide her tears and left the room on pretense of inspecting the house. She looked into the dining room and kitchen and opened the cupboards, and when she returned there were no visible signs of trouble in her face.

"It's a cute little house, isn't it?" she said. "I've always wanted a little place like this all to ourselves. Oh, if you only knew how tired I am of New York and its great ugly houses, its retinue of servants and its domestic and social responsibilities! We shall be able to live for ourselves now, eh, father?"

She spoke with a forced gayety that might have deceived any one but the judge. He understood the motive of her sudden change in manner, and silently he blessed her for making his burden lighter.

"Yes, dear, it's not bad," he said. "There's not much room, though."

"There's quite enough," she insisted. "Let me see." She began to count on her fingers. "Upstairs, three rooms, eh, and above that three more"—

"No," smiled the judge; "then comes the roof."

"Of course," she laughed; "how stupid of me—a nice gable roof, a sloping roof that the rain runs off beautifully. Oh, I can see that this is going to be awfully jolly—just like camping out. You know how I love camping out. And you have a piano too."

She went over to the corner where stood one of those homely instruments which hardly deserve to be dignified by the name piano, with a cheap, gaudily painted case outside and a tin pan effect inside, and which are usually to be found in the poorer class of country boarding houses. Shirley sat down and ran her fingers over the keys, determined to like everything.

"It's a little old," was her comment, "but I like these zither effects. It's just like the sixteenth century spinet. I can see you and mother dancing a stately minuet," she smiled.

"What's that about mother dancing?" demanded Mrs. Rossmore, who at that instant entered the room. Shirley arose and appealed to her:

"Isn't it absurd, mother, when you come to think of it, that anybody should accuse father of being corrupt and of having forfeited the right to be judge? Isn't it still more absurd that we should be helpless and dejected and unhappy because we are on Long Island instead of Madison avenue? Why should Manhattan Island be a happier spot than Long Island? Why shouldn't we be happy anywhere? We have each other, and we do need each other. We never knew how much till today, did we? We must stand by each other now. Father is going to clear his name of this preposterous charge, and we're going to help him, aren't we, mother? We're not helpless just because we are women. We're going to work, mother and I."

"Work?" echoed Mrs. Rossmore, somewhat scandalized.

"Work," repeated Shirley very decisively.

The judge interfered. He would not hear of it.

"You work, Shirley? Impossible!"

"Why not? My book has been selling well while I was abroad. I shall probably write others. Then I shall write, too, for the newspapers and magazines. It will add to our income."

"Your book, 'The American Octopus,' is selling well?" inquired the judge, interested.

"So well," replied Shirley, "that the publishers wrote me in Paris that the fourth edition was now on the press. That means good royalties. I shall soon be a fashionable author. The publishers will be after me for more books, and we'll have all the money we want. Oh, it is so delightful, this novel sensation of a literary success!" she exclaimed with glee. "Aren't you proud of me, dad?"

The judge smiled indulgently. Of course he was glad and proud. He always knew his Shirley was a clever girl. But by what strange fatality, he thought to himself, had his daughter in this book of hers assailed the very man who had encompassed his own ruin? It seemed like the retribution of heaven. Neither his daughter nor the financier was conscious of the fact that each was indirectly connected with the impeachment proceedings. Ryder could not dream that "Shirley Green," the author of the book which flayed him so mercilessly, was the daughter of the man he was trying to crush. Shirley, on the other hand, was still unaware of the fact that it was Ryder who had lured her father to his ruin.

When at last she could lock herself in her room where no eye could see her, Shirley threw herself down on the bed and burst into a torrent of tears. She had kept up appearances as long as it was possible, but now the reaction had set in. She gave way freely to her pent up feelings; she felt that unless she could relieve herself in this way her heart would break. She had been brave until now, she had been strong to bear everything and see everything, but she could not keep it up forever. Stott's words to her on the dock had in part prepared her for the worst; he had told her what to expect at home, but the realization was so much more vivid. Then to have come to this all in the brief space of a few months! It was incredible, terrible, heart rending! And what of the future? What was to be done to save her father from this impeachment which she knew well would hurry him to his grave? He could not survive that humiliation, that degradation. He must be saved in the senate, but how—how?

She dried her eyes and began to think. Surely her woman's wit would find some way. She thought of Jefferson. Would he come to Massapequa? It was hardly probable. He would certainly learn of the change in their circumstances, and his sense of delicacy would naturally keep him away for some time even if other considerations less unselfish did not. Perhaps he would be attracted to some other girl he would like as well and who was not burdened with a tragedy in her family. Her tears began to flow afresh until she hated herself for being so weak while there was work to be done to save her father. She loved Jefferson. Yes, she had never felt so sure of it as now. She felt that if she had him there at that moment she would throw herself in his arms, crying: "Take me, Jefferson—take me away—where you will—for I love you! I love you!" But Jefferson was not there, and the rickety chairs in the tiny bedroom and the cheap prints on the walls seemed to gibe at her in her misery.

Suddenly she thought of Jefferson's promise to interest his father in their case, and she clutched at the hope this promise held out as a drowning man clutches at a drifting straw. Jefferson would not forget his promise, and he would come to Massapequa to tell her of what he had done. She was sure of that. Perhaps, after all, there was where their hope lay. Why had she not told her father at once? It might have relieved his mind. John Hurkett Ryder, the Colossus, the man of unlimited power! He could save her father, and he would. And the more she thought about it the more cheerful and more hopeful she became, and she started to dress quickly, so that she might hurry down to tell her father the good news. She was actually sorry now that she had said so many hard things of Mr. Ryder in her book, and she was worrying over the thought that her father's case might be seriously prejudiced if the identity of the author were ever revealed, when there came a knock at her door. It was Eudoxia.

"Please, miss, will you come down to lunch?"

CHAPTER VII.

A WHIRLING maelstrom of human activity and dynamic energy—the city which above all others is characteristic of the genius and virility of the American people—New York, with its congested polyglot population and teeming millions, is assuredly one of the busiest, as it is one of the most strenuous and most noisy places on earth. Yet, despite its swarming streets and crowded shops, ceaselessly thronged with men and women eagerly hurrying here and there in the pursuit of business or elusive pleasure, all chattering, laughing, shouting amid the deafening, multitudinous roar of traffic incidental to Gotham's daily life, there is one part of the great metropolis where there is no bustle, no noise, no crowd, where the streets are empty even in daytime, where a passerby is a curiosity and a child a phenomenon. This deserted village in the very heart of the big town is the millionaires' district, the boundaries of which are marked by Carnegie hill on the north, Fiftieth street on the south, and by Fifth and Madison avenues respectively on the west and east. There is nothing more mournful than the outward aspect of these princely residences which, abandoned and empty for three-quarters of the year, stand in stately loneliness, as if ashamed of their isolation and utter uselessness. Their blinds drawn, affording no hint of life within, enveloped the greater part of the time in the stillness and silence of the tomb, they appear to be under the spell of some baneful curse. No merry voiced children romp in their carefully railed off gardens; no sounds of conversation or laughter come from their hermetically closed windows, not a soul goes in or out; at most, at rare intervals, does one catch a glimpse of a gorgeously arrayed servant gliding about in ghostly fashion, supercilious and suspicious and addressing the chance visitor in awed whispers as though he were the guardian of a house of affliction. It is, indeed, like a city of the dead.

So it appeared to Jefferson as he walked up Fifth avenue, bound for the Ryder residence, the day following his arrival from Europe. Although he still lived at his father's house, for at no time had there been an open rupture, he often slept in his studio, finding it more convenient for his work, and there he had gone straight from the ship. He felt, however, that it was his duty to see his mother as soon as possible; besides he was anxious to fulfill his promise to Shirley and find what his father could do to help Judge Rossmore. He had talked about the case with several men the previous evening at the club, and the general impression seemed to be that, guilty or innocent, the judge would be driven off the bench.

Europe, thought Jefferson as he strode quickly along, pointed with envy to America's unparalleled prosperity, spoke with bated breath of her great fortunes. Rather should they say her gigantic robberies, her colossal frauds! As a nation we were not proud of our multimillionaires. How many of them would bear the searchlight of investigation? Would his own father? How many millions could one man make by honest methods? America was enjoying unprecedented prosperity not because of her millionaires, but in spite of them. The United States owed its high rank in the family of nations to the country's vast natural resources, its inexhaustible vitality, its great wheatfields, the industrial and mechanical genius of its people. It was the plain American citizen who had made the greatness of America; not the millionaires who, forming a class by themselves of unscrupulous capitalists, had created an arrogant oligarchy which sought to rule the country by corrupting the legislature and the judiciary. The plutocrats—these were the leeches, the sores in the body politic. An organized band of robbers, they had succeeded in dominating legislation and in securing control of every branch of the nation's industry, crushing mercilessly and illegally all competition.

Jefferson turned abruptly and went up the wide steps of an imposing white marble edifice which took up the space of half a city block. A fine example of French renaissance architecture, with spire roofs, round turrets and multitudinous windows dominating the neighboring houses, this magnificent home of the plutocrat, with its furnishings and art treasures, had cost John Hurkett Ryder nearly $10,000,000. It was one of the show places of the Official Call for Republican State Convention.

To the Republican Electors of the State of Michigan:

The state convention of the Republicans of Michigan is hereby called to meet at the Light Guard Armory in the city of Detroit on Tuesday, the 29th day of September, 1908, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon, for the purpose of nominating candidates for state officers, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before the convention.

In accordance with the provisions of law and the action of the Republican state central committee, every county will be entitled to one delegate for each two hundred and fifty of the total vote cast therein for the Republican candidate for secretary of state at the last election and one additional delegate for a majority of 125 votes or more.

Pursuant to law, Tuesday, the 8th day of September, 1908, is hereby designated as the day on which shall be held in each county, the county convention of the Republican party for the election of delegates to the Republican state convention hereby called, for the selection of delegates to congressional, senatorial and representative district conventions in such districts as have not adopted the direct voting system, and for the transaction of other business provided for by law or which may otherwise properly come before said county convention.

In counties that have not adopted the direct voting system for the nomination of county officers, delegates to the county convention will be chosen under the caucus system.

Under the resolutions of 1858, no delegate will be entitled to a seat in the state convention who does not reside in the county he proposes to represent.

The delegates from the several counties in each congressional district are requested to meet in district caucus at 9:30 o'clock a. m. on the day of the state convention, and select officers as follows, to be presented to the state convention for confirmation:

1—One Vice-President.
2—One Assistant Secretary.
3—One member of the committee on "Credentials."
4—One member of the committee on "Permanent Organization and Order of Business."
5—One member of the committee on "Resolutions."

By order of the Republican state central committee.

GERRIT J. DIEKEMA, Chairman.
DENNIS E. ALWARD, Secretary.
Grand Rapids, July 29, 1908.

Charlevoix county is entitled to seven delegates.

Republican County Convention

To the Republican Electors of the County of Charlevoix:

You are hereby notified that there will be a Republican County Convention held at the Court House, in the city of Charlevoix, Charlevoix county, Michigan, on Tuesday, the 8th day of September, A. D. 1908, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, for the following purposes:

To elect seven delegates to the Republican state convention to be held in the city of Detroit, on Tuesday, the 29th day of September, A. D. 1908. To place in nomination the following county officers: One member of the state legislature from the Charlevoix county district, Sheriff, Judge of Probate, County Clerk, Register of Deeds, County Treasurer, Prosecuting Attorney, County Surveyor, Circuit Court Commissioner, two Coroners, and for the transaction of such other business as may lawfully come before the convention.

The several townships are entitled to representation as follows:

	Delegates		Delegates

CHARLEVOIX CITY

First Ward

At the Rose House at 8 o'clock p. m., Monday, August 31, to elect three delegates to county convention.

Second Ward

At the Court House at 8 o'clock p. m., Monday, August 31, to elect four delegates to the county convention.

Third Ward

At Ward & Ward's garage at 8 o'clock p. m., Monday, August 31, to elect three delegates to county convention.

BEFORE another issue of the COURIER the primary election will be over and the Republicans of Michigan, and the eleventh congressional district, will have named their candidates for governor, lieutenant-governor and member of congress, by direct vote of the people. The COURIER has advocated the nomination of Governor Warner because we believe that the interests which are opposing his nomination are the interests whose control of the senate of Michigan, have at all times been opposed to the well known desires of the people. We advocate the nomination of Mr. Covell because we believe that he, in all respects, is equally as well-fitted for the position as Mr. Dodds, and in looking out for the future, as all men do and must, with the certainty that after the next re-apportionment Mr. Covell, and not Mr. Dodds, would be in this district, it would be more for Mr. Covell's interest than Mr. Dodds' to cater to Charlevoix county. What we want above all things is a full vote September 1, so that the candidates will be the choice of the people.

THEATRICAL

JUST A FEW FACTS

About John F. Stowe's Big Uncle Tom's Cabin Company.

We stand and stare as we see the glaring headlines, and our thoughts quickly wander back to the days of yore, days when the gifted authoress, Harriet Beecher Stowe, first favored us with her immortal work. The young, the old, the gray, the careless, all at different times have perused the the pages of the book. The heart interest is so intense, a magnetic influence seems to assert itself and draw us again within the playhouse to witness those thrilling scenes of ante-bellum days, and we can safely say that its memory and action will linger with us, as it has done with past generations. The pleasure, pathos and instruction are for old and young alike. The manuscript of this grand production was bequeathed by Mrs. Harriet Beecher Stowe to her nephew, Mr. John F. Stowe, who now is the sole owner of the only original manuscript, and today is presenting the largest and best production ever given this famous old play. The big company of fifty people will be seen at Charlevoix August 31, under a monster water-proof tent. It requires a special train of Pullman cars to transport the organization. Don't fail to hear the noon-day concert by the challenge military band. Prices 15 and 25 cents.

The G. Lote Silver Company which appeared at the Charlevoix Theater last night, have an entertainment out of the usual run, which received well-merited approval from all who were fortunate enough to attend, and if they make another appearance in Charlevoix, they can be assured of a well-filled house.

Manager Bridge, of the Charlevoix Theater, announces his star attraction of the season in "Jane Eyre," Rowland & Clifford's beautiful production of Peter G. Platt's dramatization of Charlotte Bronte's great novel.

This attraction only plays a few of the northern Michigan towns, namely: Manistee, Cadillac, Traverse City, Charlevoix, Cheboygan and Alpena. From Alpena the company goes to Saginaw then to Grand Rapids, where it plays four days and then to the Great Northern Theater in Chicago for two weeks.

Nearly everyone is familiar with the story of this great novel and will no doubt be interested in seeing it in dramatized form.

The cast is headed by Miss Dorothy Turner, last season's leading woman at the Peoples' Theater in Chicago.

"Jane Eyre" will be at the Charlevoix Theater September 3.

Some Marvelous Creations.

"Fine feathers make fine birds," but fine clothes do not make a good play. "A Dangerous Friend" is too fine a play to require clothes to enchance its reputation. It has a strength, a power, a realism of its own, strong enough to sway any audience, even if dressed in rags, in fact they have gone to great pains to produce some really marvelous creations. It is beyond the the "ken" of an ordinary man to describe them. There are five acts in "A Dangerous Friend" and the dressing of each act seems to overshadow the one before, and the mind of just a plain man is lost in a maze of silks, satins, chiffons, embroideries and laces, and all he can say is that they are just to sweet and swell for anything, and the ladies besides enjoying a good play, will have a chance to set in judgment on some original ideas in the art of dressing. "A Dangerous Friend" will be at the Charlevoix Theater Friday night, August 28.

The Lal-a-Lot Theater has an extra good program this week. But the hit of the show is beyond a doubt McDonald Stoddard & McDonald, who are, to use a theatrical term, killing the audience, who are in constant scream from start to finish of their act. Miss Browning and the Circes are also very clever in their acts. The program is far ahead of anything seen here this season.

An entertainment will be given by Miss Nannie Barbee at the residence of Mrs. H. A. Sears on Park avenue, Monday evening, August 31, at 8 o'clock. Miss Barbee has given a number of entertainments in Charlevoix and vicinity and her ability in rendering the stories in the colored dialect is well known to our people. It is a privilege to hear her and no one should miss the opportunity. Admission 35 cents. 35-1t

BELIEVES IN SQUARE DEAL

"I find from the records that the only action ever taken by the senate with reference to this bill was on the day prior to the day set for final adjournment of both houses. A motion was made to discharge the committee on railroads from further consideration of this bill, which motion was lost by a majority vote of the members present.

"I also find that in the special session when the bill was put upon its final passage and considered on its merits that the same members of the senate who with Mr. Covell voted not to discharge the committee from further consideration at this time voted for the passage of the bill. And it is a fair presumption that had Mr. Covell at that time been a member of the senate he would have voted with the other members who unanimously passed this bill.

"I desire to say further that I have taken pains to review the entire legislative record of Mr. Covell and have no hesitancy in saying to the voters of this district that his actions as a member of both houses are of such a nature that no one can take any possible exception to them, and the statements which have been made by Mr. Covell's enemies in this congressional district are of such a nature as to convince any fair minded man that they were not prompted by any desire to know the truth, but they are absolute, unqualified, and evidently premeditated misstatements of the facts as they actually exist. Any one who is desirous of verifying the facts as above stated can do so by a careful study of the house and Senate Journals of the sessions of 1893-95 and '97 and will with me, be forced to the conclusion that the opponents of Mr. Covell in their desperation to prejudice the minds of voters of this district have resorted to a misstatement of facts that is unbecoming to any man who pretends to conduct a decent newspaper.

"The above statement of facts is made by me purely in the interest of fair play and in order that a fellow citizen may be accorded the benefit of the truth with reference to a matter in which he has been grossly misrepresented.

"All of which is respectfully submitted. "JAS. H. MONROE.

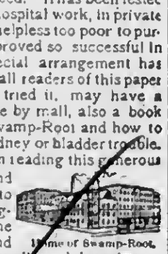
DO YOU GET UP WITH A LAME BACK?

Kidney Trouble Makes You Miserable

Almost everybody who reads the newspapers is sure to know of the wonderful cures made by Dr Kilmer's Swamp-Root the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It is the great medical triumph of the nineteenth century; discovered after years of scientific research by Dr. Kilmer, the eminent kidney and bladder specialist, and is wonderfully successful in promptly curing lame back, kidney, bladder, uric acid troubles and Bright's Disease, which is the worst form of kidney trouble.

Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root is not recommended for everything but if you have kidney, liver or bladder trouble it will be found just the remedy you need. It has been tested in so many ways, in hospital work, in private practice, among the helpless too poor to purchase relief and has proved so successful in every case that a special arrangement has been made by which all readers of this paper who have not already tried it, may have a sample bottle sent free by mail, also a book telling more about Swamp-Root and how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper and send your address to Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. The regular fifty cent and one dollar sizes are sold by all good druggists.



Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

Neighborhood Notes

Lewis and Edward Parrett, Palestine farmers, have been granted permission by State Game Warden Pierce to catch live otter for an otter-breeding farm that they intend to lay out on the shores of Hayward lake, ten miles east of Stephenson. The Parretts already have a small number of the little valuable fur-bearing animals in captivity.

This will be the only otter farm in the state. Otters are becoming scarcer each year, and the value of furs are correspondingly increasing. Hayward lake is quite a large body of water in the interior of Menominee county, with a muddy bottom and other conditions which otter like.

A special of the Detroit Journal from Pontiac says:—Henry C. Ward millionaire, will have to undergo another examination as to his sanity. Judge Davis having granted a new trial on the petition of the family. Ward has been spending hundreds of thousands on works of art, painting and statuary, and the family adopted this as a sure sign of softening of the brain. They instituted proceedings in the probate court to have him declared incompetent, and succeeded, but Ward appealed to the circuit court. The case was tried six weeks ago and Ward was declared by the jury to be perfectly sane. Now Judge Davis, who tried the case, has ordered a new trial.

The state railway commission has promulgated a new rate for the transportation of cream by the railroads of the state, thereby settling, for the present, the controversy between the railroads, the big centralizing companies and the dairymen.

The centralizing points entered a vigorous protest a few months ago against a new rate fixed by the railroads for the transportation of so-called "butter fats" and several hearings were held before the commission. The small creamery men were satisfied with the higher rate because it tended to keep the cream at home instead of being shipped to centralizers in Chicago and other cities.

The rate on cream established by the railway commission is lower than that fixed by the railroad companies, but it still remains higher than the rate on milk.

Thinks it Saved his Life.

Lester M. Nelson, of Naples, Maine, says in a recent letter: "I have used Dr. King's New Discovery many years, for coughs and colds, and I think it saved my life. I have found it a reliable remedy for throat and lung complaints, and would no more be without a bottle than I would be without food." For nearly forty years New Discovery has stood at the head of throat and lung remedies. As a preventive of pneumonia, and healer of weak lungs it has no equal. Sold under guarantee at F. G. Hites & Co. drug store. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

A Vivid Description.

A shortsighted and deaf old gentleman who was at an entertainment where a professor performed on a big brass viol thus described the scene: "The professor carried on to the platform a gigantic beetle attached to the end of a sort of lamppost. He leaned over and fondly embraced it, tickling its back violently with a long comb.

"The spectators seemed much delighted at this display of scientific affection. The beetle was apparently quite unmoved. Then the professor gave a capital imitation of the drunken man and the lamppost. He swayed rapidly up and down, clutching quickly at all points.

"Sometimes his fingers quivered passionately upon one spot, like an ill tempered man struggling with an obstinate pair of braces. Sometimes he rested momentarily, as one rests after a contest with a stiff white tie.

"Finally he gave a last convulsive tickle to the huge beetle, picked himself up from the lamppost and carried off the unresisting insect. The audience applauded vigorously."

A Fluctueting Fortune.

"About how much do you figure that you are worth?" asked the old time friend

"How do I know?" replied Mr. Cumrox. "Mother and the girls have joined a bridge whist club."—Washington Star.

Preventive of Mud.

Liquid asphalt as a dust and mud preventive is used in preference to all other materials by the highway authorities of the District of Columbia.

FEEDING THE COW.

Small Grain Ration During the Summer Will Prove Profitable.

The cows should be fed liberally. It will be found profitable to feed a small grain ration during the summer. It not only helps them to keep up the flow of milk, but they come into winter quarters in better condition, do not dry up so quickly and come out the next spring able to do more work. Much, however, depends on the cows and the feed.

It is claimed that this additional feed in summer to the pasture is better for the manure and, besides, gives superior milk and more of it.

An extensive dairyman says that for twenty years his cows have had dry hay before them every time they were put in to be milked, which was twice a day, and the pasture never was so good but what those cows would eat some of the dry hay.

This question of feeding grain or hay in the summer time is a very important one. Professor Sunborn of New Hampshire some years ago made the experiment and found that one pound of hay was equivalent to one pound of grain for feeding his cows in the summer time on fresh pasture.

An old western dairyman once said that the most slovenly way of feeding a cow is to let her go to pasture; that she destroys more than she will eat and if a man is using very much fine pasture, especially on high priced land, he is using it to great disadvantage. He said he could better afford to grow a crop and feed it to the cow, so there would be no waste.

It is important with silage and soiling crops to feed some dry hay as well as grain through the summer for the effect that it has on the digestive tract.

A speaker before a dairymen's association said that some years back he began feeding the cows grain in the summer time and dry hay every time they were being milked. He came to do it by having had a lot of feed—ground up corn and oats mixed with bran—that he was feeding the cows, and after he turned them out to grass he thought he would use up what feed he had left. He noticed that the more cornmeal there was in the mixture the better the cows liked it. They did not seem to care for bran, probably as they had plenty of protein. The next year he fed hay and cornmeal and oats and had an increase of fifty pounds of butter over the product of the previous year.

Pigs In the Orchard.

A writer in Rural New Yorker says that before the pigs are turned on to a clover sod they should have nose rings, not for the good of the pig, but for protection of the sod. It is but little trouble to insert the ready made wire rings, which cost 15 cents per 100, assorted sizes. The nippers for placing the rings cost 20 cents each. Place ring in the nippers, and while the pig is eating reach down and place the opening in the ring over the gristle part of the nose, close the nippers quickly and the job is finished. We have placed forty rings in their noses within twenty minutes. When we pasture pigs in the orchard we do not ring them. We think it advantageous to the tree and fruit to have the ground rotted up thoroughly. We are inclined to think this method is more beneficial to plum than to peach trees, especially in producing fruit. Our plum trees develop wood and a quantity of choice fruit, while the peach trees develop wood and less fruit.

Raising the Colt by Hand.

It not infrequently happens that colts are left motherless while yet quite young. Such colts are not an entire failure. They can be reared by hand and thrive quite well where the proper care is given them. If the colt has had even one or two feeds of its mother's milk it is well started, but where it has had none it is in a worse shape. In such case the bowels should should first be opened with a dose of castor oil, and a short while after that it can get its first feed. To make a substitute of its mother's milk take fresh cow's milk, add to it one-fourth water and sweeten somewhat with sugar. This should be fed to the colt at blood temperature four or five times a day. After the colt is a few weeks to a mouth old it can be fed a little oatmeal or other soft food. Even before this time it will begin nibbling soft grasses. Although the colt must be started in very slowly on these feeds, it will be found that they help wonderfully.—Gregor H. Glitzke.

Dairy Rules.

The lesson is this, says a dairyman: Break away from old traditions and customs; select a dairy breed that suits you best and stay by that breed; do not change; grade up the best cows that you have; test and discard the poor and worthless cows; have a standard to live up to; do not be afraid of a certain amount of line breeding to fix heredity; don't mix the breeds; depend upon the sire and his breeding to advance the merit of a herd; do not change sires very often; breed for good health; be thorough; feed for milk and not beefmaking; be sanitary; be a dairy student; don't get finicky, and the dairy of the future will be the wonder of the world.

The Exact Situation.

The teacher of the district school had invited Tommy, ten years of age, to accompany her to a concert and called for him on her way. The family were still seated at their evening meal when Miss Lyndon knocked at the door. Tommy ran to admit her, hastily swallowing a final mouthful of cake.

"I am a little early perhaps," said Miss Lyndon. "Are you in the middle of supper?"

"Oh, no," said Tommy, with airy politeness; "oh, no, not at all! Supper's in the middle of me."—Chicago Record-Herald.

town, and when the "rubbernecks" wagons approached the Hyder mansion and the guides through their megaphones expatiated in awestricken tones on its external and hidden beauties, there was a general craning of vertebrae among the "seeing New Yorkers" to catch a glimpse of the abode of the richest man in the world.

Only a few privileged ones were ever permitted to penetrate to the interior of this $10,000,000 home. Hyder was not fond of company; he avoided strangers and lived in continual apprehension of the subpoena server. Not that he feared the law, only he usually found it inconvenient to answer questions in court under oath. The explicit instructions to the servants, therefore, were to admit no one under any pretext whatever unless the visitor had been approved by the Hon. Fitzroy Bagley, Mr. Ryder's aristocratic private secretary, and to facilitate this preliminary inspection there had been installed between the library upstairs and the front door one of those ingenious electric writing devices, such as are used in banks, on which a name is hastily scribbled, instantly transmitted elsewhere, immediately answered and the visitor promptly admitted or as quickly shown the door.

Jefferson did not have to ring at the internal portal. The sentinel within was at his post. No one could approach that door without being seen and his arrival and appearance being signaled upstairs. But the great man's son bended the list of the privileged ones, so without ado the smartly dressed flunkey opened wide the doors, and Jefferson was under his father's roof.

"Is my father in?" he demanded of the man.

"No, sir," was the respectful answer. "Mr. Ryder has gone out driving, but Mr. Bagley is upstairs." Then after a brief pause he added, "Mrs. Ryder is in too."

Jefferson went up the grand staircase hung on either side with the old portraits and rare tapestries, his feet sinking deep in the rich velvet carpet. On the first landing was a piece of sculptured marble of inestimable worth, seen in the soft warm light that sifted through a great pictorial stained glass window overhead, the subject representing Ajax and Ulysses contending for the armor of Achilles. To the left of this, at the top of another flight leading to the library, was hung a life full length portrait of John Burkett Ryder. The ceilings here as in the lower hall were richly gilt and adorned with paintings by famous modern artists. When he reached this floor Jefferson was about to turn to the right and proceed direct to his mother's suit when he heard a voice near the library door. It was Mr. Bagley giving instructions to the butler.

The Hon. Fitzroy Bagley, a younger son of a British peer, had left his country for his country's good, and in order to turn an honest penny, which he had never succeeded in doing at home, he had entered the service of America's foremost financier, hoping to gather a few of the crumbs that fell from the rich man's table and disguising the menial nature of his position under the high sounding title of private secretary. His job called for a spy and a toady, and he filled these requirements admirably. Excepting with his employer, of whom he stood in craven fear, his manner was condescendingly patronizing to all with whom he came in contact, as if he were anxious to impress on these American plebeians the signal honor which a Fitzroy, son of a British peer, did them in deigning to remain in their "blarsted" country. In Mr. Ryder's absence, therefore, he ran the house to suit himself, bullying the servants and not infrequently issuing orders that were contradictory to those already given by Mrs. Ryder.

Jefferson could not bear the sight of him. In fact, it was this man's continual presence in the house that had driven him to seek refuge elsewhere. He believed him to be a scoundrel as he certainly was in end. Nor was his estimate of the English secretary far wrong. The man, like his master, was a grafter, and the particular graft he was after now was either to make a marriage with a rich American girl or to so compromise her that the same end would be attained. He was shrewd enough to realize that he had little chance to get what he wanted in the open matrimonial market, so he determined to attempt a raid and carry off an heiress under her father's nose, and the particular proboscis he had selected was that of his employer's friend, Senator Roberts. The senator and Miss Roberts were frequently at the Ryder house, and in course of time the aristocratic secretary and the daughter had become quite intimate. A flighty girl, with no other purpose in life beyond dress and amusement and having what she termed "a good time," Kate thought it excellent pastime to flirt with Mr. Bagley, and when she discovered that he was serious in his attentions she felt flattered rather than indignant. After all, she argued, he was of noble birth. If his two brothers died, he would be peer of England, and she had enough money for both. He might not make a bad husband. But she was careful to keep her own counsel and not let her father have any suspicion of what was going on. She knew that his heart was set on her marrying Jefferson Ryder, and she knew better than any one how impossible that dream was. She herself liked Jefferson quite enough to marry him, but if his eyes were turned in another direction—and she knew all about his attentions to Miss Rossmore—she was not going to break her heart about it. So she continued to flirt secretly with the Hon. Fitzroy while she still led the Hyders and her own father to think that she was interested in Jefferson.

"Jorkins," Mr. Bagley was saying to the butler, "Mr. Hyder will occupy the library on his return. See that he is not disturbed."

"Very good, sir." The butler bowed and went downstairs. The secretary looked up and saw Jefferson. His face reddened, and his manner grew nervous.

"Hello! Back from Europe, Jefferson? How jolly! Your mother will be delighted. She's in her room upstairs."

Declining to take the hint and gathering from Bagley's embarrassed manner that he wanted to get rid of him Jefferson lingered purposely. When the butler had disappeared, he said:

"This house is getting more and more like a barracks every day. You've got men all over the place. One can't move a step without falling over one."

Mr. Bagley drew himself up stiffly, as he always did when assuming an air of authority.

"Your father's personality demands the utmost precaution," he replied. "We cannot leave the life of the richest and most powerful financier in the world at the mercy of the rabble."

"What rabble?" inquired Jefferson, amused.

"The common rabble, the lower class, the riff-raff," explained Mr. Bagley.

"Pshaw!" laughed Jefferson. "If our financiers were only half as respectable as the common rabble, as you call them, they would need no bars to their houses."

Mr. Bagley sneered and shrugged his shoulders.

"Your father has warned me against your socialistic views." Then, with a lofty air, he added: "For four years I was third groom of the bedchamber to the second son of England's queen. I know my responsibilities."

"But you are not groom of the bedchamber here," retorted Jefferson.

"Whatever I am," said Mr. Bagley haughtily, "I am answerable to your father alone."

"By the way, Bagley," asked Jefferson, "when do you expect father to return? I want to see him."

"I'm afraid it's quite impossible," answered the secretary with studied insolence. "He has three important people to see before dinner. There's the national Republican committee and Sergeant Ellison of the secret service from Washington, all here by appointment. It's quite impossible."

"I didn't ask you if it were possible. I said I wanted to see him, and I will see him," answered Jefferson quietly but firmly and in a tone and manner which did not admit of further opposition. "I'll go and leave word for him on his desk," he added.

He started to enter the library when the secretary, who was visibly perturbed, attempted to bar his way.

"There's some one in there," he said in an undertone. "Someone waiting for your father."

"Is there?" replied Jefferson coolly. "I'll see who it is," with which he brushed past Mr. Bagley and entered the library.

He had guessed aright. A woman was there. It was Kate Roberts.

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

A committee of the international association of physicians organized last August at Stockholm has just prepared and issued the following appeal, which it is desired to give as wide a circulation as possible, as signatures and endorsements of the same are to be gathered throughout the world. It is entitled "An appeal by the physicians of all lands to all rulers, governors, legislatures, all educators, teachers and ministers, and all who have a sincere interest in the welfare of our race and coming generations." It then proceeds:

"We, who belong to the medical profession and have by study and experience been especially enable to recognize the true nature and the effects of alcoholic beverages, hereby declare that we are thoroughly convinced that these beverages are altogether unnecessary and in every way injurious, so that we believe the evils arising from the indulgence in itoxicating drinks can and should be eliminated and avoided. Above all, the youth should be taught by precept and example and protected by legal enactments, so that they will abstain from alcholic liquors. We declare that it is our conviction that this course must be pursued to insure the future sobriety of the race, which is the foundation of its prosperity, welfare and progress."

Signed first by Dr. Holitscher, Pirkenhammer, Germany; Dr. Santesson, Stockholm, Sweden; Dr. Ridge, Enfield, England; Dr. Stein, Budapest, Hungary; Dr. Vogt, Christiana, Norway; Dr. Laitinen, Helsingfors, Finland; Dr. Olrik, Frederiksvaerk, Denmark.

RECORD OF GEORGE G. COVELL

May, 1897. Do the republicans of the eleventh district wish to endorse that vote?

George Covell also voted to prevent the reduction of railroad fare in the upper peninsula from 4 to 3 cents. The record of that vote will be found on page 1050 in the second volume of the senate journal of 1897. This vote was cast on the 29th day of April 1897. It was against the interests of the people of the territory in which he referred and was again in behalf of the railroads. Do the republican voters of the eleventh district wish to endorse that vote?

After George Covell had been appointed district attorney a special session of the legislature was called by Governor Pingree. The purpose of this special session was to make another effort to repeal the Michigan Central charter and to accomplish other purposes in the same direction. It was supposed that George Covell had been moved from further power to directly aid the railroads and to oppose the people, through his federal appointment. But that was not true. Covell actually arranged to temporarily resign his federal office in order to hurry back to Lansing to stand guard in behalf of the railroads. He did stand guard for several days and then drew his per diem and mileage from the state treasurer and returned to his federal job.

Will George Covell even pretend that he went back to Lansing from his federal job in order to accomplish anything which the taxpayers of the state hoped to have accomplished? Will he please call attention to a single vote of his in that session which was not for the railroads and against the people, when that issue existed?

It is reported that Mr. Covell has said that he would like to debate or discuss the matter of his state senate railroad vote. It is not likely that he does. His declaration was made for the purpose of attracting attention for a little time at least to something else than his state senate record. He is anxious to debate something with E. H. Dodds, by it is said to have declared. Mr. Dodds is Mr. Covell's opponent for the congressional nomination, but so far as the writer of this article knows, Mr. Dodds has not alone by direct or indirect ever referred to Mr. Covell or his peculiar record.

Now it happens that the writer of this article knows very nearly the exact amount Mr. Covell's vote lost to the people of the state. He secured this information as a state officer. If Mr. Covell wishes to review his senate votes and to discuss their results we will be quite willing to take part in that review and discussion. If Mr. Covell really wishes to have all the facts touching his state senate record brought out he will take advantage of this offer.

This is a matter in which the people of the whole state are just as greatly interested as are the people of the eleventh district. It is not alone a district matter, this question of Covell's record, but unfortunately only the voters of the eleventh district can at this time act upon it. But the whole state is interested, and the interests of the state can most decidedly be provided for by preventing George Covell from again possessing the power to repeatedly vote against the interests of his constituents and the interests of the state. adv. 35-tf

"A Dangerous Friend" claims the distinction that during its first season it weathered one of the worst financial panics the theatrical business has ever known. Very few new productions outside of New York and Chicago can make that assertion. Why? Because it has merit and the public recognized it and patronized it. We will have a chance to see Mr. Conrad's "Panic" success Friday night, August 28.

STINKING SMUT OF WHEAT

Treatment Recommended By the Agricultural College.

Formalin is a 40 per cent solution of formaldehyde. It often falls below this standard on the market, and therefore the purchaser should insist on a guaranteed strength named.

Preparation of material. Mix formalin with water in the proportion of one pound or pint of the former to fifty gallons of the latter, stirring well. This solution may be made in a tub, barrel, trough or tank, depending on the amount to be used and the manner of using. The grain may be treated in either of two ways, as follows:

(1.) Spread a two-inch layer of wheat upon a well swept floor, thoroughly saturated with the solution, then apply the formaldehyde mixture to the grain with a garden sprinkler until thoroughly wet. To this a second layer may be added and similarly treated, and so on:

(2.) Into the moistened mass of grain with shovel or scoop that the surface of every action glistens with moisture, adding more solution if necessary; then shovel into a compact pile and allow to stand two hours. At the end of two hours spread the grain across thin a layer as the floor space will permit, and shovel occasionally till dry, when it may be bagged.

Canvas floors thoroughly saturate the floor on which the treating is to be done, with the solution, also all tools used, the bags receiving the treated grain, unless new, and the grain drill as well.

(b.) Put the grain to be treated in bags about four bushels to each. Gunny sacks are more preferred, allowing the solution to pass into the grain and also draining more quickly than cotton bags.

(2.) In this case the solution is prepared in a tub, barrel, trough or tank, according to convenience or necessity. Immerse each bag of grain completely for ten minutes, working thoroughly with the hands or otherwise, till all the grain is wet.

(3.) After ten minutes remove the bag and suspend it over the dripping vat, or place it on draining boards, which will return the excess solution for further use.

(4.) After dripping ceases, empty the grain on a clean floor, previously treated. Spread and stir frequently till dry.

(5.) If the grain is to be sown at once it need be dried only sufficiently to allow it to work well through the drill. If seeding is delayed for several days after treatment, by rain or other causes, the grain should be dried well, as remaining in the sacks or pile may mildew it.

Caution. The same precautions should be observed as given for the previous method. Also remember that in this treatment the kernels will swell and therefore due allowance must be made in setting the drill to insure application of sufficient seed.

DAMAGES WERE GIVEN

In the Case of Belmer vs. Boyne City Tanning Co.

As we went to press last week the case of Belmer vs. Boyne City Tanning Co. was on trial. Friday the jury brought in a verdict of $6,000 in favor of plaintiff. This was a case in which the plaintiff, Belmer claimed damages for injuries which he received in the mill of the defendant in April 1903, he being at that time fifteen years of age.

The case was hotly contested, Nichols & Nichols and E. N. Clink appearing for the plaintiff and Knowles & Converse and J. M. Harris for the defendants. The case will probably be appealed.

FOR STATE SENATOR

29th Senatorial District

FRED R. MING

Candidate for Republican nomination for State Senator, for second term. He asks the voters of the 29th senatorial district to look up his vote on questions in which they were vitally interested, and if his support and vote on the 2c railroad law, the binder twine bill, the railroad commission bill, and other measures of equal importance to them has met with their approval, he asks for their support at the September primaries.

HERE ARE SOME OF THE THINGS THAT SENATOR MING STANDS FOR:

He believes that the law relative to state tax lands should be so amended that the actual home seeker should have first preference, and that these lands should not be sold to tax-title sharks to be denuded of timber by them, and again returned to the state a barren waste. But the portion of these lands that are not homesteaded should be deeded to the counties in which they lie, to be used by such counties for internal improvement, such as road and bridge building; for 35 per cent of these lands lie in the newer counties of the state.

That all property should bear its just proportion of taxes, no more nor less, and that all corporate property should be assessed under the same law as the farms, homes and business places are assessed.

That the regulation of the express companies in this state should come under the supervision of the state railway commissioners as other common carriers.

He believes that all bills introduced in the legislature should be open to free and fair discussion before the proper committees, but as the people send to the capital no secret lobbyists, no others should be allowed. Adv.

LOOKS AS IF BRADLEY WINS

As we go to Press Returns Show Him 2,000 Ahead

LATER RETURNS MAY CHANGE RESULT

Earle Carries Houghton County Dodds is Winner.

Charlevoix County Goes for Warner, Covell, and Gustin - Some Precincts are Missing

The results of the primary election held Tuesday still remain in doubt. As there were no contests except on the Republican ticket returns for the other parties are not available.

In the state the contest between Governor Warner and Dr. Bradley was a hot one, the governor leading in the farming communities while the doctor was generally strong in the cities.

Indications point to a victory for Bradley but later returns may change the result.

For congress, Covell is defeated by Dodds by a majority which will probably exceed 1,500, carrying two thirds of the counties in the district.

It is impossible to get the returns on state senator but the nomination of Ming is predicted.

E. R. Harris is nominated for Judge of Probate in Antrim county by a majority of 8.

With six precincts missing Charlevoix county gives Warner 421, Bradley 341, Earle 91; Covell 529, Dodds 366; Gustin 415, Ming 317. The remaining precincts will probably increase the vote of the leaders.

AUTOMOBILE RULES

As Announced by the Herald of Port Huron.

The Herald of Port Huron recently made some suggestions regarding the regulation of speed of automobiles and for the interest of Charlevoix automobile owners we reproduce them here.

1. On discovering an approaching team the motorist must stop and cover his machine with a tarpaulin painted to correspond with the surrounding scenery.

2. The speed limit will be secret and the penalty for violation will be $10 for every mile an offender is caught going in excess of it.

3. In case a motor car makes a team run away the penalty shall be $100 for the first mile the team runs, $200 for the second, $300 for the third and so on.

4. On approaching a corner where he cannot command a view of the road, the motorist must stop at least 100 yards from the turn, toot his horn, ring a bell, fire a revolver, holloo and send up three rockets at intervals of five minutes.

5. Motor cars must be seasonably painted so they will merge with the landscape. They shall be green in the autumn and white in winter.

6. Motor cars running on a country road at night must send up a red rocket every mile, and wait ten minutes for the roads to clear, then proceed carefully, blowing horns and shooting Roman candles.

7. In case a horse refuses to pass a motor car, in spite of all the precautions that have been taken, the mortist will take his machine to pieces as rapidly as possible and conceal the parts in the grass.

8. In case the roads are dusty the owner of the motor shall slow down to one mile an hour when approaching house and send a man ahead with a sprinkler to lay the dust.

BARN IS BURNED

John Peterson Again the Victim of an Incendiary

Officers are Investigating Reign of Lawlessness Should Cease

Tuesday night the barn of John Peterson, of Eveline township, was burned to the ground together with the contents at an estimated loss of $1,000 with no insurance.

The fire was of incendiary origin this being the fourth time Mr. Peterson has had his buildings burned, besides other acts of some enemy of his. Not only has he suffered from fires, but his orchard has been ruined, horses poisoned and other property destroyed.

Tuesday night a boy named Bird saw the fire suddenly break out and a man running across the corn field, the tracks of which were located the next morning.

Under-sheriff Weikel went to the scene immediately on being notified, and together with other officers is busily investigating and the sentiment of the public generally is that no expense or means should be spared to bring the criminal to justice.

IMPORTANCE OF DRAINAGE

Bidding Roads of Storm and Underground Water

Thoughtful Paper Sent Out by Office Public Roads Bulletin on Concrete Drains Soon

With an average of 27,000 tons of water falling in the form of rain on each mile of public road in the United States annually, it is scarcely to be marvelled at that the ten commandments of the road builder can be summed up succinctly in the word "drainage."

The saying has truth for a basis, as good drainage is the primary requisite for all roads. Even in sand roads this holds true, for their "good drainage" means such as will safely remove the storm water without erosion or gullying and still retain the surface moisture.

To secure good drainage one must take into consideration both the surface water and the underground water. The surface water must be removed quickly and completely and without subjecting the road to excessive scour or erosion. For this reason, the center of the road should be raised and the slope towards the side ditches should be from ½ to 1 inch to each foot distance, or so that the water will run freely to the side ditches and not flow down the road or remain in puddles on the roadway. The side ditches should be of ample size to care for the severest storms with a fall of not less than 6 inches to each 100 feet. Frequent and ample cross drains should be constructed and every opportunity taken to get the water away from the road as quickly as possible. Any road along which you see water standing in the side ditches or on which puddles of water have collected or which has been badly gullied and eroded by the rains has poor drainage and is in need of immediate attention. In fact earth roads nearly always require a little attention after each rain. The split-log drag is essentially a tool to maintain good drainage on our earth roads, and should be used after each rain. On a heavy clay or gumbo soil the drag when properly used tends to puddle the road surface, keep it free from ruts, dense, smooth and hard, thus securing the best surface drainage possible.

But in many places the underground water is too near the surface and must be removed before a good road will be possible. This means that some form of subdrainage must be resorted to, usually tile drains, of clay or concrete. Water from whatever source must be gotten rid of effectively, for water plus clay or gumbo invariably equals mud when mixed in spring and summer. Water becomes ice in winter and as water in freezing expands one-eighth its volume, the road heaves out of shape and when the ice melts the roads disappears beneath the rising tide of mud constantly fed by by rains melting snow and underground springs.

In seepy and boggy places the sub-drainage in order to be fully effective should lower the water level to not less than three feet below the road surface. If tiles are used they should be carefully laid, true to grade. Most failures in tile drainage can be attributed to carelessness in laying, or too flat grade. Tile less than 4 inches in diameter should rarely be used, nor should a grade of less than 6 inches to the 100 feet be used unless absolutely necessary. In a very dense soil, it is always advisable to cover the tile to at least a depth of 8 to 12 inches with coarse sand or fine gravel. Care should always be taken to secure a free outlet for the drains and to protect the outlet with a concret bulkhead or catchbasin, which can always be kept clean and the outlet free.

The kind of tile to be used depends on local conditions. Concrete tile if properly made are equally as good as clay tile. Which kind to use is entirely a local question of dollars and cents. If concrete tile can be made more cheaply than clay tile can be had, use concrete; if not, use clay tile.

GRANGE PICNIC SATURDAY

Held at Maple Grove—An Ideal Grange Home

Immense Crowd in Attendance—Field Day Sports

Saturday the annual picnic of Maple Grove Grange was held at their hall seven miles east of Charlevoix.

Maple Grove Grange is an example of what can be done in the line of grange development. When the patrons of Maple Grove selected a site on which to erect their grange home, they did not lose sight of the fact that the grange hall and the rural school house are twin factors in the advancement of education in Michigan, each having an important part to play, and in sight of the school house, in a beautiful grove of young maples, overlooking Pine Lake, with a view of Charlevoix in the distance, have built their hall which is well planned for the purpose for which it is designed.

The present officers are—Arthur Wooden, Master E. E. Strond secretary and Mrs. Wooden lecturer. After dinner the meeting was called to order and after the program, field day sports took place resulting as follows:

Hop, step and jump, Orlan Misner 1st, Ney Smith 2nd.

Broad jump, Robert Struthers 1st, Ney Smith 2nd.

Hundred foot dash, Ney Smith 1st, Ray Bachenhuff 2nd.

Ball game. Bay Shore 11, Horton Bay 5.

A splendid program was carried out consisting of music, recitations and addresses by E. B. Ward, master of Pomona, who spoke of the great change which the grange organization had made in the farm homes of Michigan; Dan McClellan, of Horton Bay, who spoke of the power of organization, and a few words of greeting from the COURIER editor.

KILLED NEAR BOYNE FALLS

John Fervaley was Last Week Tuesday—Residence Unknown.

John Fervaley, is the name of unfortunate man who was killed in the lumber camp last Tuesday. He has only been in camp a few days, consequently no one around was able to identify him and although a search was made in his effects to find out if he had any relatives close by, nothing was revealed by which he might be identified. He was about 26 years old, weighed about 150 pounds, had blue eyes and brown hair. He was was buried from Stackus' undertaking parlors Thursday, and interment was in this city. Boyne Citizen.

OLD RESIDENT DEAD

Mrs. Jane Glasgo had Lived Here Over Twenty Years

Mrs. Glasgo was the mother of several children, one daughter who resides in Ireland and four sons.

The funeral was held Monday afternoon, Rev. R. A. Wright officiating. Interment in Brookside cemetery.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 10

Date Fixed for the Annual Sugar Beet Picnic.

Will be a Grand Bargain Day by Merchants of Charlevoix.

The committee of the Board of Commerce, who have the arrangements for the annual sugar beet picnic in charge, have been busily at work and it promises to bring a mammoth crowd to the city, Thursday, September 10.

Excursions will be run on all boat lines and railroads and it is expected that the farmers in the surrounding country will turn out en-masse.

The Sugar Company will furnish coffee and tables in their large mill for all who bring their dinners. A strong feature will be the great bargains in all lines of merchandise which will be given by the merchants.

THEATRICAL

"Jane Eyre" a Strong Attraction.

Rowland and Clifford's latest production is Peter G. Puttu's dramatization of Charlotte Bronte's popular novel "Jane Eyre."

This play is so intensely human, that it holds something for theater goers of every class. The characters are true to life, hence lovable and easily sympathized with. None of the little short-comings so prevalent in all of us have been rubbed away for passing effect, so every character is palpitating and interesting because of the very humanity, which is the keynote of of this truly fine play. A superb company equally balanced in all units has been specially selected to interpret each part, and they give a performance thoroughly in harmony with the author's conception of each individual character. This performance is meeting with unqualified success everywhere. "Jane Eyre" will have a presentation in this city at the Charlevoix Theater Thursday, September 3.

The bill at the Laf-a-Lot Theater this week is one of exceptional merit including an act by Prof. DeOrio which is attracting widespread attention as it is a novelty bag-punching act and undoubtedly the best of its kind before the public today. Prof. Guy Stanley will be included in the bill the last half of this week. He is an understudy of the great Herman and will mystify the audience with sleight-of-hand tricks. The life motion pictures being shown this week are feature subjects and are being shown with lecture and effects.

Souvenir night, Friday night. Baby contest all the week. A big strong bill all the week. Saturday afternoon matinee. All this at the Laf-a-Lot Theater. 36tf

THEY ARE DOING PRACTICAL WORK

Charlevoix County Teachers' Institute Now in Session.

OVER FIFTY TEACHERS IN ATTENDANCE

Superintendent Woodley, Miss Himes and Commissioner Milford.

Are Acting as Instructors in Practice Work—List of Teachers Enrolled—Will Improve Our Schools.

Charlevoix County Teachers' Institute convened at the high school building Monday morning and will continue until Friday afternoon. Fifty teachers are now present.

Miss Himes is taking up work in reading, language and geography. In reading the word or sentence method is taught. Lessons are given from Baldwin's first reader. Language should be taught from first to fourth grade by means of talks about objects, stories, etc. In fourth and fifth grades, lessons are taken from Hyde's language book and supplementary work. A knowledge of the world in general is required in geography. By means of special events which have transpired in Cuba, Africa, China, South America and now in Australia and North America, makes that important subject much more interesting.

Supt Woodley is taking up the subjects of school management, history and special subjects. The reconstruction period in American history is being studied. Interesting talks on outline of school work, conduct of school the first day, etc have been given.

Commissioner Milford, being in close touch with the teachers and their work, is giving some excellent hints on the teachers' work in general. It is very helpful to teachers to know wherein they fail to get best results in their work, and how they can improve in the conducting of their school.

The institute, so far, has been very practical and very helpful and every teacher of the county should attend. The following teachers are now enrolled:

Enga Berg, Ida Price, Bessie Light, Phyllis Hurlbert, Nell S. Maddaugh, Eva M. Heller, Maude E. Crowell, Edna Dantforth, Mae Stoffanan, Sue Bala, Dazie Hudson, Wilbur Mathers, Mae Stewart, Bertha McCalmon, Leah Persons, Belle Henning, Mildred Gilbert, H. MANY IMPROVEMENTS

Have Been Made on School Buildings Prior to Opening.

Which Will Take Place a Week From Next Monday, September 14.

Everything is being put in readiness for the opening of the city schools which will take place a week from next Monday. Extensive repairs have been made on the various buildings and a thorough cleaning and overhauling has been going on for several weeks.

Among the various improvements may be mentioned entire reconstruction of sub-foundation of McKinley building, re-finishing walls of the main hall, superintendent's office and southeast recitation room.

At the Central building the closets have been completely overhauled and dustless, wind-proof weather strips have been installed, the same being also applied to the Washington building.

At both the Washington and Lincoln buildings walls have been re-finished and a new cement walk has been built to the street at the Lincoln building. Together with the cleaning up of basements and grounds generally the school year will begin with buildings and grounds in first class condition.

The institute in progress is well attended and excellent in quality of work done. Superintendent Woodley is exerting himself in conjunction with Miss Himes to secure the best results.

"Hello, Kate! How are you?" Jefferson decided to say nothing of the interrupted tete-a-tete, but mentally he resolved to spoil Mr. Bagley's game and save Kate from her own folly. On hearing his voice Kate turned and gave a little cry of genuine surprise.

"Why, is it you, Jeff? I thought you were in Europe."

"I returned yesterday," he replied somewhat curtly. He crossed over to his father's desk, where he sat down to scribble a few words, while Mr. Bagley, who had followed him in, scowling, was making frantic dumb signs to Kate.

"I fear I intrude here," said Jefferson pointedly.

"Oh, dear no, not at all," replied Kate in some confusion. "I was waiting for my father. How is Paris?" she asked.

"Lovely as ever," he answered.

"Did you have a good time?" she inquired.

"I enjoyed it immensely. I never had a better one."

"You probably were in good company," she said significantly. Then she added: "I believe Miss Rossmore was in Paris."

"Yes, I think she was there," was his noncommittal answer.

To change the conversation, which was becoming decidedly personal, he picked up a book that was lying on his father's desk and glanced at the title. It was "The American Octopus."

"If you'll excuse me, I'll go and pay my filial respects upstairs," said Jefferson. "I'll see you again." He gave Kate a friendly nod, and without even glancing at Mr. Bagley left the room.

The couple stood in silence for a few moments after he disappeared. Then Kate went to the door and listened to his retreating footsteps. When she was sure that he was out of earshot she turned on Mr. Bagley indignantly.

"I fear I intrude here."

"You see what you expose me to. Jefferson thinks this was a rendezvous."

"Well, it was to a certain extent," replied the secretary unabashed. "Didn't you ask me to see you here?"

"Yes," said Kate, taking a letter from her bosom; "I wanted to ask you what this means?"

"My dear Miss Roberts—Kate—I"—stammered the secretary.

"How dare you address me in this manner when you know I and Mr. Ryder are engaged?"

No one knew better that Kate that this was not true, but she said it partly out of vanity, partly out of a desire to draw out this Englishman who made such bold love to her.

"Miss Roberts," replied Mr. Bagley loftily, "in that note I expressed my admiration—my love for you. Your engagement to Mr. Jefferson Ryder is, to say the least, a most uncertain fact." There was a tinge of sarcasm in his voice that did not escape Kate.

"You must not judge from appearances," she answered, trying to keep up the outward show of indignation which inwardly she did not feel. "Jeff and I may hide a passion that burns like a volcano. All lovers are not demonstrative, you know."

The absurdity of this description as applied to her relations with Jefferson appealed to her as so comical that she burst into laughter, in which the secretary joined.

"Then why did you remain here with me when the senator went out with Mr. Ryder, senior?" he demanded.

"To tell you that I cannot listen to your nonsense any longer," retorted the girl.

"What?" he cried incredulously. "You remain here to tell me that you cannot listen to me when you could easily have avoided listening to me without telling me so! Kate, your coldness is not convincing."

"You mean you think I want to listen to you?" she demanded.

"I do," he answered, stepping forward as if to take her in his arms.

"Mr. Bagley!" she exclaimed, recoiling.

"A week ago," he persisted, "you called me Fitzroy. Once in an outburst of confidence you called me Fitz."

"You hadn't asked me to marry you then," she laughed mockingly. Then, edging away toward the door, she waved her hand at him playfully and said teasingly: "Good by, Mr. Bagley. I am going upstairs to Mrs. Ryder. I will await my father's return in her room. I think I shall be safer."

He ran forward to intercept her, but she was too quick for him. The door slammed in his face, and she was gone.

Meantime Jefferson had proceeded upstairs, passing through long and luxuriously carpeted corridors with paneled frescoed walls and hung with grand old tapestries and splendid paintings, until he came to his mother's room. He knocked.

"Come in!" called out the familiar voice.

He entered. Mrs. Ryder was busy at her escritoire looking over a mass of household accounts.

"Hello, mother! How's father?" he cried, running up and hugging her in his boyish, impulsive way. Jefferson had always been devoted to his mother, and, while he deplored her weakness in permitting herself to be so completely under the domination of his father, she had always found him an affectionate and loving son.

Mrs. Ryder sighed while she looked her son over proudly. In her heart she was glad Jefferson had turned out as he had. Her boy certainly would never be a financier to be attacked in magazines and books. Answering his question, she said:

"Your father is as well as those busybodies in the newspapers will let him be. He's considerably worried just now over that new book, 'The American Octopus.' How dare they make him out such a monster? He's no worse than other successful men. He's richer, that's all, and it makes them jealous. He's out driving now with Senator Roberts. Kate is somewhere in the house—in the library, I think."

"Yes, I found her there," replied Jefferson dryly. "She was with that cad, Bagley. When is father going to find that fellow out?"

"Oh, Jefferson," protested his mother, "how can you talk like that of Mr. Bagley? He is such a perfect gentleman. His family connections alone should entitle him to respect. He is certainly the best secretary your father ever had. I'm sure I don't know what we should do without him. He knows everything that a gentleman should."

"And a good deal more, I wager," growled Jefferson. "He wasn't groom of the backstairs to England's queen for nothing." Then changing the topic, he said suddenly: "Talking about Kate, mother, we have got to reach some definite understanding. This talk about my marrying her must stop. I intend to take the matter up with father today."

"Oh, of course, more trouble!" replied his mother in a resigned tone. She was so accustomed to having her wishes thwarted that she was never surprised at anything. "We heard of your doings on in Paris. That Miss Rossmore was there, was she not?"

"That has got nothing to do with it," replied Jefferson warmly. He resented Shirley's name being dragged into the discussion. Then more calmly he went on: "Now, mother, be reasonable. Listen. I purpose to live my own life. I have already shown my father that I will not be dictated to and that I can earn my own living. He has no right to force this marriage on me. There has never been any misunderstanding on Kate's part. She and I understand each other thoroughly."

"Well, Jefferson, you may be right from your point of view," replied his mother weakly. She invariably ended by agreeing with the last one who argued with her. "You are of age, of course. Your parents have only a moral right over you. Only remember this: It would be foolish of you to do anything now to anger your father. His interests are your interests. Don't do anything to jeopardize them. Of course you can't be forced to marry a girl you don't care for, but your father will be bitterly disappointed. He had set his heart on this match. He knows all about your infatuation for Miss Rossmore, and it has made him furious. I suppose you've heard about her father."

"Yes, and it's a dastardly outrage," blurted out Jefferson. "It's a conspiracy against one of the most honorable men that ever lived, and I mean to ferret out and expose the authors. I came here today to ask father to help me."

"You came to ask your father to help you?" echoed his mother incredulously.

"Why not?" demanded Jefferson. "Is it true, then, that he is selfishness incarnate? Wouldn't he do that much to help a friend?"

"You've come to the wrong house, Jeff. You ought to know that. Your father is far from being Judge Rossmore's friend. Surely you have sense enough to realize that there are two reasons why he would not raise a finger to help him. One is that he has always been his opponent in public life, and the other is that you want to marry his daughter."

"Yes, I see now, mother. You are right." Then he added bitterly: "That has always been the trouble at home. No matter where I turn, I am up against a stone wall—the money interests. One never hears a glimmer of fellow feeling, never a word of human sympathy, only cold calculation, heartless reasoning, money, money, money! Oh, I am sick of it! I don't want any of it. I am going away where I'll hear no more of it."

His mother laid her hand gently on his shoulder.

"Don't talk that way, Jefferson. Your father is not a bad man at heart. You know that. His life has been devoted to money making, and he has made a greater fortune than any man living or dead. He is only what his life has made him. He has a good heart, and he loves you, his only son. But his business enemies—ah, those he never forgives!"

Jefferson was about to reply when suddenly a dozen electric bells sounded all over the house.

"What's that?" exclaimed Jefferson, alarmed and starting toward the door.

"Oh, that's nothing," smiled his mother. "We have had that put in since you went away. Your father must have just come in. Those bells announce the fact. It was done so that if there happened to be any strangers in the house they could be kept out of the way until he reached the library safely."

"Oh," laughed Jefferson, "he's afraid some one will kidnap him? Certainly he would be a rich prize. I wouldn't care for the job myself, though. They'd be catching a tartar."

His speech was interrupted by a timid knock at the door.

"May I come in to say goodby?" asked a voice which they recognized as Kate's. She had successfully escaped from Mr. Bagley's importunities and was now going home with the senator. She smiled sweetly at Jefferson, and they chatted pleasantly of his trip abroad. He was sincerely sorry for this girl whom they were trying to foist on him. Not that he thought she really cared for him—he was well aware that hers was a nature that made it impossible to feel very deeply on any subject—but the idea of this ready made marriage was so foreign, so revolting to the American mind! He thought it would be a kindness to warn her against Bagley.

"Don't be foolish, Kate," he said. "I was not blind just now in the library. That man is no good."

As is usual when one's motives are suspected, the girl resented his interference. She knew he hated Mr. Bagley, and she thought it mean of him to try and get even in this way. She stiffened up and replied coldly:

"I think I am able to look after myself, Jefferson. Thanks, all the same."

He shrugged his shoulders and made no reply. She said goodby to Mrs. Ryder, who was again immersed in her tradespeople bills, and left the room, escorted by Jefferson, who accompanied her downstairs and on to the street, where Senator Roberts was waiting for her in the open victoria. The senator greeted with unusual cordiality the young man whom he still hoped to make his son-in-law.

"Come and see us, Jefferson," he said. "Come to dinner any evening. We are always alone, and Kate and I will be glad to see you."

"Jefferson has so little time now, father. His work and—his friends keep him pretty busy."

Jefferson had noted both the pause and the sarcasm, but he said nothing. He smiled, and the senator raised his hat. As the carriage drove off the young man noticed that Kate glanced at one of the upper windows where Mr. Bagley stood behind a curtain watching. Jefferson returned to the house. The psychological moment had arrived. He must go now and confront his father in the library.

CHAPTER IX.

THE library was the most important room in the Ryder mansion, for it was there that the Colossus carried through his most important business deals, and his busiest hours were those which most men devote to rest. But John Burkett Ryder never rested. There could be no rest for any man who had a thousand millions of dollars to take care of.

Here the money Moloch held court like any king, with as much ceremony and more secrecy, and having for his courtiers some of the most prominent men in the political and industrial life of the nation. Corrupt senators, grafting congressmen, ambitious railroad presidents, insolent coal barons who impudently claimed they administered the coal lands in trust for the Almighty, unscrupulous princes of finance and commerce, all visited this room to receive orders or pay from the head of the "system." Here were made and unmade governors of states, mayors of cities, judges, heads of police, cabinet ministers, even presidents. Here were turned over to confidential agents millions of dollars to overturn the people's vote in the national elections. Here were distributed yearly hundreds of thousands of dollars to grafters, large and small, who had earned it in the service of the "interests."

Here secretly and unlawfully the heads of railroads met to agree on rates which by discriminating against one locality in favor of another crushed out competition, raised the cost to the consumer and put millions in the pockets of the trust. Here were planned tricky financial operations with deliberate intent to mislead and deceive the investing public, operations which would send stocks soaring one day, only a week later to put Wall street on the verge of panic. Half a dozen suicides might result from the coup, but twice as many millions of profits had gone into the coffers of the "system." Here, too, was perpetrated the most heinous crime that can be committed against a free people—the conspiring of the trusts, abetted by the railroads, to arbitrarily raise the prices of the necessaries of life—meat, coal, oil, ice, gas—wholly without other justification than that of greed, which with these men was the unconquerable, all absorbing passion. In short, everything that unscrupulous leaders of organized capital could devise to squeeze of which we have any record, is the purchase by Abraham, of the cave of Machpelah, for a burial place for Sarah, his wife.

This took place before my time.

Since then, there have been many deals in real estate pulled off, some of which I have made myself during the thirty-three years that I have been engaged in business in this city.

Which leads me to remark, that the advent into this small city of a large enterprise like a cement factory employing a couple of hundred men, at least, means a growth of about a thousand people, or say 200 families, including the people who will hurry in to help feed and clothe all these employes. This calls for more houses and there are none too many in the city now to accommodate the present population.

What will be the result?

Higher rents and higher prices for houses and lots.

What should the wise man do?

Buy a home at once, before prices go up. It is cheaper to buy than to build these days.

And that is where I come in. I have houses in all parts of the city for sale at various prices and on reasonable terms. I can sell you anything you want from a chicken farm in the suburbs to a brick block on Bridge Street.

Come in and talk it over.

Meanwhile, watch this corner, and read the bargain column.

Official Call for Republican State Convention.

To the Republican Electors of the State of Michigan:

The state convention of the Republicans of Michigan is hereby called to meet at the Light Guard armory in the city of Detroit on Tuesday, the 29th day of September, 1908, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon, for the purpose of nominating candidates for state offices, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before the convention.

In accordance with the provisions of law and the action of the Republican state central committee, every county will be entitled to one delegate for each two hundred and fifty of the total vote cast therein for the Republican candidate for secretary of state at the last election and one additional delegate for a moiety of 125 votes or more.

Pursuant to law, Tuesday, the 6th day of September, 1908, is hereby designated as the day on which shall be held in each county, the county convention of the Republican party for the election of delegates to the Republican state convention herein called, for the selection of delegates to congressional, senatorial and representative district conventions in such districts as have not adopted the direct voting system, and for the transaction of other business provided for by law or which may otherwise properly come before said county convention.

In counties that have not adopted the direct voting system for the nomination of county officers, delegates to the county convention will be chosen under the caucus system.

Under the resolutions of 1858, no delegate will be entitled to a seat in the state convention who does not reside in the county he proposes to represent.

The delegates from the several counties in each congressional district are requested to meet in district caucus at 9:30 o'clock a. m. on the day of the state convention, and select officers as follows, to be presented to the state convention for confirmation:

1—One Vice President.
2—One Assistant Secretary.
3—One member of the committee on "Credentials."
4—One member of the committee on "Permanent Organization and Order of Business."
5—One member of the committee on "Resolutions."

By order of the Republican state central committee.

GERRIT J. DIEKEMA, Chairman.
DENNIS E. ALWARD, Secretary.
Grand Rapids, July 29, 1908.

Charlevoix county is entitled to seven delegates.

Republican County Convention

To the Republican Electors of the County of Charlevoix:

You are hereby notified that there will be a Republican County Convention held at the Court House, in the city of Charlevoix, Charlevoix county, Michigan, on Tuesday, the 8th day of September, A. D. 1908, at ten o'clock in the forenoon, for the following purposes:

To elect seven delegates to the Republican state convention to be held in the city of Detroit, on Tuesday, the 29th day of September, A. D. 1908. To place in nomination the following county officers: One member of the state legislature from the Charlevoix county district, Sheriff, Judge of Probate, County Clerk, Register of Deeds, County Treasurer, Prosecuting Attorney, County Surveyor, Circuit Court Commissioner, two Coroners, and for the transaction of such other business as may lawfully come before the convention.

The several townships are entitled to representation as follows:

	Delegates		Delegates
Bay	2	South Arm	2
Boyne Valley	4	St. James	2
Chandler	2	Wilson	3
Charlevoix	4	Charlevoix city—
Evangeline	4	1st Ward	3
Eveline	3	2d Ward	4

Hudson	2	City of Boyne City—
Marion	2	1st Ward	2
Melrose	3	2d Ward	1
Norwood	2	3d Ward	4
Peaine	2	4th Ward	3

Dated, East Jordan, August 17, 1908.

WM. J. PEARSON,
Chairman Republican County Committee.
H. J. McMILLAN, Secretary.

THE result of the first state wide test of the primary law is gratifying to its friends. In spite of the 40 per cent clause the republicans of Michigan have named their candidates and as the choice of the majority of the republicans of the state they will receive the hearty support of every member of the party.

For congress Hon. Francis H. Dodds, the successful candidate, is a gentleman whom every republican can carnestly support. His high character and recognized ability assures the eleventh district of a representative who will be truly representative of the district.

In the Boarding House.

Gazing dreamily at the "God Bless Our Home" pastel on the wall, the boarder with the freckles on his nose continued, "Yes, it really gives me great pleasure to notice that the butter is convalescing!"

The man with the barb wire beard looked unhappy, and an expression of contempt, not unmixed, however, with curiosity, flitted across the face of the landlady.

"Convalescing!" she replied. "What do you mean?"

The man with the yellow whiskers smiled expectantly.

The man with the freckles on his nose nerved himself for the ordeal and replied, "Because it grows stronger every day!"

During the excitement that followed the man with the double chin helped himself to the last slice of bread on the table.—Baltimore American.

CHURCH OF HAPPINESS.

Merriment Features In Evangelist Theodore Valiant's Project.

MUSIC TO MAKE CONVERTS.

Hades to Be Discredited by Sect That Will Establish New Church In Washington—Women to Dance and Sing—Would Abolish Blue Laws.

Declaring that the laws of most churches are puritanical in character and the Sunday observance regulations of the District of Columbia too strict and that this situation is "driving many good citizens to dens of iniquity and vice," an attempt is being made by the Rev. Theodore Valiant, an evangelist, to found a new sect in Washington, to be known as the Happiness church. Behind the movement are a number of members of the Personal Liberty league.

At an open air meeting at Lama Park the other night the principles of the new denomination were set forth. One of them, according to the Washington Post, is to overthrow the "blue laws" now in force in the District of Columbia and permit the people to engage in sports and other recreations on the Sabbath.

It was announced that the new sect will apply for articles of incorporation early in the autumn and that services for the members will not be held in any particular building. Out of doors pulpits will be used as often as possible. The meeting recently held was the second of a series to be given this summer.

The Rev. Mr. Valiant was the principal speaker, and his strictures upon conditions were closely followed. His audience gave him especially close attention when he predicted the death of the "blue laws" and declared the church of the future will offer its members such attractions as are to be found in amusement parks such as the one in which he spoke.

"Music, merriment and smiling faces will be important features of the religion of the future," the Rev. Valiant said. "As in the olden times, men and women will be won back to God from depravity and crime in just such gatherings as this. There will be the dancing women, the cymbal players, the singers and the games, just as there were in the days of Moses and Solomon. Morbidity and solemnity are the twin children of mother evil. Crime is hatched where mirth is not; depravity flourishes in the shades of secretiveness.

"The old hell of the old religion, with its flaming fires, its dancing imps in leather hides, its catacomb of dead hopes and its fumes of sulphur, is a thing of the past. It was adroitly employed to frighten people into the church. Today the modern religion does not prey upon the fears and ignorance of the people. It says God is love, God is light, God is happiness. It bids you come to church with acclaims of joy. It presents a church in which you may smile and from the portals of which morbidity and fear have been banished.

"The church of the future that will make the most converts for God's cause and the betterment of humanity is the church that will offer its members such attractive features as we find in the park this pleasant July Sunday morning—music and light and harmless games and the laughter of joyousness.

"My friends, be not deceived. Our Father does not want us to approach him with long faces and downcast eyes. Go to him with happiness beaming from your countenance and overflowing from your heart. Take a lesson in happiness from his creatures, the birds with their songs of praise, the glittering fishes as they flirt about like flashing sunbeams in the silvery waters or the animals as they gambol on the greensward. Crime and depravity are unknown to such of God's creatures. It is left for man to be morbid and sorrowful—and sinful.

"There is no crime in the entrancing strains of music, no sin in the simple means of enjoyment called games, no secretiveness nor wrongdoing in this bright and cheerful glare of God's electricity.

"Blue laws and fanaticism will find no place in the religion of the future. There will be more recreation parks in the new order of things and very much less ignorance, sorrow and crime. In the good book it is related that God's smile is reflected in the happiness of his people. Such being the case, God must be smiling most benignly on this gathering, where all is joy and happiness. Those of you who profess to be Christians, I beseech you, do not seek to take away the joys of the people by imposing fanatical conditions upon them. Do not waste your energies upon that which does no harm—except you regard happiness as harm. Rather go ye as God has commanded out into the sin darkened highways and into the gloomy hedges and seek poor, downcast, sinful humanity and bring them to the light.

"Search not here, for if ye do ye will not find the sinful and the unhappy, but the contented and the happy. May God's brightest blessing be upon you all."

TIMBER TESTING MACHINE.

Device to Tell How Much Shock Structures Will Stand.

Bridge builders and contractors for buildings which are intended to carry variable loads will find much of interest in a unique machine designed by the United States government to help them to answer the question which comes up very often, How is the strength of wood affected by repeated loads? Up to the present no satisfactory answer can be given. To fill the need for information on this important subject a special form of impact machine has been designed by the United States forest service to investigate the behavior of wood under repetitive loading, and it is to be built by the University of Washington at Seattle, Wash., and is to form a part of the forest service timber testing station operated in co-operation with the university.

This machine will be provided with a 1,500 pound hammer which can be dropped upon the wood specimens under test from any height up to three feet, says a forest service bulletin. It is so constructed as to be both automatic and autographic. The record showing the behavior of the specimen under test is drawn on a long sheet of paper which constantly unwinds from one cylinder and rolls up on another. This record is drawn by means of a pencil attached to the hammer of the machine. When the machine is started the hammer is automatically raised to a height previously determined, when it falls on the specimen and continues to be raised and dropped until the machine is stopped.

From the results to be obtained from the tests made with this machine the forest service hopes to be able to devise more accurate and reliable methods for calculating the stresses which timbers used in bridges and other structures subject to repetitive loading have to stand.

WHY TURNING HOUSE FAILED.

Mrs. Brace Used to Keep Brace Chasing the Front Stoop.

The recent statement that William Reiman, a jeweler, has had plans drawn for a revolving house at Bayside, N. Y., caused much interest in Chatham, N. J., because the late George Brace of Meyersville, near Chatham, invented a house of the revolving kind a long time ago. Wesley Bond of Chatham, one of the carpenters employed on its construction, said the other day:

"The house was swung on a turntable, and the table was turned from the dining room. Brace was ingenious, and he combined the dining room table with the wheel to turn the house around, so that he could use the wheel for a table at meal hours and for a wheel when he wanted to turn the house around. His idea was to face the front porch and sleeping rooms toward the breeze in summer and away from the winds in winter.

"It was a great success as far as that feature went, but Brace found it inconvenient. He would come home somewhat overwrought at times, and Mrs. Brace when she heard him coming would turn the house around. The rest of the night he would spend chasing the front stoop. Finally he sent for me, and we plugged up the turntable. The house turned down a little while after that, and when Brace built a new one there wasn't any turning to it."

JOKE ON A DENVERITE.

"Merry Ha-ha" For Congratulator of Mrs. Longworth and Mrs. Leavitt.

Mrs. Nicholas Longworth, President Roosevelt's daughter, told an amusing story the other day of her experience at a reception a few nights ago in Denver when she stood in line beside Mrs. Ruth Bryan Leavitt, William J. Bryan's eldest daughter.

An overgallant Denverite approached and, shaking her hand vigorously, said, "Mrs. Longworth, I have voted for your father twice, and I hope some time to have the pleasure of voting for him again."

Mrs. Longworth gave him the famous Alice smile and bow, and the gallant passed on to where Mrs. Leavitt stood.

"Mrs. Leavitt," he said, "I have voted for your father twice, and I hope to vote for him again."

Mrs. Longworth, who seemed to be busy receiving the next in line, turned and with a smile said, "Consistency, thy name is man." Both she and Mrs. Leavitt gave their congratulator the "merry ha-ha," and he glided away through the crowd.

Island For Caribou.

An island in Lake Superior has been stocked with caribou. Caribou Island, so named because it formerly was noted as a home for the animals, again shelters a herd. Six of the animals have recently been taken to the island, and it is expected they will largely increase in number. The caribou were procured in Newfoundland. The herd on Grand Island, the original members of which came from the Canadian wilds, is attaining goodly proportions. There are no hunters to molest or wolves to prey upon it.

Girl's Record Swim In Mississippi.

Miss Lottie Mayer, a courageous young woman with well developed biceps and a robust physique, swam twenty-six miles in the Mississippi from Alton, Mo., to St. Louis the other day, without missing a stroke to rest, in five hours and eighteen minutes. This swim, it is said, never has been made before, except once, nine years ago, when John C. Meyers, floating much of the way on his back, covered the distance in seven hours. Miss Mayer's feat is declared to break the world's record.

He Heard the Knocking.

While John Wood of Tiverton, England, ninety-one years old, lay dying, he startled his daughter-in-law by asking, "What is that knocking?" "There isn't any knocking," was the answer. But the old man insisted there was and said: "I know what it is. It's the carpenter making Mrs. Upton's coffin." No one in the house at the time knew that Mrs. Upton, who was an old friend of Wood's, was ill, but when his son came home from work he said she had died the previous night at the age of ninety. Wood did not survive her many hours.

ADVANCE WARNING TO THE GENERAL PUBLIC

$20,000.00 WORTH OF MERCHANDISE, consisting of every known article that man woman or child wears. This mammoth, up-to-date stock must be sold within the next NINE DAYS, irrespective of market values; and profits given no consideration.

News of Vital Importance! The Reason Why! The Story Briefly Told!

During the past two months several eastern manufacturers and jobbers have offered us their merchandise at less than the cost of raw material in order to realize ready money. This opportunity we grasped and paid SPOT CASH, thus giving us the same class of merchandise 50 per cent cheaper than we heretofore paid for it. This mighty purchase arrived and to commence the fall season, we intend to give our patrons the benefit of our cash purchase, right at the height and the beginning of the fall season, when other merchants are exacting their highest and best profits on their wares. This will be the greatest carnival of value giving ever presented in this section of this state. One legitimate sale, which will allow the public to buy their fall wants at half their regular prices. Everything has been ticketed and is now on exhibition, and to be sold at these prices only during specified time of sale—Beginning me the blood out of the patient, defenseless toiler was done within these four walls.

Thursday, September 10th to Saturday, September 19th

When Jefferson entered, his father was seated at his desk, a long black cigar between his lips, giving instructions to Mr. Bagley. Mr. Ryder looked up quickly as the door opened, and the secretary made a movement forward as if to eject the intruder, no matter who he might be. They were not accustomed to having people enter the sanctum of the Colossus so unceremoniously. But when he saw who it was Mr. Ryder's stern, set face relaxed, and he greeted his son amiably.

"Why, Jeff, my boy, is that you? Just a moment until I get rid of Bagley, and I'll be with you."

Jefferson turned to the bookshelves and ran over the titles while the financier continued his business with the secretary.

"Now, Bagley, come, quick! What is it?"

He spoke in a rapid, explosive manner, like a man who has only a few moments to spare before he must rush to catch a train. John Ryder had been catching trains all his life, and he had seldom missed one.

"Governor Hire called. He wants an appointment," said Mr. Bagley, holding out a card.

"I can't see him. Tell him so," came the answer quick as a flash. "Who else?" he demanded. "Where's your list?"

Mr. Bagley took from the desk a list of names and read them over.

"General Abbey telephoned. He says you promised"—

"Yes, yes," interrupted Ryder impatiently, "but not here. Down town, tomorrow, any time. Next?"

The secretary jotted down a note against each name and then said:

"There are some people downstairs in the reception room. They are here by appointment."

"The national committee and Sergeant Ellison of the secret service from Washington," replied Mr. Bagley.

"Who was here first?" demanded the financier.

"Sergeant Ellison, sir."

"Then I'll see him first and the committee afterward, but let them all wait until I ring. I wish to speak with my son."

He waved his hand, and the secretary, knowing well from experience that this was a sign that there must be no further discussion, bowed respectfully and left the room. Jefferson turned and advanced toward his father, who held out his hand.

"Well, Jefferson," he said kindly, "did you have a good time abroad?"

"Yes, sir, thank you. Such a trip is a liberal education in itself."

"Ready for work again, eh? I'm glad you're back, Jefferson. I'm busy now, but one of these days I want to have a serious talk with you in regard to your future. This artist business is all very well for a pastime, but it's not a career—surely you can appreciate that—for a young man with such prospects as yours. Have you ever stopped to think of that?"

Jefferson was silent. He did not want to displease his father. On the other hand, it was impossible to let things drift as they had been doing. There must be an understanding sooner or later. Why not now?

"The truth is, sir," he began timidly, "I'd like a little talk with you now if you can spare the time."

Ryder senior looked first at his watch and then at his son, who, ill at ease, sat nervously on the extreme edge of a chair. Then he said, with a smile:

"Well, my boy, to be perfectly frank, I can't—but—I will. Come, what is it?" Then, as if to apologize for his previous abruptness, he added: "I've had a very busy day, Jeff. What with Transcontinental and Transatlantic and Southern Pacific and Wall street and rate bills and Washington I feel like Atlas shouldering the world."

"The world wasn't intended for one pair of shoulders to carry, sir," rejoined Jefferson calmly.

His father looked at him in amazement. It was something new to hear any one venturing to question or comment upon anything he said.

"Why not?" he demanded when he had recovered from his surprise. "Julius Cæsar carried it. Napoleon carried it—to a certain extent. However, that's neither here nor there. What is it, boy?"

"Well, Jefferson, did you have a good time abroad?"

Unable to remain a moment inactive, he commenced to pick among the mass of papers on his desk while Jefferson was thinking what to say. The last word his father uttered gave him a cue, and he blurted out protestingly:

"That's just it, sir. You forget that I'm no longer a boy. It's time to treat me as if I were a man."

Ryder senior leaned back in his chair and laughed heartily.

"A man at twenty-eight? That's an excellent joke. Do you know that a man doesn't get his horse sense till he's forty?"

"I want you to take me seriously," persisted Jefferson.

Ryder senior was not a patient man. His moments of good humor were of brief duration. Anything that savored of questioning his authority always angered him. The smile went out of his face, and he retorted explosively:

"Go on! Be serious if you want, only don't take so long about it. But understand one thing—I want no preaching, no philosophical or socialistic twaddle, no Tolstoi; he's a great thinker, and you're not; no Bernard Shaw; he's funny, and you're not. Now go ahead."

This beginning was not very encouraging, and Jefferson felt somewhat intimidated, but he realized that he might not have another such opportunity, so he plunged right in.

"Father, I am devoted to my work. I even intend to go away and travel a few years and see the world. It will help me considerably."

Ryder senior eyed his son in silence for a few moments; then he said gently:

"Don't be obstinate, Jeff. Listen to me. I know the world better than you do. You mustn't go away. You are the only flesh and blood I have. You see that I want you with me, and now you take advantage—you take advantage"—

Women as Well as Men Are Made Miserable by Kidney Trouble.

Kidney trouble preys upon the mind, discourages and lessens ambition; beauty, vigor and cheerfulness soon disappear when the kidneys are out of order or diseased.

Kidney trouble has become so prevalent that it is not uncommon for a child to be born afflicted with weak kidneys. If the child urinates too often, if the urine scalds the flesh or if, when the child reaches an age when it should be able to control the passage, it is yet afflicted with bed-wetting, depend upon it, the cause of the difficulty is kidney trouble, and the first step should be towards the treatment of these important organs. This unpleasant trouble is due to a diseased condition of the kidneys and bladder and not to a habit as most people suppose.

Women as well as men are made miserable with kidney and bladder trouble, and both need the same great remedy. The mild and the immediate effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It is sold by druggists, in fifty-cent and one dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also pamphlet telling all about it, including many of the thousands of testimonial letters received from sufferers cured. In writing Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y., be sure and mention this paper.

Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

Who Wants a Lyon & Healy Piano?

We have learned of an unusual bargain in a Lyon & Healy Piano. This instrument is one of the regular style instruments—it is of the very latest design, semi-colonial, and the case is of exquisite mahogany. The musical portion of the instrument is fully up to the high standard of all Lyon & Healy pianos. This particular instrument was in the possession of a private owner for a few months only and show no trace of wear.

If you are interested, write to Lyon & Healey, 77 Adams street, Chicago, for an illustration of this piano and also for the low net price they are willing to name on this and other special bargains in slightly used pianos. Ask for their special sales list of such bargains and their offer of sales agents' discount for 30 days. Uprights from $100 to $175 that were originally priced for more than double these prices.

Neighborhood Notes

The cutting away of the trouser cent of a man sleeping in the public room of the Union hotel in Saginaw to secure the contents of his hip pockets, was the method used by Charles Sturm in robbing William Moffet of $86 in money and other valuables, as disclosed by testimony at the former's hearing in Recorder Gauschow's court. Edward Kenney testified he saw Sturm take a knife and remove bodily two generous portions from the seat of Moffet's pants. The sleeping man was not awakened by the operation on his wearing apparel, and Kenny enjoyed the spectacle so much he said nothing about it at the time. The hearing was adjourned to September 2.

A whole church building, congregation—all in fact but the minister—was bought up by the conference of the Methodist Protestant church. The church is at Britton, and is of the Dutch Reformed denomination. By the transaction, the Dutch Reformist become Methodist Protestants.

This question has been a mooted question among the members of the conference, says the Journal. The little Dutch church is isolated, and its conditions have not been altogether prosperous. Its congregation proposed that the church property be bought by the Methodist Protestants, and its members would take out church letters transferring them to the Methodist Protestant faith.

"I am going to write a letter. If I am not back in 15 minutes, come up. I am sleepy and may fall asleep."

Herbert Lampman, of Lake City, night waiter in a Cadillac restaurant, made these remarks to a couple of patrons after serving them at 2 o'clock Sunday morning and then started for his room upstairs over the restaurant. A few minutes later the report of a revolver started the patrons. On going to Lampman's room they found him dead upon the floor with a bullet wound in his head and the revolver by his side.

It was found Lampman did write a letter which was directed to Myrtle Dyep, his former sweetheart, with whom he is said to have recently had a falling out. The woman is about 10 years his senior.

While digging on his lot a summer cottager at Hess lake a resort three miles southeast of Newaygo, experienced some astonishment when his spade struck against the bones of what seems to have been a whole family of Indians. The circle of heads was complete, even to a supposed pair of twins. A comparison of the Indian skulls with that of the average American leaves no doubt in the mind of the finder and his friends that the discovered skeletons were once an Indian household.

This represents the work of the Republican county convention held Tuesday. Long before the hour of assembling the streets of Charlevoix were filled with enthusiastic Republicans who gathered to attend the county convention, and when Chairman Pearson, of the county committee, called the convention to order at 10:30, the court room was well filled. R. E. Newville, of Boyne City, was chosen as temporary chairman and Roy L. Lorraine, of East Jordan, temporary secretary.

On motion Chairman Newville appointed the following committees:

Credentials—C. E. Ramsey, Will Parmalee, W. H. Ransom.

Resolutions—J. E. Converse, H. L. Iddings, W. P. Squier.

Permanent organization and order of business—Ford P. Robbins, George W. Baxter, A. E. Cross, after which the convention took a recess for dinner.

On re-assembling the committee on credentials reported the following named gentleman entitled to seats in the convention:

Bay—James Dilaworth, Joseph Shaw.

Boyne Valley—Ford P. Robbins, E. A. Robinson, H. C. Meyer, L. A. Moon.

Chandler—M. J. Pearson, George Hager.

Charlevoix—E. W. Conlter.

Eveline—Samuel Alexander, Malcolm A. McDonald, Martin J. Staley.

Hayes—Fred Smith, Mark Sammby, Horace S. Newson.

Hudson—James A. Waggoner, Ralph Dye.

Marion—James H. Adams, William Withers.

Melrose—S. A. Correll, John E. Darrah, W. H. Ransom.

Norwood—Samuel B. Chase, William H. Mayne.

Peaine—Daniel E. Gallagher, Hugh E. Boyle.

St. James—W. W. Boyle, W. J. Gallagher.

South Arm—A. B. Nicholas, J. H. Milford, Roy L. Lorraine, Herman Dewitt, Will Aldrich, Bert Olney, W. P. Squier, A. E. Cross, Charles Curkendall, H. C. McMillan, Fred Parks, Robert Price.

Wilson—Thomas Sheppard, S. R. Nowland, E. L. Nowland.

City of Boyne City—1st ward, Hugh R. Miller, Frank McWain; 2nd Ward, J. M. Harris, R. E. Newville, Walter Ware, J. E. Converse; 3rd ward, L. F. Knowles, A. F. Hayes, C. J. Wilson, G. W. Bailey; 4th ward, John Bissy, J. R. Furman, G. W. Baxter, A. G. Urquhart, C. E. Ramsey.

City of Charlevoix—1st ward, A. L. Fitch, F. K. Wood, A. M. Wilkinson; 2nd ward, Joseph Smith, Karl Wardrop, H. L. Iddings, Alexander Cameron; 3rd ward, Will E. Parmalee, W. J. Weikel, Archie Alcock.

The committee on permanent organization reported in favor of making the temporary organization permanent, and C. J. Wilson and E. A. Robinson were appointed tellers.

On nominations being called for Judge J. M. Harris took the floor and placed in nomination for representative the name of William J. Pearson, no other name being presented Mr. Pearson was named by acclamation.

For judge of probate, Judge J. M. Harris was placed in nomination by Leonard F. Knowles and received the unanimous vote of the convention.

For sheriff, F. E. Converse presented the name of Frank McWain, who received the entire vote.

For prosecuting attorney A. L. Fitch, presented to the convention the name of Alfred B. Nicholas and sixty-nine votes were recorded in his favor.

For county clerk, J. H. Milford presented the name of D. S. Payton and the delegates said he was good enough for them.

For county treasurer, A. E. Cross spoke the words which gave the delegates a chance to vote unanimously for Richard Lewis.

A. G. Urquhart for circuit court commissioner, E. A. Robinson for surveyor and Drs. William H. Marshall and Allen M. Wilkinson were chosen in like manner for their respective places as were the delegates to the state convention.

The committee on resolutions made the following:

Whereas, The Republican party is entering upon its campaign for the election of its standard bearers in nation, state, district and county, and,

Whereas, The Republicans of Charlevoix county are in convention assembled, be it

Resolved—I. That we here reaffirm our allegiance to the principles of our party as announced in its national platform;

II. That in William H. Taft, our national standard bearer, we recognize the keen statesman, the conservative judge, and one thoroughly capable of carrying out the policies of the Republican party, a successor to President Roosevelt;

III. That we hereby commend our national, state and local administrations for the capable and efficient way they have administered the duties of government;

IV. That we acknowledge our loyalty to national, state, district and local nominees of the Republican party, having faith that only through the election of these men and the carrying out of Republican policies and principles, shall prosperous conditions of the people of the United States be preserved;

V. That we commend to the careful consideration of each man the new proposed constitution for the state of Michigan, and urge its adoption, believing that from its adoption great and lasting good shall be derived by the people of this commonwealth;

VI. That the Republicans of Charlevoix county look with favor upon the candidacy of "Pass" Palmer, for Manistee, for the office of auditor general, and commend him to the consideration of the voters of the state.

Afterwards short addresses were made to the convention by Hon. F. W. Mayne, W. J. Pearson who pledged himself to give a square deal to everybody as representative, Hon. J. M. Harris, Hon. William Harris, James Waggoner and Willard A. Smith, all of whom expressed themselves as pleased with the outcome.

GOVERNOR FRED M. WARNER.

WILL BE CONTESTED

The Will of the Late Hugh McCurdy of Corunna.

Who Left a Valuable Estate to the Masonic Orphan's Home.

Four heirs of the late Hugh McCurdy, who left his $110,000 estate to the Masonic Orphan's home at Grand Rapids, filed notice in probate court of a spit to break the will. Mr. McCurdy was a past grand master of the state Masonic lodge and widely known in Masonic circles throughout the state.

In his will, Mr. McCurdy stipulated that the widow should receive an annuity of $800 a year. His son, Spencer McCurdy was gived a lease of the farm upon which he lived. All the rest of estate was to be held in trust for the Masonic Orphans' home and the farm occupied by his son was to revert to the Grand Rapids institution upon his death. Much surprise was occasioned by the will and Spencer McCurdy died a few weeks later. It is said that his death was hastened by disappointment over the provisions of the will, as he had always supposed that he was to be given the farm upon which he lived.

The heirs who will contest the will are John T. McCurdy, of Corunna, a son who was not mentioned in the will; Edward Marshall, of Detroit, a grandson; Hugh McCurdy, Eaton, a nephew of Akron, O., and Clifford Hugh McCurdy, of San Francisco. The latter is a son of the late Spencer McCurdy.

They have engaged a St. Johns law firm to represent them. It is alleged that Mr. McCurdy was not in good mental health for some time previous to making the will. It is said that they will produce as a witness a Corunna man who will testify that Mr. McCurdy made seven different wills in a few years before his death, and that he added two codicils to the final will in the last year.

Mrs. McCurdy, the widow, does not appear as a party to the suit, but she will be benefitted should the will be broken.

Of the $110,000 estate left by Mr. McCurdy, $30,000 is in contested county claims.

State Reward Roads Accepted

Deputy State Highway Commissioner Frank F. Rogers of Lansing, was in town last Friday. He inspected and excepted the one and one-half miles of gravel road north from the village limits on Maple avenue to the Zipp school house and east to the state reward highway and the one-half mile north from Pleasant View cemetery, built by the township this year. The road was all right with the exception of rolling and that will be done when a rain settles the gravel. The township will hereby receive $2,000 from the state to help defray the expense of building the said roads. Mancelona Herald.

DISASTROUS FIRES RAGING

Flames Creep Within City Limits of Boyne City and Charlevoix.

Extreme Dry Weather of the Past Two Months Make Fires Hard to Extinguish.

The stiff west wind has again fanned the slumbering forest fires near the lime kilns west of town into flames, and unless rain comes and the wind changes, owners of property lying in that vicinity will have a hard fight to save it from the flames. Last Friday and Saturday many men fought the flames all day and watchers were kept on the grounds during the night. Messrs. Stacks and Marling lost between three and four hundred cords of wood that was lying a short distance north of the lime kilns.

Northeast of town the fires are raging on the Felts property, doing considerable damage. Between this city and Petoskey fires have run over considerable territory, and between Hoyne City and Boyne Falls acres of timber lands and slashings have been burned over.

Last Saturday evening the steamer Cunnings went up the lake to Rhena Vista with hose and pipe to help extinguish the fires which had crept up to the cottages located there. In other sections of the county fires have been raging more or less, but the heavy shower of Saturday night about put out the fires in many places.

GOVERNORS TO MEET

In Detroit to Discuss Conservation of Resources.

There will be governors a plenty in Detroit during the first part of December. A call will be issued this week for the joint conference of governors of the states and the members of the national conservation of resources commission which President Roosevelt appointed to be held there December 8. The first formal meeting of this commission will be held December 1, a week before its conference with the governors. Governor Frear of Hawaii and Hoggatt of Alaska have promised to attend.

The conferences will be along the lines of a presentation of facts and recommendations as to the various states and the co-operative work that may be carried on between the federal and state governments in furtherance of the movement. All governors are urged to be present or to send some official representative.

The national congress on rivers and harbors will meet there during the week beginning December 7 and a number of governors have promised to participate in that convention.

NEW CONSTITUTION

Is the Next Important Question for the Electors.

As Time Passes it is Growing in Favor With the Electors.

Now that the primary election is over and the choice of governor and congressman decided, the fact that at the November election the people will be called upon to reject or accept the new constitution becomes the most important question before the people. A question which should be studied well for the few weeks remainig.

As time passes the changes made seem to be meeting the general approval of the people. We print below the important changes.

1st—The state census has been eliminated.

2nd—No local or special act can be passed when a general law can apply.

3rd—No bill becomes a law until printed and in possession of each house at least five days.

4th—The salaries of the legislators is placed at $800 for a term. At special sessions they may receive five dollars per day for twenty days only but nothing thereafter.

5th—Cities and villages are given home rule; that is, they are given the right to provide for things relating to their towns where before they were not.

6th—The women who pay taxes are given a right to vote upon all questions providing for raising money by direct tax. This is a question of importance, as the women are taking active interest in many of the affairs of today.

7th—The legislature must provide for a uniform system of accounting by state officials, state boards, state institutions and county officers.

8th—The governor has a right to veto special items in appropriation bills.

9th—The constitution was changed to provde for a simpler method of getting at the taxation of express, telephone and telegraph companies.

10th—The State Board of Agriculture is given supervision over the Agricultural College. Instead of the governor appointing six members on the board of agriculture to take care of and manage that institution, the people elect them.

11th—No state money can be deposited in any bank, except a national or state bank. And in the published reports of the banks, state money on deposit must be given as a separate item.

12th—The state is given the power to reforest state lands.

13th—People are given the power to educate their children in another district and draw their primary money just the same. This will be advantageous where there are only three or four pupils in the school district and no school is maintained.

14th The legislature can submit any law it pleases to the people.

15th—The salaries of state officers are changed. Each officer must personally attend to his own duties and not leave them for a subordinate.

WARNER IS THE NOMINEE

Later Returns Give Him the Victory Over Bradley

HAS LEAD OF NEARLY TWO THOUSAND

Returns From the Farming Communities Were Late Getting in

Will Probably be No Recount—Both Candidates Make Statement—Hill Bolts the Ticket

As we went to press last week the returns, so far as received, had Dr. Bradley in the lead, to such an extent that even Governor Warner had conceded his defeat and Bradley's friends had held jollification meetings. However, as time passed on and the returns began to come in from the farming communities, things began to take on a warmer look and his vote continued to increase until now it is in the neighborhood of 2,000.

While some of Dr. Bradley's friends are talking of a recount the doctor takes his defeat in a cheerful manner and makes the following statement:

"I don't take much stock in this talk of a recount. If I am beaten why, that's all there is to it. I will cheerfully abide the result. It was up to the republican electors of the state as to who they wanted nominated for governor. If the official canvass shows that another has been nominated, he will have no heartier support than myself."

"Do you concede Warner's nomination?" he was asked.

"Well, I would like to see the result of the official canvass before I say anything on that point. As I said before, I will abide cheerfully by the majority vote. To those republican electors who voted for me, I desire to extend my sincere thanks. If the final vote should show that I am defeated, I'll come up smiling and give my best support to the state and county tickets."

Governor Warner, in speaking of his nomination in Detroit, said:

"I still think it is the will of the people, and must say that I am highly pleased with the later returns which, figured conservatively from every source, make my nomination certain by from 1,000 to 2,000 plurality.

"All I can say is that I shall continue to conduct the office for the very best interests of the people of the state and shall urge legislation that is for their benefit, and carry out my campaign statements.

"In campaigning I met many democrats who promised me their support if nominated.

"While I realize that I have been through a warm contest and have had some strong opposition, I have no enemies to punish, and am willing for all to get good legislation.

"There can't be any boxers. You see, Dr. Bradley and myself had the same platform exactly and all of the governor's friends who were nominated for the legislature are pledged to the doctor's idea. Consequently, we should have smooth sailing. I can't see a chance for dispute anywhere."

Arthur Hill, of Saginaw who was defeated for United States senator and has been very bitter against Governor since, announces he will bolt the ticket and support the Democratic nominee.

GOOD ROAD SUGGESTION.

Why County Fairs Offer Good Openings For Starting Reform.

One of the most practical suggestions yet offered for the creation of sentiment for good roads is that put forward as follows in the Metropolitan Magazine:

"The county fair offers a peculiarly good opening for starting reform. Here are gathered the brain and sinew of the community—intent, it is true, on diversion and recreation, but equally alive to the material benefits to be derived from the numerous meetings where a free interchange of ideas is insured. Secure some good speakers; make it known by circular or through the columns of the county and town papers that the good roads problem at the next county fair is to be discussed by local talent and by men trained in the actual field work of this important business. There will be no difficulty in securing interested audiences, and it will be the exception if results are not manifested either in the change of feeling or in the organization of a reform movement. Meetings of boards of trade, granges, both state and local; educational conventions, chambers of commerce and such functions are also good starting points for effective work in the good roads movement."

Public spirited thinkers whose minds can transcend the needs of the immediate present, says the Atlanta Constitution, are impressed with the wisdom of pushing the propaganda for good roads side by side with that for better transportation facilities by rail or water.

What will it avail to double track trunk systems and construct more individual lines, and deepen navigable rivers if we make access to them along the country roads difficult, slow and expensive?

The county fair is an established institution in Georgia in as great a degree as the other popular meetings to which reference is made in the foregoing excerpt.

If the importance of good roads is made a topic of discussion at such gatherings and at such state wide assemblages as that comprised in the Atlanta Interstate fair the substantial progress legitimately expected hardly lends itself to computation.

It Can't Be Beat.

The best of all teachers is experience. C. M. Harden, of Silver City, North Carolina, says: "I find Electric Bitters does all that's claimed for it. For Stomach, Liver and Kidney troubles it can't be beat. I have tried it and find it a most excellent medicine." Mr. Harden is right; it's the best of all medicines also for weakness, lame back, and all run down conditions. Best too for chills and malaria. Sold under guarantee at F. G. Himes & Co. drug store. 50c.

The Kaders, a race of short, dark skinned, curly haired natives living in the Anamalai hills of southern India, possess a remarkable custom not elsewhere known in India—viz, the sharpening of the incisor teeth. This they accomplish by chipping the teeth to a point, giving them the form of cones.

Stevenson says, "That people should laugh over the same sort of jest and have many an old joke between them is a better preparation for life by your leave than many other things higher and better sounding in the world's ears."

Oiled Macadam as Rain Defier.

During a long continued period of wet weather at Kansas City and vicinity the merits and disadvantages of different roads were strongly emphasized. The dirt roads, though fairly good in favorable weather, were almost impassable in many places. But the macadam roads that had been oiled were in excellent condition. After the oil has penetrated the macadam no amount of water can affect the firmness of the paving. The rock roads have heretofore been extremely dusty in dry weather and sloppy and rutty in wet spells. Since oil has been applied to the surface they remain practically the same regardless of the state of the weather.

Quick Road Work.

Bright and early one morning twenty-two farmers living south of Trenton, N. J., undertook the task of putting a quarter mile stretch of road in passable condition. It was as determined a set of men as ever assembled for a purpose. Every man was a volunteer and gave his service freely. Their work was admirably accomplished, and a road that was fraught with danger for travelers was in a single day transformed into one that may now be used for heavy drayage as well as for pleasure. The number of loads of cinders hauled during the day by the farmers amounted to over 200.

PREVENTIVE OF DUST.

Calcium Chloride Tried on a Road In Washington.

Officials of the agricultural department have made experiments with the use of calcium chloride as a dust preventive, and the tests were attended with great success. A stretch of road in the city of Washington was selected for the trial, and in preparation for the treatment all dust and dirt were scraped from the surface of the roadway. A solution was prepared by mixing 300 pounds of commercial calcium chloride (granular, containing 75 per cent calcium chloride and 25 per cent moisture) with 300 gallons of water in an ordinary street sprinkler, care being taken to agitate the liquid thoroughly before applying it to insure a uniform solution. It was then applied from one sprinkling head, the sprinkler passing slowly back and forth over the road to facilitate the complete absorption of the solution.

Each application consisted of 600 gallons over an area of 1,582 square yards, or 0.38 gallons per square yard. A marked improvement in the condition of the road was noted at once, and after the second treatment it was necessary to repeat the operation only at isolated spots. The use of the water wagon, which had before made regular trips over the road, was abandoned as unnecessary. The texture of the road surface was completely changed after the application of the calcium chloride. Before treatment raveling was excessive in spots, and the whole surface seemed loosely knit together. After the second application this condition changed, and the road surface became smooth, compact and resilient.

A Live Scarecrow.

Fred Small, on his farm in Swanville, Me., has a very successful method of scaring crows from his cornfield. Having a bantam rooster in a wire cage, with nest attached, and, as everybody knows, the cockerel is a very early riser and starts in crowing at once, which keeps the crows from interfering with the corn.

THE LION AND THE MOUSE.

By CHARLES KLEIN.

A Story of American Life Novelized From the Play by ARTHUR HORNBLOW.

COPYRIGHT, 1906, BY C. W. DILLINGHAM COMPANY.

CHAPTER VIII—Continued.

"No, father, I don't," protested Jefferson, "but I want to go away. Although I have my studio and am practically independent, I want to go where I shall be perfectly free—where my every move will not be watched—where I can meet my fellow man heart to heart on an equal basis, where I shall not be pointed out as the son of Henry Mowey Ryder. I want to make a reputation of my own as an artist."

"Why not study theology and become a preacher?" sneered Ryder. Then more amiably he said: "No, my lad, you stay here. Study my interests—study the interests that will be yours some day."

"No," said Jefferson doggedly, "I'd rather go. My work and my self respect demand it."

"Then go, go!" cried his father in a burst of anger. "I'm a fool for wasting my time with an ungrateful son!" He rose from his seat and began to pace the room.

"Rather," exclaimed Jefferson, starting forward, "you do me an injustice."

Ryder laughed cynically. He went back to his desk, and, sitting facing his son, he said:

"Jefferson, you are young. It is one of the symptoms of youth to worry about public opinion. When you are as old as I am, you will understand that there is only one thing which counts in this world—money. The man who has it possesses power over the man who has it not, and power is what the ambitious man loves most."

He stopped to pick up a book. It was "The American Octopus." Turning again to his son, he went on:

"Do you see this book? It is the literary sensation of the year. Why? Because it attacks me, the richest man in the world. It holds me up as a monster, a tyrant, a man without soul, honor or conscience, caring only for one thing—money; having but one passion—the love of power and halting at nothing, not even at crime, to secure it. That is the portrait they draw of your father."

Jefferson said nothing. He was wondering if his sire had a suspicion who wrote it and was leading up to that. But Ryder senior continued:

"Do I care? The more they attack me the more I like it. Their puny pen pricks have about the same effect as mosquito bites on the pachyderm. What I am, the conditions of my time made me. When I started in business a humble clerk, forty years ago, I had but one goal—success; I had but one aim—to get rich. I was lucky. I made a little money, and I soon discovered that I could make more money by outwitting my competitors in the oil fields. Railroad conditions helped me. The whole country was money mad. A wave of commercial prosperity swept over the land, and I was carried along on its crest. I grew enormously rich, my millions increasing by leaps and bounds. I branched out into other interests, successful always, until my holdings grew to what they are today—the wonder of the twentieth century. What do I care for the world's respect when my money makes the world my slave? What respect can I have for a people that cringe before money and let it rule them? Are you aware that not a factory wheel turns, not a vote is counted, not a judge is appointed, not a legislator seated, not a president elected without my consent? I am the real ruler of the United States—not the so called government at Washington. They are my puppets and this is my executive chamber. This power will be yours one day, boy, but you must know how to use it when it comes."

"I never want it, father," said Jefferson firmly. "To me your words savor of treason. I couldn't imagine that American talking that way." He pointed to the mantel, at a picture of George Washington.

Ryder senior laughed. He could not help it if his son was an idealist. There was no use getting angry, so he merely shrugged his shoulders and said:

"All right, Jeff. We'll discuss the matter later when you've cut your wisdom teeth. Just at present you're in the clouds. But you spoke of my doing you an injustice. How can my love of power do you an injustice?"

"Because," replied Jefferson, "you exert that power over your family as well as over your business associates. You think and will for everybody in the house, for everyone who comes in contact with you. Yours is an influence no one seems able to resist. You robbed me of my right to think. Ever since I was old enough to think you have thought for me; ever since I was old enough to choose you have chosen for me. You have chosen that I should marry Kate Roberts. That is the one thing I wished to speak to you about. The marriage is impossible."

Ryder senior half sprang from his seat.

"So," he said sternly, "this is your latest act of rebellion, is it? You are going to welsh on your word? You are going to jilt the girl?"

"I never gave my word," answered Jefferson hotly. "Nor did Kate understand that an engagement existed. You can't expect me to marry a girl I don't care a straw about. It would not be fair to her."

"Don't be a fool, Jeff. I don't want to think for you or to choose for you or to marry for you. I did not interfere when you threw up the position I made for you in the Trading company and took that studio. I realized that you were restless under the harness, so I gave you plenty of rein. But I know so much better than you what is best for you. Believe me I do. Don't—don't be obstinate. This marriage means a great deal to my interests—to your interests. Kate's father is all powerful in the senate. He'll never forgive this disappointment. Hang it all, you liked the girl once, and I made sure that—"

He stopped suddenly, and the expression on his face changed as a new light dawned upon him.

"It isn't that Rossmore girl, is it?" he demanded. His face grew dark, and his jaw clicked as he said between his teeth: "I told you some time ago how I felt about her. If I thought that it was Rossmore's daughter! You know what's going to happen to him, don't you?"

Thus appealed to, Jefferson thought this was the most favorable opportunity he would have to redeem his promise to Shirley. So, little anticipating the tempest he was about to unchain, he answered:

"I am familiar with the charges that they have trumped up against him. Needless to say, I consider him entirely innocent. What's more, I firmly believe he is the victim of a contemptible conspiracy. And I'm going to make it my business to find out who the plotters are. I came to ask you to help me. Will you?"

"I will see him hanged first! He has always opposed me. He has always defied my power, and now his daughter has entrapped my son. So it's her you want to go to, eh? Well, I can't make you marry a girl you don't want, but I can prevent you throwing yourself away on the daughter of a man who is about to be publicly disgraced, and I will."

"Poor old Rossmore!" said Jefferson bitterly. "If the history of every financial transaction were made known, how many of us would escape public disgrace? Would you?" he cried.

Ryder senior rose, his hands working dangerously. He made a movement as if about to advance on his son, but by a supreme effort he controlled himself.

"No, upon my word, it's no use disinheriting you. You wouldn't care. I think you'd be glad—on my soul, I do!" Then, calming down once more, he added: "Jefferson, give me your word of honor that your object in going away is not to find out this girl and marry her unknown to me. I don't mind your losing your heart, but don't lose your head. Give me your hand on it."

Jefferson reluctantly held out his hand.

"If I thought that you would marry that girl unknown to me I'd have Rossmore sent out of the country, and the woman too. Listen, boy. This man is my enemy, and I show no mercy to my enemies. There are more reasons than one why you cannot marry Miss Rossmore. If she knew one of them she would not marry you."

"What reasons?" demanded Jefferson.

"The principal one," said Ryder slowly and deliberately, and eying his son keenly as if to judge of the effect of his words, "the principal one is that it was through my agents that the demand was made for her father's impeachment."

"Ah," cried Jefferson, "then I guessed aright!"

"Marry Kate or not, as you please, but I want you to stay here," the elder man said after a pause.

"It's no use. My mind is made up," answered Jefferson decisively.

The telephone rang, and Jefferson got up to go. Mr. Ryder took up the receiver.

"Hullo! What's that? Sergeant Ellison? Yes, send him up."

Putting the telephone down, Ryder senior rose and, crossing the room, accompanied his son to the door.

"Think it well over, Jeff. Don't be hasty."

A few minutes later Jefferson left the house.

The door opened and Mr. Bagley entered, followed by a tall, powerfully built man, whose robust physique and cheap looking clothes contrasted strangely with the delicate ultrafashionably attired English secretary.

"Take a seat, sergeant," said Mr. Ryder cordially, motioning his visitor to a chair. The man sat down gingerly on one of the rich leather upholstered chairs. His manner was nervous and awkward; as if intimidated in the presence of the financier.

"Are the national committee still waiting?" demanded Mr. Ryder.

"Yes, sir," replied the secretary.

"I'll see them in a few minutes. Leave me with Sergeant Ellison."

Mr. Bagley bowed and retired.

Ryder, with his customary bluntness, came right down to business.

"Well, what have you been doing about the book?" he demanded. "Have you found the author of 'The American Octopus?'"

"No, sir; I have not. I confess I'm baffled. The secret has been well kept. The publishers have shut up like a clam. There's only one thing that I'm pretty well sure of."

"What's that?" demanded Ryder, interested.

"That no such person as Shirley Green exists.

"Oh," exclaimed the financier, "then you think it is a mere nom de plume?"

"Yes, sir."

"And what do you think was the reason for preserving the anonymity?"

"Well, you see, sir, the book deals with a big subject. It gives some hard knocks, and the author no doubt felt a little timid about launching it under his or her real name. At least that's my theory, sir."

"And a good one, no doubt," said Mr. Ryder. Then he added: "That makes me all the more anxious to find out who it is. I would willingly give this moment a check for $5,000 to know who wrote it. Whoever it is, knows me as well as I know myself. We must find the author."

The sleuth was silent for a moment. Then he said:

"There might be one way to reach the author, but it will be successful only in the event of her being willing to be known and come out into the open. Suppose you write to her in care of the publishers. They would certainly forward the letter to wherever she may be. If she does not want you to know who she is, she will ignore your letter and remain in the background. If, on the contrary, she has no fear of you and is willing to meet you, she will answer the letter."

"Ah, I never thought of that!" exclaimed Ryder. "It's a good idea. I'll write such a letter at once. It shall go tonight."

He unhooked the telephone and asked Mr. Bagley to come up. A few seconds later the secretary entered the room.

"Bagley," said Mr. Ryder, "I want you to write a letter for me to Miss Shirley Green, author of that book 'The American Octopus.' We will address it care of her publishers, Littleton & Co. Just say that if convenient I should like a personal interview with her at my office, 36 Broadway, in relation to her book, 'The American Octopus.' See that it is mailed tonight. That's all."

Mr. Bagley bowed and retired. Mr. Ryder turned to the secret service agent.

"There, that's settled. We'll see how it works. And now, sergeant, I have another job for you, and if you are faithful to my interests you will not find me unappreciative. Do you know a little place on Long Island called Massapequa?"

"Yes," grinned the detective, "I know it. They've got some fine specimens of 'skeeters' there."

Paying no attention to this jocularity, Mr. Ryder continued:

"Judge Rossmore is living there pending the outcome of his case in the senate. His daughter has just arrived from Europe. My son Jefferson came home on the same ship. They are a little more friendly than I care to have them. You understand. I want to know if my son visits the Rossmores, and if he does I wish to be kept informed of all that's going on. You understand?"

"Here is $500 for you."

"Perfectly, sir. You shall know everything."

Mr. Ryder took a blank check from his desk and proceeded to fill it up; then, handing it to the detective, he said:

"Here is $500 for you. Spare neither trouble nor expense."

"Thank you, sir," said the man as he pocketed the money. "Leave it to me."

"That's about all, I think. Regarding the other matter, we'll see how the letter works."

He touched a bell and rose, which was a signal to the visitor that the interview was at an end. Mr. Bagley entered.

"Sergeant Ellison is going," said Mr. Ryder. "Have him shown out and send the national committee up."

CHAPTER X.

"WHAT!" exclaimed Shirley, changing color. "You believe that John Burkett Ryder is at the bottom of this infamous accusation against father?"

It was the day following her arrival at Massapequa, and Shirley, the judge and Stott were all three sitting on the porch. Until now by common consent any mention of the impeachment proceedings had been avoided by every one. The previous afternoon and evening had been spent listening to an account of Shirley's experiences in Europe, and a smile had flitted across even the judge's careworn face as his daughter gave a humorous description of the picturesque Paris students with their long hair and peg top trousers, while Stott simply roared with laughter. Ah, it was good to laugh again after so much trouble and anxiety! But, while Shirley avoided the topic that lay nearest her heart, she was consumed with a desire to let her fa-

Official Call for Republican State Convention.

To the Republican Electors of the State of Michigan:

The state convention of the Republicans of Michigan is hereby called to meet at the Light Guard armory in the city of Detroit on Tuesday, the 29th day of September, 1908, at 11 o'clock in the forenoon, for the purpose of nominating candidates for state officers, and for the transaction of such other business as may properly come before the convention.

In accordance with the provisions of law and the action of the Republican state central committee, every county will be entitled to one delegate for each two hundred and fifty of the total vote cast therein for the Republican candidate for secretary of state at the last election and one additional delegate for a moiety of 126 votes or more.

Pursuant to law, Tuesday, the 8th day of September, 1908, is hereby designated as the day on which shall be held in each county, the county convention of the Republican party for the election of delegates to the Republican state convention herein called, for the selection of delegates to congressional, senatorial and representative district conventions in such districts as have not adopted the direct voting system, and for the transaction of other business provided for by law or which may otherwise properly come before said county convention.

In counties that have not adopted the direct voting system for the nomination of county officers, delegates to the county convention will be chosen under the caucus system.

Under the resolutions of 1858, no delegate will be entitled to a seat in the state convention who does not reside in the county he proposes to represent.

The delegates from the several counties in each congressional district are requested to meet in district caucus at 9:30 o'clock a. m. on the day of the state convention, and select officers as follows, to be presented to the state convention for confirmation:

1—One Vice-President.
2—One Assistant Secretary.
3—One member of the committee on "Credentials."
4—One member of the committee on "Permanent Organization and Order of Business."
5—One member of the committee on "Resolutions."

By order of the Republican state central committee.

GERRIT A. DIEKEMA, Chairman.
DENNIS E. ALWARD, Secretary.
Grand Rapids, July 29, 1908.

Charlevoix county is entitled to seven delegates.

THE result of last weeks primary cannot help but be a source of satisfaction to the people of the state of Michigan.

For years they have seen legislature for which there was a popular demand rejected contemptuously by a few members of the state senate and instead of the voice of the people having been heeded, it has been the voice of the political boss.

The nomination and the election of Fred M. Warner, which is sure to follow, together with the defeat of nearly all the senators, who were allied with the "boxers," means the certain enactment of a direct nomination law, which will include all parties and all offices, and a striking out of the objectional features of the present law; a strengthening of the railroad commission law; an anti-lobbyist law; and the perfecting of equal taxation measures.

Another lesson to be learned from the primary is the powers which lies in the hands of the farmers of Michigan; that the assertion that in their granges and farmers clubs they only met and passed resolutions then failed to back them up with their votes is not true. To the farmers of Michigan and the education which they have gained by these organizations, is the victory of the people last Tuesday due, and having learned their power, let the politician beware in the future how he trents the wishes of the wealth producers of the state—the farmer.

Another lesson to be learned is that the method of campaigning should be changed. The use of newspaper advertising space is essential to a candidate, but he should only use that space to give his records and the reasons why he asks nomination at the hands of the people and what he promises to do, if elected, not only for the sake of party success, but in the interests of clean politics.

BARNARD SOCIAL A SUCCESS

Attended by Charlevoix Delegation Who Report a Splendid Time.

There was a chicken-pie social at the Barnard church Tuesday evening which was well attended by the following Charlevoix people:

Dr. L. Lewis and family, W. W. Washburn, Jr. and wife, Mrs. Emily S. Blodgett, Dr. F. H. Wilkinson and wife.

The Charlevoix contingent assisted in the program and the local school teacher gave two readings, making the literary and musical entertainment second only to the epicurian triumph in which the ladies of Barnard acquired fresh laurels for themselves and added to a reputation for hospitality and culinary skill that was already equal to that of any section of the state.

It is reported on excellent authority that Dr. Lewis ate three large helpings of chicken pie and a whole pumpkin pie and then complained that nature had done him an injustice in making his neck too short to permit his tasting the food longer.

The Remedy That Does

"Dr. King's New Discovery is the remedy that does the healing others promise but fail to perform," says Mrs. E. R. Pierson of Auburn Centre, Pa." It is curing me of throat and lung trouble of long standing, that other treatments relieved only temporarily. New Discovery is doing me so much good that I feel confident its continued use for a reasonable length of time will restore me to perfect health." This renowned cough and cold remedy and throat and lung healer is sold at F. G. Hines & Co. & Co. 50c and $1.00. Trial bottle free.

THEATRICAL

The following is clipped from the Detroit Journal of August 17, 1908: The Lyceum season was opened Sunday by Lena Rivers, the play of that name by Miss Beulah Poynter from the book of the same title by Mary J. Holmes.

Despite the muggy weather and the promise of rain the theater was comfortably filled at both performances Sunday.

The story of Lena Rivers is simple. The father of the heroine disappears some years before the opening of the play and the abandoned wife dies of a broken heart. The father had been wrongfully accused of a murder and had been in prison; after leaving it he changed his name and eventually married another woman, a widow with a grown son. Lena is loved by this son and the father recognizes her, but fears to tell that she is his daughter. His treatment of her gives rise to false supicions and the true lovers have the usual difficulties which are all smoothed out when the whole story is revealed.

The play is presented by a competent company and is handsomely mounted. It will be in the Lyceum during the week with the usual matinees.

Are coming to the Charlevoix Theater soon.

Patrons of the popular Laf-n-Lot theater are exceedingly pleased with the week's program. It consists of high class motion pictures and illustrated songs as usual, but the special attraction is the vaudeville. The "Vernons," clever songs and dance artists are making good in every particular and have the faculty of changing their act three times during the week.

The Vernon orchestra playing overtures before each show is an added attraction this week. Fred Ford, who styles himself the "musical Irishman," fully lives up to all that title implies, for he is full of Irish wit and handles the various instruments he uses in his act with great satisfaction to all listeners.

The management announces that for next week he has secured "Guy's famous parlor minstrels."

Best the World Affords.

"It gives me unbounded pleasure to recommend Bucklen's Arnica Salve" says J. W. Jenkins of Chapel Hill, N. C. "I am convinced it's the best salve the world affords. It cured a felon on my thumb, and it never fails to heal every sore, burn or wound to which it is applied. 25c at F. G. Hines & Co. drug store.

The Army of the United States.

Sir: I thought some of your readers might like to know that "United States army" is incorrect. The solecism is not noticed because there is no adjectival form for the word "states." The only thing that can be done is to use the apostrophe or apostrophe and s and write it "United States' army" or "United States's army."—We never say the England army, the France army, the Germany army, etc. I cannot think of any other country whose name is used, like "United States," for noun and adjective both.—Army and Navy Life.

The Crease IN The Trousers

Is not merely a matter of style and neatness alone, as many people suppose.

The careful shrinking and pressing of garments causes the stretched and strained portions of the cloth to resume their original texture and shape, and so increases the wearing properties, as well as enhances the appearance.

Thus, economy, as well as the laudable desire to appear neat and well-dressed, calls for the occasional sending of your clothes to the tailor's.

We clean all kinds of clothing, ladies or gents.

We have every appliance for cleaning, pressing, and mending both ladies' and men's garments. We also have the workmen most skilled in these lines in the city. So, bring all your clothes problems to us. We'll always please you, through and through; and make your old clothes look like new.

Neighborhood Notes

Cincinnati heirs of the late Edgar Conkling, of whom Mrs. C. M. Conkling, a niece, is the closest, are about to institute suit to claim nearly the whole of Mackinac Island, the famous Michigan summer resort. Attorneys who have just finished their investigation say they have sufficient evidence to make it plain that this vast tract of valuable land upon which many buildings have been erected, belongs to the Cincinnati descendants of Edgar Conkling.

A few years ago Mrs. Conkling was in Mackinaw and stopped at a small shop to make a purchase. She was startled to see a picture of her uncle, Edgar Conkling, on the wall of the shop and inquired about it. She was told that he had been dead for some years; that he had formerly lived there, and that he had owned a vast tract of land, which was still the property of his heirs, if he had any.

Shortly thereafter attorneys for a would be purchaser of Mackinac property investigated the title to the land and found that it was defective, in that the property was in the name of Edgar Conkling and had never been transferred or devised. This added impetus to the investigation of the original holding, and it was found that a number of important buildings had been erected and that the holders had nothing better than a tax title to it.

MANY DEATHS LAST WEEK

Of Well Known Residents in Vicinity of East Jordan.

WILLIAM L. JACQUAYS

Died after a very short illness last Monday, August 31, at his home in Jordan township. He was one of the oldest residents of this part of the country coming here when it was yet a wilderness. He was highly esteemed by all who knew him as an honest man a good citizen. He was a member of Stephens Post G. A. R. and will be much missed from among them. He left a large family of children and grandchildren. His wife and several of his children had gone before. Funeral services were held at the Methodist church Thursday, conducted by Rev. L. S. Matthews.

MRS. MARY C. GUNSOLUS

Died last Monday, August 31, aged 75 years. Deceased was born in Canada, her maiden name being Brooks. She was united in marriage to B. C. Gunsolus November 5, 1851, and three children were born of this union, viz: Robert A., Hattie A. and George J. Her husband died four years ago.

MRS. MARY OSTENBERG

Died Thursday, September 3, aged 72 years. The immediate cause of her death was dropsy. Funeral services were held Sunday forenoon from her home in Bowen's addition and interment in Wilson cemetery.

JOHN THOMAS

A well known and esteemed resident of Echo township died Tuesday morning, September 1, of heart disease. He was 73 years of age April 5 last, and leaves a wife and one son, Chas. A., who has been in Canada. Funeral services were held from the Episcopal church Sunday afternoon at 2:30, conducted by Rev. Wells.

MISS AGNES SHEPHARD

Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Shephard, of Alton, died Thursday aged 15 years. Funeral services were held Saturday.

THE HORSEMAN.

Brood mares should be fed liberally, but not to excess. They should have the best quality of well cured hay, oats and bran. Moldy hay that has been heated in the mow or bale, musty oats and bran that has soured will not supply the proper nutriment for producing stake winners.

Horse Collars Should Fit.

A badly fitting collar makes the young team horse troublesome. It is of the greatest importance that the collar should fit perfectly, so that it does not cause discomfort to the animal nor wring or hurt its shoulders. The shoulders often become more or less tender at first through the pressure of the collar against them, and in order to harden the skin on them it is a good plan to bathe them with a solution of salt in water (or alum in water) when the young horse has finished its work for the day.

Exercise Before Foaling.

The exercise of mares before foaling should not be neglected. They can be worked without harm up to within a week or ten days before foaling, provided they are handled carefully. After they have been taken out of harness be sure that they get some exercise each day and do not feed large quantities of nutritious grain, as this will tend to stimulate the milk flow too soon and may cause milk fever or a bad milder. I also believe there are many cases of scours in colts caused from this error. The quantity of grain should be gradually reduced and the amount of bran increased.—Professor R. C. Ohrecht, University of Illinois.

Colic In Horses.

Colic in our horses, says an English veterinarian, is generally the result of careless or improper feeding. The stomach of the horse is small, and the digestion is limited, and if the horse is hungry and overfed or is allowed to gulp down a big feed colic is the result. Also if musty hay or musty, sour feed is used or if fresh cut grass wet with dew or rain is hastily eaten in large quantities colic is often the result.

STATE FAIR VISITORS.

Those who contemplate attending the state fair from out in the state will be interested in knowing that they can check their wraps, umbrellas, lunches, packages, etc., just inside the gate of the main entrance. This year this will be in direct control of the state fair, and every patron may depend upon fair treatment. Packages will be absolutely safe and carefully handled.

Ample provisions have been made for the accommodation of thousands of visitors who will visit the fair from Sept. 3rd to 11th. All hotels and boarding houses are preparing to take in extra people.

Each average human being has about 13,000 square feet of skin to look after and nearly 3,000,000 oil and sweat glands. The outer layer of skin is constantly wearing off and must be constantly removed to allow the new skin beneath to form fresh, white and beautiful.

It is often cheaper to be imposed upon than it is to fight. This fact results in many unfair men.—Atchison

Soda Water Gas to Run an Auto.

John Carroll, an inventor of Philadelphia, appeared recently in an automobile propelled by an engine driven by carbonic acid gas. Carroll drove the car up a hill, stopping several times on the incline and then starting again. When he got to the top he turned around and came down, then went up once more. The engine was crudely rigged up for the experiment, but there was general surprise at the simpleness of construction, and few could credit the inventor's statement that the little engine, not half as big as an ordinary soap box, could develop a hundred horsepower. The machine seemed to have much speed and to be very easy to control. Carbonic acid gas is the substance used to charge soda water.

New Tennis Racket.

A new tennis racket has been invented with a slot through the handle parallel to the flat side. It makes the racket more resilient and enables the player to give a faster serve. It is also excellent for ground strokes, as its flexibility adds strength. Then, too, these slotted rackets allow heavier weight wood to be used without making the racket heavier, another point in their favor. It looks as though they would become popular.

Taft's Favorite Flower.

The Rev. J. Frederick of Newport, Ky., vice president of the Evangelical Protestant Ministry alliance, wrote to William H. Taft, the Republican nominee for president, asking him to name his favorite flower. He recently received a reply that the white carnation is to the former secretary of war the most beautiful bloom.

Siamese women intrust their children to the care of elephants, who are careful never to hurt the little creatures, and if danger threatens the sagacious animal will curl the child gently up in his trunk and swing it up and out of harm's way upon its own broad back.

THE LION AND THE MOUSE.

By CHARLES KLEIN.

A Story of American Life Novelized From the Play by ARTHUR HORNBLOW.

Copyright, 1906, by G. W. Dillingham Company.

ther of the hope she had of enlisting the aid of John Burkett Ryder. The great financier was certainly able to do anything he chose,—and had not his son Jefferson promised to win him over to their cause? So today after Mrs. Rossmore and her sister had gone down to the village to make some purchases Shirley timidly broached the matter. She asked Stott and her father to tell her everything, to hold back nothing. She wanted to hear the worst.

Stott, therefore, started to review the whole affair from the beginning, explaining how her father in his capacity as judge of the supreme court had to render decisions, several of which were adverse to the corporate interests of a number of rich men, and how since that time these powerful interests had used all their influence to get him put off the bench. He told her about the Transcontinental case and how the judge had got mysteriously tangled up in the Great Northern Mining company and of the scandalous newspaper rumors, followed by the news of the congressional inquiry. Then he told her about the panic in Wall street, the sale of the house on Madison avenue and the removal to Long Island.

"That is the situation," said Stott when he had finished. "We are waiting now to see what the senate will do. We hope for the best. It seems impossible that the senate will condemn a man whose whole life is like an open book, but unfortunately the senate is strongly Republican and the big interests are in complete control. Unless support comes from some unexpected quarter we must be prepared for anything."

Support from some unexpected quarter! Stott's closing words rang in Shirley's head. Was that not just what she had to offer? Unable to restrain herself longer and her heart beating tumultuously from suppressed emotion, she cried:

"We'll have that support! We'll have it! I've got it already! I wanted to surprise you! Father, the most powerful man in the United States will save you from being dishonored!"

The two men leaned forward in eager interest. What could the girl mean? Was she serious or merely jesting?

But Shirley was never more serious in her life. She was jubilant at the thought that she had arrived home in time to invoke the aid of this powerful ally. She repeated enthusiastically:

"We need not worry any more. He has but to say a word, and these proceedings will be instantly dropped. They would not dare act against his veto. Did you hear, father, your case is as good as won!"

"What do you mean, child? Who is this unknown friend?"

"Surely you can guess when I say the most powerful man in the United States? None other than John Burkett Ryder!"

She stopped short to watch the effect this name would have on her hearers. But to her surprise neither her father nor Stott displayed the slightest emotion or even interest. Puzzled at this cold reception, she repeated:

"Did you hear, father—John Burkett Ryder will come to your assistance. I came home on the same ship as his son, and he promised to secure his father's aid."

The judge puffed heavily at his pipe and merely shook his head, making no reply. Stott explained:

"We can't look for help from that quarter, Shirley. You don't expect a man to cut loose his own kite, do you?"

"What do you mean?" demanded Shirley, mystified.

"Simply this, that John Burkett Ryder is the very man who is responsible for all your father's misfortunes."

The girl sank back in her seat pale and motionless, as if she had received a blow. Was it possible?

"Do you really believe this, that John Ryder deliberately concocted the bribery charge with the sole purpose of ruining my father?" demanded Shirley, when she had somewhat recovered.

"There is no other solution of the mystery possible," answered Stott.

"And you, father, do you believe Ryder did this?"

"I have no longer any doubt of it," answered the judge. "I think John Ryder would see me dead before he would raise a finger to help me. His answer to my demand for my letters convinced me that he was the arch plotter."

"What letters do you refer to?" demanded Shirley.

"The letters I wrote to him in regard to my making an investment. He advised the purchase of certain stock. I wrote him two letters at the time, which letters if I had them now would go a long way to clearing me of this charge of bribery, for they plainly showed that I regarded the transaction as a bona fide investment. Since this trouble began I wrote to Ryder asking him to return me these letters so I might use them in my defense. The only reply I got was an insolent note from his secretary saying that Mr. Ryder had forgotten all about the transaction, and in any case had not the letters I referred to."

"Couldn't you compel him to return them?" asked Shirley.

"We could never get at him," interrupted Stott. "The man is guarded as carefully as the czar."

"Still," objected Shirley, "it is possible that he may have lost the letters or even never received them."

"Oh, he has them safe enough," replied Stott. "A man like Ryder keeps every scrap of paper, with the idea that it may prove useful some day. The letters are lying somewhere in his desk. Besides, after the Transcontinental decision he was heard to say that he'd have Judge Rossmore off the bench inside of a year."

"And it wasn't a vain boast—he's done it," muttered the judge.

Shirley relapsed into silence. Her brain was in a whirl. It was true, then. This merciless man of money, this ogre of monopolistic corporations, this human juggernaut had crushed her father merely because by his honesty he interfered with his shady business deals! Ah, why had she spared him in her book? She felt now that she had been too lenient, not bitter enough, not sufficiently pitiless. Such a man was entitled to no mercy.

Long after the judge and Stott had left for the city Shirley sat alone on the porch engrossed in thought, taxing her brain to find some way out of the darkness, and when presently her mother and aunt returned they found her still sitting there, silent and preoccupied. If they only had those two letters, she thought. They alone might save her father, but how could they be got at? Mr. Ryder had put them safely away, no doubt. He would not give them up. She wondered how it would be to go boldly to him and appeal to whatever sense of honor and fairness that might be lying latent within him. No, such a man would not know what the terms "honor," "fairness" meant. She pondered upon it all day, and at night when she went tired to bed it was her last thought as she dropped off to sleep.

The following morning Shirley went out for a walk. She preferred to go alone so she would not have to talk. Hers was one of those lonely, introspective natures that resent the intrusion of aimless chatter when preoccupied with serious thoughts.

Every now and then Shirley espied in the distance the figure of a man which she thought she recognized as that of Jefferson. Had he come, after all? The blood went coursing tumultuously through her veins only a moment later to leave her face a shade paler as the man came nearer, and she saw he was a stranger.

As she neared the cottage on her return home, she caught sight of the letter carrier approaching the gate. Instantly she thought of Jefferson, and she hurried to intercept the man. Perhaps he had written instead of coming.

"Miss Shirley Rossmore?" said the man eying her interrogatively.

Over-Work Weakens Your Kidneys.

Unhealthy Kidneys Make Impure Blood.

All the blood in your body passes through your kidneys once every three minutes.

The kidneys are your blood purifiers, they filter out the waste or impurities in the blood.

If they are sick or out of order, they fail to do their work.

Pains, aches and rheumatism come from excess of uric acid in the blood, due to neglected kidney trouble.

Kidney trouble causes quick or unsteady heart beats, and makes one feel as though they had heart trouble, because the heart is over-working in pumping thick, kidney-poisoned blood through veins and arteries.

It used to be considered that only urinary troubles were to be traced to the kidneys, but now modern science proves that nearly all constitutional diseases have their beginning in kidney trouble.

If you are sick you can make no mistake by first doctoring your kidneys. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases and is sold on its merits by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes. You may have a sample bottle by mail free, also pamphlet telling you how to find out if you have kidney or bladder trouble. Mention this paper when writing Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y.

Home of Swamp-Root.

Don't make any mistake, but remember the name, Swamp-Root, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

FLIES AND SHEEP.

Pine Tar and Dipping to Protect Health of the Flock.

Fly time is on, and sheep, especially rams, should be watched closely for maggots. All rams should have liberal quantities of pine tar around the horns, which will prevent the fly from depositing her eggs. When present turpeatine or dip—will dislodge them and pine tar will keep them away, writes an Ohio breeder in the National Stockman and Farmer. The long and middle wool sheep are more annoyed by the common house fly than the Merinos and should have a dark woods or an underground cellar or cave in which to spend the day. A single fly will prevent one of these sheep from thriving a whole day.

The owner of a grade flock of Shropshires once took the writer to the mouth of a cave in which his sheep spent the daylight of summer, secure from flies and in a climate very nearly like the native conditions of the Shropshires of England. He lamented the loss of the manure, but the loss was more than made up in the condition of the sheep.

Look out for the gadfly. Her eggs are deposited in the nostrils of the sheep and almost as soon as deposited move up into the sinuses of the head, and the sheep has grub in the head. Tar on the nose or even dust will warn the mother fly that such a place is not a promising home for her future family.

In the absence of bare ground a furrow plowed in the pasture will supply the dust. Sheep salted in a V shaped trough with tar on sides of trough is practiced as a preventive by some flockmasters. Sometimes I think that between gadflies, stomach worms, lung worms—indicated by the sheep standing with their heads close together, with their noses on the ground and by running ticks—foot rot, blizzards and tariff tinkers we have a strenuous time.

Holds the Cow's Tail.

A new and improved contrivance for holding the switch of a cow when the cow is being milked has been designed by a Massachusetts man. The holder is constructed from a flat circular strip of spring metal, which is clamped around the leg of the attendant. To prevent it moving a number of projections are placed on the inner face, which engage the trousers of the wearer.

On the outer face of the strip is a spring clamp, one end of which is riveted to the strip, while the opposite end is free and curved slightly outward, so that the switch of the animal can be readily entered between the strip and the clamp. The animal is thus unable to swish her tail in the milker's face, protecting the latter from injury in this way.

Novel Highway Proposed.

A novel proposition has been made for the beautification of the highway between Thermal and Coachella, in California, a distance of three miles. The waste waters from the Coachella ice plant are diverted along this highway and extend almost to Thermal before they are absorbed by the soil, says the Los Angeles Times. The proposition is now made that fig trees be set along the highway, on the water ditch, where they would be kept growing by the waste water. Within a year these trees come into bearing, and the three mile highway, lined with bearing fig trees, would not only be a most attractive drive, but might be made to yield a profit for road improvement.

Courier Grange Column

Marion Center Grange No. 956.

At the regular meeting of Marion grange held September 2. Grange opened in usual form in fourth degree. All officers present except stewart and treasurer. The usual order of business was transacted and two applications read and one applicant balloted for. The committee for arrangement for plowing match was elected, also delegates for district convention, Henry Black, Jr., and wife, William Withers and wife being the favored ones. Lecturer furnished short program. Number present 18, visitors 2.

Deer Lake Grange No. 1269.

Deer Lake grange met in regular session September 5, and was opened in due form by Master H. C. Barber. Song by the grange. Reading of minnies of last meeting. A motion was made by Brother C. C. Moses, supported by Wilbert McGeorge, that no more public dances be given at the hall. All grangers will be cordially invited and all non-grangers must have invitation cards sent by the dance managers. Motion was carried. Meeting closed as soon as possible on account of the severe forest fires about the neighborhood. Grange closed in due form.

Ironton Grange No. 707.

Ironton Grange met August 18 with a good attendance.

It was discussed whether to continue renting the old hall of the Maccabees or whether to purchase one of its own, and a committee to investigate on renting or purchasing the old M. E. church which is for sale.

Lecturer's hour consisted of roll call and songs.

The next meeting was held held September 1 and was called to order by the worthy master with nineteen members present and one visitor from South Arm.

The committee on investigating the hall question reported favorably on buying the old church but met opposition. After an interesting discussion on both sides, a vote was taken and it was in favor of securing a hall of our own. The committee was instructed to make further investigations of the church property and make arrangements for purchasing it, if it could be secured for a reasonable price.

Sister Mabel Hunter and Franklin Courier was instructed in the third and fourth degrees.

Considerable interest has been aroused in the stores lately by the mark of the White Cat which distingnishes the well-known brand of White Cat Underwear for men.

This line of underwear is made in various weights by the Cooper Underwear Co., of Kenosha, Wis. There's a special grade for outdoor men, another for indoor men, and so on. A special feature of these goods is that they are made big enough and long enough for comfort at all times, and posess an unusual softness and strength due to a special process of manufacture.

Being made in different weights and grades, White Cat Underwear will be found specially suited to of men all weather conditions, while the prices will be found to suit all purses. 37tf

Socialist County Convention.

A mass convention of the Socialist party of Charlevoix county will be held in the court house, Charlevoix, September 12, at 10 a. m., for the following purpose:

To elect one delegate to the Socialist State Convention to be held in the city of Grand Rapids on Saturday, the 26th day of September, 1908. To place in nomination the following county officers: One member of the state legislature from the Charlevoix county district; sheriff, county clerk, register of deeds, county treasurer, county surveyor; and for the transaction of such other business as may lawfully come before the convention.

Dated, Charlevoix, Michigan, August 28, 1908. By order of Charlevoix, Boyne City and St. James Secretaries.

The wedding of Elder D. Kanagy to Miss Charlotte G. West is announced to take place at the Methodist church Saturday evening. Both the contracting parties are well known in Charlevoix and have many friends who will wish them much happiness.

CARRIAGE AND DAIRY EXHIBITS

Under Same Roof at West Michigan State Fair.

New Exhibitors of Vehicles—Great Interest in Dairy Department, Where the Monthly Test of the State Bureau will be given During the Fair—Special Awards to This Class.

The new carriage building which was erected at the West Michigan State Fair grounds last year will, except for the space devoted to the dairy department, be completely filled with exhibits of carriages at the coming fair, which will be given Sept. 14-18.

Reservations of space have been made by ten of the largest carriage exhibitors of this state and adjoining states, and it is probable that other new exhibitors will be added to the list. In this list are included three firms which were not at the West Michigan State Fair last year. This department is under the able direction of Hon. J. K. Flood, of Hart, Mich., and bids fair to become one of the most attractive features on the grounds. The ten exhibitors who engaged space before August 15th are the following: American Carriage company, Brown Carriage company, Durant-Dort Carriage company, Flint Wagon Works, Laporte Carriage company, Lull Carriage company, Owosso Carriage and Sleigh company, W. A. Patterson company, Pontiac Buggy company, the Studebaker company.

Much interest is being manifested in the dairy department, which is housed in the carriage building. Last year, for the first time, a cold storage room was provided for this department, resulting in an exhibition of butter and cheese far exceeding the exhibitions of previous years both in quality and quantity.

Superintendent T. F. Marston, of Bay City, and his assistant, E. A. Haven, of Bloomingdale, are taking an active interest in the building up of this department of the fair and have promised the board of directors that the dairy department this year will surpass any ever seen in this section, and will equal that of the Detroit fair.

In addition to the regular exhibits, the fair management has arranged with the State Dairy and Food Department to hold its regular monthly scoring test at the fair. This will be under the personal direction of Commissioner Colon C. Lillie. In connection with this event Messrs. Marston and Haven have secured no less than fifteen special premiums, which will be awarded exhibitors of butter, cheese, bread, pies, etc.

The carriage building, with its great exhibit of vehicles and the dairy department installed therein, is certain to be a magnet for large numbers of fair visitors this year.

FREE FAIR ATTRACTIONS.

High Class Vaudeville will be a Feature of West Michigan State Fair.

Visitors to all West Michigan State Fairs of previous years have commented on the excellence of the free attractions provided for their entertainment. In view of this fact, the announcement of the specialties secured for their edification during this year's fair, Sept. 14-18, will be of more than passing interest.

With the securing of the last of the contracts the fair management is able to assure patrons of a clean, wholesome, high-grade vaudeville and circus program, in which figure some thrilling innovations, at the coming and greatest fair in the history of the organization. As usual, these performances will be given from a platform facing the grand stand, during the intervals between the heats of the racing events.

As the headliner in an amusement hill replete with novelties, Mat Gay, a sensational back somersault high diver, has been secured. From a platform elevated 80 feet above the ground level Gay will dive backward into a narrow tank of shallow water. Hardy, "the American Hoodlin," furnishes a sensational high-wire act that is a genuine thriller. Hardy is without a peer in his profession, and though the fair management made repeated overtures for his appearance last year, they were unable to secure his services on account of a European engagement.

Other engagements are with the Norins, premier Roman ring artists; the celebrated Malvern troupe of acrobats; Mlle. Gazellos, single trapeze artist; the Heidinos, in a new and original casting act, and the "Dixie Colored Comedy Four," dancers and comedians of note. The last attraction is one of a kind which has long been sought by the fair management, and the act is one scream of merriment from start to finish.

All these acts will be given each afternoon of the fair from a platform in plain view of the entire assemblage—the free amusement program alone being worth the admission to the grounds.

Tailoring for Men

There are plenty of good tailors who lack the business acumen to conduct a shop upon a basis which would allow a fair charge for their efforts. They know all about cutting and fashioning, but chaos supplants system and method in the conduct of their business. They are compelled to ask prohibitive prices for their apparel to make debit and credit balance.

There is where we have the advantage. Our tailors are master craftsmen. They know every detail, every branch and every trick which adds individuality and character to a man's apparel. But the system is ours. There can be no time idled or material wasted. That is why we can provide a suit or coat to your measure for which we charge from $15.00 to $35.00.

It is that class of merchant tailoring in which the most critical and fastidious men find their ideas and tastes cleverly defined. May we convince you of this? The saving certainly warrants a fair trial.

This represents the work of the Democratic county convention held at the Bank hall Tuesday.

The convention was called to order by W. J. Lewis, chairman of the county committee, who was continued as chairman, W. D. Moyer, of Boyne City, was selected as temporary secretary, and F. L. Pierce and Charles Ward were appointed tellers.

On motion Chairman Lewis appointed the following committees.

Credentials: Dr. G. W. Crouter, Dr. J. B. Thielen, E. H. Shepard.

Permanent organization and order of business: A. F. Miller, O. T. Johnson, Ira Jubenville.

Resolutions: E. H. Shepard, B. J. Quick, F. N. Chapel.

After addresses by Dr. J. B. Thielen and E. H. Shepard the convention adjourned until after dinner.

On re-assembling W. J. Lewis was elected chairman of the county committee and W. D. Moyer secretary and the temporary officers were made permanent. The committee on resolutions made the following report.

We, the representatives of the Democracy of Charlevoix county in convention assembled, do hereby reaffirm our faith in the principles as taught by Jefferson and Jackson, and we ask all good citizens, of whatever past party affililiations, to join with us in carrying out those declarations as set forth in the platform adopted by the Democratic party in the Denver convention.

And we further commend to all, and especially to the down trodden and oppressed laboring classes, that matchless orator and peerless champion of their rights that was so unanimously chosen as the standard bearer of Democracy, William Jennings Bryan for president of these United States.

In view of all the misrepresentations in national, state and county affairs, so naturally brought about by the long continuance in power of a few politicians in forming rings or cliques in order that they may fatten off of the spoils of office to the detriment of the masses we ask all good citizens to aid us in the election of an entirely new set of men in order that a general house cleaning may be had, and which for the general welfare of all, (except these cliques,)has been neglected altogether too long.

In the presentation to the people of candidates for the several offices and as their public servants, if elected, no cleaner or abler set of men in nation, state or county, has ever been nominated than those selected by the Democratic party, from president down to coronor and all good citizens are asked to aid us in bringing about good government by their election in November.

E. H. SHEPARD
B. J. QUICK
F. N. CHAPEL

The convention then proceeded to nominate a county ticket with the result noted above, most of the candidates being nominated after opposition. At no time were over eighteen ballots cast, although the county was fairly well represented.

Mr. Kane was nominated without his consent and it is not known at present whether he will accept the nomination or not.

The position of surveyor was left vacant for the committee to fill.

AMNUAL SUGAR BEET PICNIC

Large Crowd Enjoyed the Day at the Factory.

The third annual sugar beet picnic held Thursday, was, as on former occasions a success, although the attendance was not up to former occasions, on account of the forest fires.

The celebration took place at the factory, where a large crowd enjoyed a picnic dinner, and listened to music furnished by the Central Lake band who also played on the streets of the city. Dancing took place in the packing-room. The prize for the largest load of children was won by William Steenberg, of Ironton, with a load of fifty-nine, under fifteen years; second prize by William Meggison, of Marion, with a load of thirty-nine.

THEATRICAL

The announcement of the coming of "Lena Rivers" is certain to arouse feelings of pleasure in advance to the countless people who are familiar with Mrs. Mary J. Holmes' book. The play taken from the novel has been the principle success of the season, and it has known an amount of popularity that has surprised even the most sanguine of its well-wishers. The play is said to be a delightful reproduction of all the dramatic and comedy scenes of the book. Will be at Charlevoix Theater Friday evening, September 25.

Maloney's Wedding Day which comes to the Charlevoix Theater tomorrow night, September 17, is advertised as one of the most laughable farces now before the public. The fun is clean, wholesome and absolutely free from all vulgarity with a laugh in every line. If you enjoy a good laugh, don't fail to be present.

Guy's parlor minstrels are the big feature at the Laf-a-Lot theater this week and are pleasing the patrons in every way. Mr. Guy is not only a versatile comedian, but possesses rare skill as a magician and mind reader. On Thursday night he will present his act entitled, "The mystic supper of the Gods," which is the same act played by Madame Herman under the title, "A night in Japan."

Trixie Monroe is doing a different turn every night and will introduce her Spanish castanet, skirt, and waltz clog dancing.

Thursday night at the Laf-a-Lot theater the feature film entitled, "The blue and the grey or the days of 61," will be shown with a lecture. Harry Guys, of the parlor minstrels, will head the bill and exhibit his powers of mind reading and magic 38tf

KANAGY-WEST

Married at Methodist Church Saturday Evening

Wedding Was the Social Event of the Season in Charlevoix

Seldom, if ever, has Charlevoix witnessed a wedding so complete and pleasing in all its details as that of Saturday evening when, at at the Methodist church, Rev. R. A. Wright spoke the words uniting Dr. Eber D. Kanagy and Miss Charlotte G. West in wedlock. The ceremony was performed in the presence of one hundred and fifty invited guests.

The church was most beautifully decorated with palms banked around the altar, Rollie Lewis, Don Stacks, Drs. A. M. and F. H. Wilkinson, acting as ushers.

The wedding march was played by Mrs. E. H. Green and daughter Edna. The bridal party, consisting of the Misses Irene Auld and Hildegarde Wilkinson, acting as ring bearer and flower girl, respectively Mr. DeWaters of Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, cousin of the bride, who gave her away, and the bride and groom, entered. Dr. Elon Kanagy of Philadelphia, brother of the groom, acted as best man and Miss Carol Chamberlain, of Detroit, as bridesmaid.

After the ceremony a reception was held at the Gen. New cottage on the north side, the house being beautifully decorated. Delicious refreshments were served.

Both Doctor and Mrs. Kanagy are Charlevoix bred and gradnates of the Charlevoix High School, Class of '05. Since that time the doctor has devoted his time to perfecting a more than ordinarily thorough professional education, at different periods taking up instruction work temporarily, while Mrs. Kanagy has devoted herself entirely to teaching, for which she has an aptitude that has given her an enviable reputation along that line of work.

Dr. Kanagy has a position as head of the department of health of the University of Idaho, at Moscow, that State, where they will move this fall.

The marriage is the happy consummation of a boy and girl attachment which has withstood the rigorous test of years of thorough preparation for life and its duties, and augurs the very best both for the usefulness and happiness of the pair, who have long occupied a high position in the esteem and respect of all who knew or met them. Charlevoix is a unit in its regard for them and will wish them joy with a sincerity not to be doubted and confidence that all the good that may fall to their lot will be well deserved.

Thursday night at the Laf-a-Lot theatre the feature film entitled, "The blue and the grey of the days of 61," will be shown with a lecture. Harry Guys, of the parlor minstrels, will head the bill and exhibit his powers of mind reading and magic. 38tf

LADIES' SHAKESPEARE CLUB

Entertained at Banquet at Beach Hotel Monday Evening.

Mr. and Mrs. Baker Planned an Unique Entertainment—Beautitul Decorations.

The ladies of the Shakespeare Club, (and their husbands) for this is one of the organizations where the "men folks" only appear in a parenthetical manner were the guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. S. Baker at the Beach Hotel on Monday evening.

For those fortunate enough to be even by virtue of marriage relation, entitled to attend these functions, we learn that it was a most delightful affair. The membership of the club is limited to twenty ladies, and only those unavoidably detained were absent, about forty being seated at the tables, which were placed in the form of a hollow square, the center banked with palms and ferns, while the tables were beautifully decorated with flowers and vines.

The menu was up to the high standard which the ladies have set in their own banquet in the past, embracing caviar, oysters, fried chicken and other dainties, all served in the manner which adds to the enjoyment of such a feast.

Mrs. Baker planned a unique method of choosing partners for the table, the gentlemen being given cards bearing the name of some Shakespearan character, and the ladies cards with the female character connected therewith, so Hamlet and Ophelia, Antony and Cleopatra, Othello and Desdemona and the others represented, found much amusement in locating their partners. And some of the gentlemen had to hurriedly brush up on their Shakespeare in order to be sure of the right party.

It was wholly informal, and thoroughly enjoyable, and before breaking up, Mr. Fitch, as spokesman of the assemblage, voiced the hope of all present that Mr. and Mrs. Baker might remain during the winter to enjoy similar occasions with the rest of the club.

Pastor has Resigned

At the close of Sunday morning services at the Baptist church the pastor, Rev. F. H. Bayles tendered his resignation to take effect November 1.

Mr. Bayles informs us that he is undecided in regard to his future movements, but hopes to continue a resident of our city.

We learn that the National Rating League are about to publish their rating book, containing the names of dead beats in the various cities and villages of Michigan, and are sorry to note that there are a number of names of Charlevoix people therein. We would suggest that those owing disputed or long past due accounts look this matter up before acquiring unpleasant publicity. 38tf

Auction Sale Advertising

With the coming of fall, the season for auction sales, the COURIER again calls the attention of its patrons to the advantages of newspaper advertising of Auction Sales.

Remember the advertisement is read while the bill is passed by unheeded. The advertisement is circulated all over this territory, while unless you spend a week or two posting bills, you can't reach the readers the COURIER does. We have advertised many sales and have yet to hear of a patron who was not pleased with results.

This week on page 6 we advertise the sale of John A. Webster, Wednesday, September 30, at 10 o'clock a. m., four and one-half miles south of Charlevoix on the Norwood road. E. B. Ward auctioneer.

Last week we advertised the sale of L. S. Crandall, one mile southeast of the Barnard school house, Friday, September 18, at 10 o'clock a. m. E. B. Ward, auctioneer.

DEATH OF MRS. LORRETTA KANAGY

Occurred at Her Home in This City Sunday, September 13.

Like a dark shadow to the happy event chronicled in another column came the news of the death of Mrs. Lorretta Kanagy, mother of the Eber D., which occurred suddenly Sunday. Mrs. Kanagy was not only a woman of more than ordinary culture, but also of will power, which in the opinion of her many friends, kept her up until this marriage on which she based her hopes, was consummated.

Mrs. Kanagy whose maiden name was Dunbar was born in Asthabula, Ohio, sixty-two years ago and came to Charlevoix thirty years ago. She was the mother of two children Dr. Eber D. Kanagy and Dr. Elon Kanagy, of Philadelphia.

Mrs. Kanagy was a great lover of the beautiful both in music and art and will long be remembered for her work in musical circles in this city. Many of our prominent musicians owe their love for their art to the early teachings of Mrs. Kanagy.

The funeral took place at the house Tuesday, Rev. H. A. Putnam officiating, burial at Brookside.

SOCIALISTS NAME TICKET

At Convention Held at the Court House Saturday.

Headed by William Crosby for Representative—Three Places Blank.

The Socialists of Charlevoix county met in mass convention Saturday forenoon at the court house with about a dozen in attendance.

D. C. Nettleton, of Charlevoix, was chosen as chairman and Fred Thomas as secretary; Alden Chamberlain and John Curtis tellers.

On nominations being called for the name of William Crosby, of Eveline, was placed in nomination for representative and he was the unanimous choice of the convention.

For sheriff the name of Will Cook, of Charlevoix, was purposed by Raymond Bentley and he was unanimously chosen.

For county clerk James Lynn presented the name of Fred Thomas and Raymond Bentley the name of Will Hart, of Boyne City. Mr. Thomas withdrew his name and the unanimous vote went to Hart.

For register the name of J. B. Palmiter, of East Jordan, was the only name presented, and he received a full vote, as did Peter Allers, of St. James, for treasurer, D. C. Nettleton for surveyor, Fred Thomas and Alden Chamberlain for coronors, and Will Cook for delegate to the state convention.

A county committee was chosen consisting of Fred Thomas, D. C. Nettleton and Raymond Bently. Encouraging speeches were made by most of the gentlemen present and the convention adjourned.

A SUCCESSFUL SCHOOL INSTITUTE

Was that Held at Charlevoix Week Before Last

SIXTY-SEVEN TEACHERS ENROLLED

Superintendant Woodley Was the Man in Charge

Assisted By Miss Himes and Commissioner Milford—Stone Throwing and Melon Eating Contest

The annual Teachers' Institute which was held in Charlevoix, Aug. 31 to Sept. 4, was one of the most successful meetings of the kind that has ever been held in the county.

Sixty seven teachers were enrolled during the week and most of them were in attendance during very nearly all of the sessions.

Supt. Woodley had charge of the institute and was assisted in the work by Miss Himes and the commissioner.

Each day was divided into seven class periods and the teachers were asked to attend five of the seven classes. It was found, however, that most of the teachers were in all of the classes and a good deal of of the work was done in the assembly room of the high school building, the class room being too small to accommodate the class.

The interest shown by the teachers speaks very highly of the character of the work that was done in the meeting. Supt. Woodley had charge of the classes in pedagogy and school management, history, civics and physiology.

His work along these lines was very strong and one of the most pleasing factors of the classes was the questioning of the teachers in the class, showing clearly that the teachers are awakening to the fact that it is necessary for them to be awake and resourceful if they wish to succeed in the work.

There is very little danger of failure on the part of the teacher who really tries to find out something about her work and who is interested to such an extent that she is willing to enter into class discussions concerning plans for the work. In other words, the teacher who will take the time and make an effort to fit herself for the work seldom fails to be able to get around most of the difficulties of the school room and if she cannot get around all of them, she will be able to meet in a successful manner, those that she cannot get around.

Mr. Woodley's work along this line was very strong and as a result of the discussions and suggestions that developed in the classes, many of the teachers of the county will go to their work with a clearer conception of the teacher's duty and with clearer ideas as to how that duty should be performed.

Miss Himes' work in English, reading and geography was also very strong. Attention was called to the necessity of care on the part of the teacher who is teaching English and many of the teachers, before they left the class, were convinced that there is still room for improvement on their part and will take to their work a new idea as to what the true teacher really owes to her class in the matter of good English.

Her work in geography, which is one of her specialties, was also very strong. It was surprising to some of the teachers who thought that they were unable to do anything in the line of free hand drawing, to see the really creditable work that they were able to do under her direction and the many teachable points that were brought out cannot but have their effect on the work that will be done by the teachers in the schools of the county this year.

One of the most pleasing features of her work in reading was the practical demonstration that was given. She secured a class of little people from Charlevoix and gave the teachers a few practical hints

Pianos at a Discount of 20 to 40 Per Cent.

When Lyon & Healy of Chicago bought for cash the entire retail stocks of the three leading Chicago piano houses, viz.: The Thompson Music Co., the Healy Music Co., the F. G. Thearle Co., the entire piano trade of the United States wondered what Lyon & Healy could do with such a vast collection of fine instruments in additon to their own big stock, for these are no cheap factory pianos of makes of the highest reputation.

What Lyon & Healy have done is to mark all these pianos, and there are hundreds of them, at a discount of 20 to 40 per cent. The response upon the part of the public is marvelous.

If you know the names of good standard makes of pianos and the prices always paid, you will need no second invitation to write to Lyon & Healy, 77 Adams street, Chicago, for list and terms. For you can secure a genuine $400 upright for $180, or other bargains in proportion.

Lyon & Healy give their own guarantee with every one of these pianos no matter whether it is from the Thompson, or the Healy, or the Thearle stock. Nothing like this opportunity has ever been given to music teachers, students and music lovers heretofore.

Neighborhood Notes

W. E. Campbell, editor and proprietor of the Northport Leader, for the last eight years, will leave October 1 for Manistique where he has taken a position with the Manistique Conrier Record at a handsome salary. Mr. Campbell will lease the Leader for a time, but as yet has not made any contract. He will also take stock in the Manistique paper later on.

Editor Campbell has been prominently connected with newspapers in this section of the country for a good many years, and has built up a very good paper of the Leader. For five years prior to his locating at Northport, he was editor and proprietor of the Empire Journal, and before that time was editor and proprietor of the Oxbow Pin, Ellsworth being the birthplace of that publication, which was an entirely original idea with Mr. Campbell.

THE LION AND THE MOUSE.

By CHARLES KLEIN.

A Story of American Life Novelized From the Play by ARTHUR HORNBLOW.

COPYRIGHT, 1906, BY C. W. DILLINGHAM COMPANY.

CHAPTER VIII—Continued.

The postman handed her a letter and passed on. Shirley glanced quickly at the superscription. No, it was not from Jefferson; she knew his handwriting too well. The envelope, moreover, bore the firm name of her publishers. She tore it open and found that it merely contained another letter which the publishers had forwarded. This was addressed to Miss Shirley Green and ran as follows:

Dear Madam—If convenient, I should like to see you at my office, 35 Broadway, in relation to your book, "The American Octopus." Kindly inform me as to the day and hour at which I may expect you. Yours truly,

JOHN BURKETT RYDER.
Per B.

Shirley almost shouted from sheer excitement. At first she was alarmed—the name John Barkett Ryder was such a bogey to frighten bad children with, she thought he might want to punish her for writing about him as she had. She hurried to the porch and sat there reading the letter over and over, and her brain began to evolve ideas. She had been wondering how she could get at Mr. Ryder, and here he was actually asking her to call on him. Evidently he had not the slightest idea of her identity, for he had been able to reach her only through her publishers, and no doubt he had exhausted every other means of discovering her address. The more she pondered over it the more she began to see in this invitation a way of helping her father. Yes, she would go and heard the lion in his den, but she would not go to his office. She would accept the invitation only on condition that the interview took place in the Ryder mansion, where undoubtedly the letters would be found. She decided to act immediately. No time was to be lost, so she procured a sheet of paper and an envelope and wrote as follows:

Mr. John Burkett Ryder:
Dear Sir—I do not call upon gentlemen at their business office. Yours, etc.,
SHIRLEY GREEN.

Her letter was abrupt and at first glance seemed hardly calculated to bring about what she wanted—an invitation to call at the Ryder home, but she was shrewd enough to see that if Ryder wrote to her at all it was because he was most anxious to see her and her abruptness would not deter him from trying again. On the contrary, the very unusualness of any one thus dictating to him would make him more than ever desirous of making her acquaintance. So Shirley mailed the letter and awaited with confidence for Ryder's reply. So certain was she that one would come that she at once began to form her plan of action. She would leave Massapequa at once, and her whereabouts must remain a secret even from her own family. As she intended to go to the Ryder house in the assumed character of Shirley Green, it would never do to run the risk of being followed home by a Ryder detective to the Rossmore cottage. She would confide in one person only—Judge Stott. He would know where she was and would be in constant communication with her. But, otherwise, she must be alone to conduct the campaign as she judged fit. She would go at once to New York and take rooms in a boarding house where she would be known as Shirley Green. As for funds to meet her expenses, she had her diamonds, and would they not be filling a more useful purpose if sold to defray the cost of saving her father than in mere personal adornment? So that evening while her mother was talking with the judge she beckoned Stott over to the corner where she was sitting.

"Judge Stott," she began, "I have a plan."

He smiled indulgently at her.

"You said that no one on earth could resist John Burkett Ryder, that no one could fight against the money power. Well, do you know what I am going to do?"

"What will you do?" he asked with a slightly ironical inflection in his voice.

"I am going to fight John Burkett Ryder!" she cried.

Stott looked at her open mouthed.

"You?" he said.

"Yes, I," said Shirley. "I'm going to him, and I intend to get those letters if he has them."

Stott shook his head.

"My dear child," he said, "what are you talking about? How can you expect to reach Ryder? We couldn't."

"I don't know just how yet," replied Shirley, "but I'm going to try. I love my father, and I'm going to leave nothing untried to save him."

"But what can you do?" persisted Stott. "The matter has been sifted over and over by some of the greatest minds in the country."

"Has any woman sifted it over?" demanded Shirley.

"No, but"— stammered Stott.

"Then it's about time one did," said the girl decisively. "Those letters my father speaks of—they would be useful, would they not?"

"They would be invaluable."

"Then I'll get them. If not"—

"But I don't understand how you're going to get at Ryder," interrupted Stott.

"This is how," replied Shirley, passing over to him the letter she had received that afternoon.

As Stott recognized the well known signature and read the contents the expression of his face changed. He gasped for breath and sank into a chair from sheer astonishment.

"Ah, that's different," he cried. "That's different!"

Briefly Shirley outlined her plan, explaining that she would go to live in the city immediately and conduct her campaign from there. If she was successful, it might save her father, and if not no harm could become of it.

That same evening her mother, the judge and Stott went for a stroll after dinner and left her to take care of the house. They had wanted Shirley to go, too, but she pleaded fatigue. The truth was that she wanted to be alone, so that she could ponder undisturbed over her plans. It was a clear, starlit night, with no moon, and Shirley sat on the porch listening to the chirping of the crickets and lily watching the flashes of the mysterious fireflies. She was in no mood for reading and sat for a long time rocking herself, engrossed in her thoughts. Suddenly she heard some one unfasten the garden gate. It was too soon for the return of the promenaders. It must be a visitor. Through the uncertain penumbra of the garden she discerned approaching a form which looked familiar. Yes, now there was no doubt possible. It was indeed Jefferson Ryder.

She hurried down the porch to greet him. No matter what the father had done, she could never think any the less of the son. He took her hand, and for several moments neither one spoke. There are times when silence is more eloquent than speech, and this was one of them. The gentle grip of his big, strong hand expressed more tenderly than any words the sympathy that lay in his heart for the woman he loved. Shirley said quietly:

"You have come at last, Jefferson."

"I came as soon as I could," he replied gently. "I saw father only yesterday."

"You need not tell me what he said," Shirley hastened to say.

Jefferson made no reply. He understood what she meant. He hung his head and hit viciously with his walking stick at the pebbles that lay at his feet. She went on:

"I know everything now. It was foolish of me to think that Mr. Ryder would ever help us."

"I can't help it in any way," blurted out Jefferson. "I have not the slightest influence over him. His business methods I consider disgraceful. You understand that, don't you, Shirley?"

The girl laid her hand on his arm and replied kindly:

"Of course, Jeff, we know that. Come up and sit down."

He followed her on the porch and drew up a rocker beside her.

"They are all out for a walk," she explained.

"I'm glad," he said frankly. "I wanted a quiet talk with you. I did not care to meet any one. My name must be odious to your people."

Both were silent, feeling a certain awkwardness. They seemed to have drifted apart in some way since those delightful days in Paris and on the ship. Then he said:

"I'm going away, but I couldn't go until I saw you."

"You are going away?" exclaimed Shirley, surprised.

"Yes," he said, "I cannot stand it any more at home. I had a hot talk with my father yesterday about one thing and another. He and I don't click well together. Besides this matter of your father's impeachment has completely discouraged me. All the wealth in the world could never reconcile me to such methods. I'm ashamed of the role my own flesh and blood has played in that miserable affair. I can't express what I feel about it. But what are you going to do?" he asked. "These surroundings are not for you"— He looked around at the cheap furnishings which he could see through the open window, and his face showed real concern.

"I shall teach or write, or go out as governess," replied Shirley, with a tinge of bitterness. Then smiling sadly she added: "Poverty is easy. It is unmerited disgrace which is hard."

The young man drew his chair closer and took hold of the hand that lay in her lap. She made no resistance.

"Shirley," he said, "do you remember that talk we had on the ship? I asked you to be my wife. You led me to believe that you were not indifferent to me. I ask you again to marry me. Give me the right to take care of you and yours. I am the son of the world's richest man, but I don't want his money. I have earned a competence of my own—enough to live on comfortably. We will go away where you and your father and mother will make their home with us. Do not let the sins of the fathers embitter the lives of the children."

"Mine has not sinned," said Shirley bitterly.

"I wish I could say the same of mine," replied Jefferson. "It is because the clouds are dark about you that I want to come into your life to comfort you."

The girl shook her head.

"No, Jefferson, the circumstances make such a marriage impossible. Your family and everybody else would say that I had inveigled you into it. It is even more impossible now than I thought it was when I spoke to you on the ship."

Emotion stopped her utterance, and she buried her face in her hands, weeping silently.

"Shirley," said Jefferson tenderly, "you are wrong. If you will not say 'Yes' now, I shall go away as I told my father I would, and one day I shall come back and then if you are still single I shall ask you again to be my wife."

"You may not want me then."

"I shall always want you," he whispered hoarsely, bending over her. In the dim light of the porch he saw that her tear stained face was drawn and pale. He rose and held out his hand.

"Goodby," he said simply.

"Goodby, Jefferson." She rose and put her hand in his. "We will always be friends."

He raised her hand to his lips.

"Goodby, Shirley. Don't forget me. I shall come back for you."

He went down the porch, and she watched him go out of the gate and down the road until she could see his figure no longer. Then she turned back and sank into her chair, and, burying her face in her handkerchief, she gave way to a torrent of tears which afforded some relief to the weight on her heart. Presently the others returned from their walk, and she told them about the visitor.

"Mr. Ryder's son, Jefferson, was here. We crossed on the same ship. I introduced him to Judge Stott on the dock."

The judge looked surprised, but he merely said:

"I hope for his sake that he is a different man from his father."

"He is," replied Shirley simply, and nothing more was said.

Two days went by, during which Shirley went on completing the preparations for her visit to New York. It was arranged that Stott should escort her to the city. Shortly before they started for the train a letter arrived for Shirley. Like the first one, it had been forwarded by her publishers. It read as follows:

"Shirley, you are wrong"

Miss Shirley Green:
Dear Madam—I shall be happy to see you at my residence—Fifth avenue—any afternoon that you will mention. Yours very truly,

JOHN BURKETT RYDER.
Per B.

Shirley smiled in triumph as, unseen by her father and mother, she passed it over to Stott. She at once sat down and wrote this reply:

Mr. John Burkett Ryder:
Dear Sir—I am sorry that I am unable to comply with your request. I prefer the invitation to call at your private residence should come from Mrs. Ryder. Yours, etc., SHIRLEY GREEN.

She laughed as she showed this to Stott.

"He'll write me again," she said, "and next time his wife will sign the letter."

An hour later she left Massapequa for the city.

CHAPTER XI.

THE Hon. Fitzroy Bagley had every reason to feel satisfied with himself. His affairs de cocur with the senator's daughter was progressing more smoothly than ever, and nothing now seemed likely to interfere with his carefully prepared plans to capture an American heiress. The interview with Kate Roberts in the library, so awkwardly disturbed by Jefferson's unexpected intrusion, had been followed by other interviews more secret and more successful, and the plausible secretary had contrived so well to persuade the girl that he really thought the world of her and that a brilliant future awaited her as his wife that it was not long before he found her in a mood to refuse him nothing.

Bagley urged immediate marriage. He insinuated that Jefferson had treated her shamefully and that she owed it to herself to show the world that there were other men as good as the one who had jilted her. He argued that in view of the senator being bent on the match with Ryder's son it would be worse than useless for him (Bagley) to make formal application for her hand, so, as he explained, the only thing which remained was a runaway marriage. Confronted with the fait accompli, Papa Roberts would bow to the inevitable. They could get married quietly in town, go away for a short trip, and when the senator had got over his first disappointment they would be welcomed back with open arms.

Kate listened willingly enough to this specious reasoning. In her heart she was piqued at Jefferson's indifference, and she was foolish enough to really believe that this marriage with a British nobleman, twice removed, would be in the nature of a triumph over him. Besides, this project of an elopement appealed strangely to her frivolous imagination; it put her in the same class as all her favorite novel heroines. And it would be capital fun.

Meantime Senator Roberts, in blissful ignorance of this little plot against his domestic peace, was growing im-

Tailoring for Men

There are plenty of good tailors who lack the business acumen to conduct a shop upon a basis which would allow a fair charge for their efforts. They know all about cutting and fashioning, but chaos supplants system and method in the conduct of their business. They are compelled to ask prohibitive prices for their apparel to make debit and credit balance.

There is where we have the advantage. Our tailors are master craftsmen. They know every detail, every branch and every trick which adds individuality and character to a man's apparel. But the system is ours. There can be no time idled or material wasted. That is why we can provide a suit or coat to your measure for which we charge from $15.00 to $35.00.

It is that class of merchant tailoring in which the most critical and fastidious men find their ideas and tastes cleverly defined. May we convince you of this? The saving certainly warrants a fair trial.

The Crease IN The Trousers

Is not merely a matter of style and neatness alone, as many people suppose.

The careful sponging and pressing of garments causes the stretched and strained portions of the cloth to resume their original texture and shape, and so increases the wearing properties, as well as enhances the appearance.

Thus, economy, as well as the laudable desire to appear neat and well-dressed, calls for the occasional sending of your clothes to the tailor's.

We clean all kinds of clothing, ladies or gents.

We have every appliance for cleaning, pressing, and mending both ladies' and men's garments. We also have the workmen most skilled in these lines in the city. So, bring all your clothes problems to us. We'll always please you, through and through; and make your old clothes look like new.

THE Republicans of Charlevoix county have put up a ticket which has many strong features which should appeal to every voter who desires to see the affairs of the county conducted in the best and most economical manner. Nearly every man on the ticket is a man who has had experience and will bring to his office a knowledge of the work which he has to perform without the expense which is necessary to educate new men to new positions.

The head of the ticket, W. J. Pearson, while he has never had experience as a state legislator, has, in a large degree, that most valuable asset of a legislator, a knowledge of men. He knows through his own experience the needs of the agriculturilists and lumbermen of Charlevoix county, and in addition, stands by vote of the convention, pledged to work for the best interests of the fishing industry.

Judge Harris, Sheriff McWain, Register Emery and Surveyor Robinson all have records as faithful officers, who have the work well in hand so it will move along without a hitch.

For county clerk no better choice could be made than Daniel S. Payton. During his two terms as treasurer, by his courtesy and unfailing devotion to his trust, he has made a reputation second to no other treasurer in Michigan, and in the office of clerk, Mr. Lewis, who will succeed Mr. Payton January next, has made an equally good record, which is the assurance of a continuance of the same in the treasurer's office, each being in a measure familiar with the duties of each office, nothing would hinder the well and careful manner which marks them now.

Mr. Nicholas for prosecuting attorney made a splendid record while he held the office previously, and his acceptance of the position assures Charlevoix county of the best legal talent obtainable.

The candidates for coroners are both able physicians and complete a splendid ticket in every way.

THE time has come in the situation with which the republican party is confronted in Michigan for the leaders of that party to assert themselves. It is evident that despite his earlier statements, Dr. Bradley has yielded to the foolish counsels of the Detroit Free Press, Arthur Hill and other malcontents and marplots and will refuse to accept his defeat for the nomination for governor at the primary election on September 1. It is proposed to carry the contest into the courts. It is obvious that a recount is utterly impossible in the short space of time between now and election day. An attempt is to be made to drag the contest along in the courts until it is too late for the party to present any candidate for governor.

The lengths to which the "anything-to-beat-Warner" crowd will go is now manifest and it is time the real people of Michigan took matters in hand and insisted that the party shall not be used solely to satisfy Arthur Hill's demand for revenge.

That any one man or set of men should be able to so force the republican party of Michigan against their wishes expressed at the polls, as to defeat the desire of the great majority of the voters of the state, is cause for shame, and with any people on earth but Americans would furnish excuse for anarchism.

If the republican party wants to free itself from the imputation of bossism, here is a glorious opportunity. Let a protest go from every portion of the state too strong and imperative to be disregarded.

THERE are times when a man has an opportunity to show the stuff he is made of and such an opportunity came to our fellow townsman, A. L. Fitch, at the Republican county convention last week.

Mr. Fitch had an honorable ambition to be the choice of that convention as its candidate for prosecuting attorney, had made a campaign for the office and had several delegates pledged to his support, but when he saw that Mr. Nicholas was the choice of the majority, in the interest of party harmony, he cast his ambition aside and in a speech, which was marked for sincerity, announced his withdrawal and placed the name of Mr. Nicholas before the convention.

As the American people warned up to William McKinley for the refusal to let his name be used against the candidate of his state in 1892, we believe that in the years to come Mr. Fitch's action will be remembered by the people of Charlevoix.

THE VETERINARY.

A mixture of equal parts of licorice and ginger in the hog feed two or three times each day is recommended for the pig that coughs. A lump of coal tar placed well down the throat while the pig is held up on its feet is also good.

Cure For Caked Udder.

When a milk cow has caked udder it very often arises from lying upon something hard—cornstalks or a colt—and may cause trouble and annoyance to the dairyman. A cure, easy, simple and effective, is to take of poke root, freshly dug and chopped, one pint, boiling it in one quart of water until it is a well done mulch. Apply as hot as possible thoroughly all over the swollen part after milking, as that is the surest and best time, when there is no haste.

To Prevent Lamb Colic.

After losing lambs for a number of years from colic, says a breeder, and not being able to find any cause by careful examination of the entrails I concluded the trouble was caused by the lamb getting too much milk, as it is always the largest and fattest that die. So I remove the flock at once to the poorest pasturage possible, and the trouble ceases at once. I also find by experience that if the flock is kept on the newly sown fields the lambs are not so apt to be affected.

Removal of Warts.

One ounce of acetate of lead dissolved in a quart of water and this applied to the growth will remove warts and other fungous growths in farm animals. Be careful that too much does not reach the tender skin around the wart.

Additional Local

Mrs. Orton VanDusen and son returned home Saturday evening, after a two weeks' visit with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Chester Blanchard, of Chicago, formerly of Charlevoix.

Don't forget the lecture to be given at the Charlevoix Theater Friday night on "A Trip Through Russia Siberia" by Captain S. Alberti under the auspices of the Masonic lodge.

John Brown, of Hayes township, has traded his farm, stock, grain, etc. to Frank McWain, of Boyne City, for Boyne City real estate and other considerations. Mr. Brown expects to move to Boyne City next week.

Mrs. C. L. Judd, of Saginaw, who has has been ill for some time arrived in this city Friday night accompanied by a trained nurse and is visiting at the home of her mother Mrs. O. A. Sears, on Park Avenue.

Captain Harrison Berdan left Tuesday for Detroit where he will attend the reunion of Custer's Michigan Cavalry Brigade. He will probably be gone for a couple of months. Mrs. Berdan will join him in about a month.

Charles Herrington and wife enjoyed a visit from their two sons from South Lorain, Ohio, and niece, Mrs. Dr. Joy and husband from Denver, Colorado. At the close of a visit a reception was given, thirty-five being present.

Capt. Berdan was accompanied on his trip to southern Michigan by his grand daughter Mrs. Robert Holmes, who has been here for some time and goes to New York for a visit. From there she will go to Ft. Smith, Arkansas for the winter.

Mrs. Levi Blanchard, and neice Mrs. Boynton of Rochester, New York, left Thursday for Albion, where they will visit Mrs. Dalrymple, a sister of Mrs. Blanchard. Later Mrs. Blanchard will accompany Mrs. Boynton to her home in Rochester.

Developing Heifers' Udders.

Heifer calves should be handled very often to keep them gentle, and frequent manipulation of the udder during the first pregnancy will do much to stimulate development. This frequent handling of the udder is of no little importance not only in securing better development, but also to make the heifer so familiar with the operation that when her calf is dropped she will take the milking as a matter of course and will not require to be broken.

The heifer should drop her first calf when she is about two years old, as this will make a more productive cow than when delayed until another year. When the first calf is not dropped until the third year one calf and one year of milking are lost, and the heifer acquires a tendency to use her surplus feed in the laying on of fat instead of in the secretion of milk, a tendency which will be retained through life and which would have been avoided by earlier breeding.—W. R. Gilbert.

Cow Demands Regularity.

The dairy cow is a good timekeeper and knows very well when milking time comes. If she is neglected and allowed to go far beyond the regular time she begins to worry and loss follows. There are some cows that certain milkers can never get clean. They milk out all that flows readily and strip around once or twice, then call it finished. With some cows this answers, but with others the milker must reach well up to the udder and work it with a sort of kneading process. A little manipulation of this sort will cause the whole quantity to flow into the teats, whereas without it there will be from a gill to a pint of the richest milk left in the udder every time, which means a prematurely dry cow.

A Satisfactory Combination.

I know of no farm work so profitable as the breeding and feeding of swine in connection with the production of cream and raising of fruit, says a farmer in the Agriculturist. We turn our brood sows into an orchard of about four acres in the spring and feed them half rations of skimmilk, middlings and bran. This keeps them rugged and thrifty, and the pigs grow likewise. The trees look fine, and we get a good crop every year.

The Cause of Many Sudden Deaths

There is a disease prevailing in this country most dangerous because so deceptive. Many sudden deaths are caused by it—heart disease, pneumonia, heart failure or apoplexy are often the result of kidney disease. If kidney trouble is allowed to advance the kidney-poisoned blood will attack the vital organs or the kidneys themselves break down and waste away cell by cell.

Bladder troubles most always result from a derangement of the kidneys and a cure is obtained quickest by a proper treatment of the kidneys. If you are feeling badly you can make no mistake by taking Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and sold by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sized bottles. You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful new discovery and a book that tells all about it, both sent free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co. Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper.

WILL ERECT BUILDING

New Three Story Structure at the Beulah Home

To Be Built of Brick and Stone at Cost of $10,000

From Mr. Swift the Journal learns that next summer another large building will be added to the Beulah Home Commonwealth. It is to be a large stone and brick three story and basement building and will be located just beyond the present Home. The lower story will be laid up with field stone and then brick will be used for the rest of the structure. It is to cost $10,000 and Mr. Swift says he does not know where the money will come from but with his usual confidence and trust in the good people he knows that it will be forthcoming because it is needed and they want it.

It certainly is very much needed for at present with their limited quarters it is impossible to seperate the smaller boys from the larger ones and in Mr. Swift's opinion this should be done in order to accomplish the most good.

We understand that they have a couple of thousand on hand now for the new home and another thousand in sight, which will be handed over as soon as the present two thousand is increased to four thousand. Mr. Swift assured the Journal man that the five thousand would be raised by Thanksgiving and we believe him.—Boyne City Journal.

as to the manner in which a reading lesson should be presented to a class of children.

Space will not permit us to mention nearly all of the things that were discussed during the week but we are satisfied that no teacher who attended the sessions and paid attention to the work could help but go to her work with a better spirit and with a determination to accomplish something and to develope the principles of manhood and womanhood in her pupils.

The commissioner had general charge of matters and used one of the seven periods into which each day was divided. Most of the time during this period was given to talks with the teachers about some of the mistakes that they make and suggested remedies.

Stress was laid upon the fact that in order to be successful, it is necessary that the teacher shall get down to real hard work and that in order that she may be successful, it is necessary that she shall put into her work the same amount of energy that she would put into any other line of work and it was strongly hinted to many teachers fail in teaching for the same reason that they would fail in any other line of work, and that is simply because they will not do the amount of work that it is necessary for the successful teacher to do.

The little contest in eating watermelon and marshmallows and in throwing stones into the lake was also a very pleasing feature of the meeting. Mr. Woodley easily carried off the honors in disposing of the luscious melon and Miss Hines kept the crowd so busily engaged in dodging the stones which she was throwing at the lake that no one cared to take a chance on entering into competition with her and she was declared to be the victor. Some of her efforts actually made the water splash and we think that with a little practice, she will be able to throw a stone in the same direction that she looks.

As for the marshmallows, we simply say that if the young ladies will enter the school work with the same determination to do their best that was shown when the fire was built and the marshmallows appeared, the schools of the county will be in good hands for the next year.

During the institute, certificates earned at the August examination were given to the following teachers:

Second Grades to Ruth Dillman, Gertrude Scroggie, Mae Stohlman, Oral Misenar and Edna Danforth. Third Grades to Carlie E. Beach, Enga Berg, Bessie Light, Ida Price, Wilber Matthews, Belle Henning, Eva Hellar, Sue Bala, Phyllis Hurlbert, Anna Wilder, Stelle Sedgeman, Myrta Ward and Austin Sheldon.

THE ISSUE AND PARTY RECORD.

Will the People Trust Experimentalists and Theorists?

(From Sherman's Speech of Acceptance.)

The overshadowing issue of the campaign really is: Shall the administration of President Roosevelt be approved, shall a party of demonstrated capacity in administrative affairs be continued in power, shall the reins of government be placed in experienced hands, or do the people prefer to trust their destinies to an aggregation of experimental mabompients and theorists, whose only claim to a history is a party name they differed?

With a record of four decades of wise legislation; two score years of faithful administration; offering its fulfilled pledges as a guaranty of its promises for the future, the Republican party appeals to the people and, with full confidence in their wisdom and patriotism, awaits the rendition of the November verdict.

DENIES THAT BRYAN "COULD DO NO HARM."

Congressman Burke Says Office of President Is Infinitely More Powerful Than Congress.

Congressman James Francis Burke, of Pittsburg, in an address on "The Powers of the President," says:

"The American people can make no greater mistake than to elect Mr. Bryan on the assumption that he can do no harm in the face of an adverse Senate. As between the executive and legislative departments of the government, the former has infinitely greater power to rule and ruin than the latter.

"Mr. Taft and Mr. Bryan are wholly different types of men. Each possesses a strong individual character, which would certainly assert itself in the White House. What either of these men would do during a four years' term in the White House is causing as much anxiety among thoughtful Americans as the mere matter of election alone.

"As a distributer of moneys the President is without a rival in the world. Through the agencies under his control he will this year disburse a billion dollars, showing the great things we are doing in adding to the unparalleled list of the world's achievements.

"In view of the fact that during the fifteen years of Bryan leadership the States controlled by his party have decreased from 23 to 12, the number of Senators from 48 to 31, the number of Representatives in Congress from 220 to 164, and in that time the Democratic party was in control of the ground, whereas it is now, as a consequence of his teachings, a hopelessly heterogeneous mass of Populistic elements, the American people can see little prospects of a constructive policy if Mr. Bryan should succeed."

Tops of Fenceposts

The tops of fenceposts should be cut slanting, preferably with an ax, so that rainwater will not remain on them. When they are cut with a saw the pitch should be greater, especially in posts in which there is a marked difference in hardness between the spring wood and the summer wood.

DEATH OF MRS. JOSEPH COATTA

Aged Lady Well Known in Charlevoix as "Grandma Coatta."

Mrs. Coatta's life began at her birth place Papanoville, Canada, September 15, 1823, where she met her most devoted Joseph Coatta and August 10, 1845, changed her name from Miss Rosé Sherwood to Mrs. Joseph Coatta.

They had a family of thirteen children when they moved to the state of New York November 1, 1865, moved from Williamtown, N. Y., June 2, 1872, with their family enlarged by two which made fifteen children when they reached Grafton, Ohio. Their last station was Charlevoix May 17, 1889, where they moved on a little place of their own. Here her husband was stricken with a hard sickness, which took him away August 17, 1886. She and her eight children were left to mourn his death. From this on Grandma lived a widow with her children, until Tuesday last, "the sad fatal day" came and took her away just as the clock was striking three in the afternoon, she passed to her reward after an illness caused from paralysis lasting four days. She seemed to be conscious to the end, knew all who spoke to her at her bedside.

She died September 8, 1908, at the home of her oldest daughter, Mrs. Felix Lenore, Bellaire. On the sixteenth of the same month she would have celebrated her eighty-third birthday.

She left six children, two sisters and a brother to mourn her death. Mrs. Felix LaNore, of Bellaire; Mrs. Oliver LaNore and Ben Coatta, of Mancelona; Will Coatta, of North Dakota; Frank Coatta, of Charlevoix, and Joseph Coatta, of Boyne Falls, two sisters of Oswego, New York, and a brother in Missouri.

Funeral services took place Thursday at Mancelona in St. Anthony church Father Innocents officiating.

THE LION AND THE MOUSE.

By CHARLES KLEIN.

A Story of American Life Novelized From the Play by ARTHUR HORNBLOW.

Copyright, 1906, by G. W. Dillingham Company.

Ryder once more on the subject of his son Jefferson. The young man, he said, had been back from Europe some time. He insisted on knowing what his attitude was toward his daughter. If they were engaged to be married, he said there should be a public announcement of the fact. It was unfair to him and a slight to his daughter to let matters hang fire in this unsatisfactory way, and he hinted that both himself and his daughter might demand their passports from the Ryder mansion unless some explanation were forthcoming.

Ryder was in a quandary. He had no wish to quarrel with his useful Washington ally. He recognized the reasonableness of his complaint. Yet what could he do? Much as he himself desired the marriage, his son was obstinate and showed little inclination to settle down. He even hinted at attractions in another quarter. He did not tell the senator of his recent interview with his son when the latter made it very plain that the marriage could never take place. Ryder senior had his own reasons for wishing to temporize. It was quite possible that Jefferson might change his mind and abandon his idea of going abroad, and he suggested to the senator that perhaps if he, the senator, made the engagement public through the newspapers it might have the salutary effect of forcing his son's hand.

So a few mornings later there appeared among the society notes in several of the New York papers this paragraph:

The engagement is announced of Miss Katherine Roberts, only daughter of Senator Roberts of Wisconsin, to Jefferson Ryder, son of Mr. John Burkett Ryder.

Two persons in New York happened to see the item about the same time, and both were equally interested, although it affected them in a different manner. One was Shirley Rossmore, who had chanced to pick up the newspaper at the breakfast table in her boarding house.

"So soon?" she murmured to herself. Well, why not?" She could not blame Jefferson. He had often spoken to her of this match arranged by his father, and they had laughed over it as a typical marriage of convenience modeled after the continental pattern. Jefferson, she knew, had never cared for the girl, nor taken the affair seriously. Some powerful influences must have been at work to make him surrender so easily. Here again she recognized the masterly hand of Ryder senior, and more than ever she was eager to meet this extraordinary man and measure her strength with his. Her mind, indeed, was too full of her father's troubles to grieve over her own however much she might have been inclined to do so under other circumstances, and all that day she did her best to banish the paragraph from her thoughts. More than a week had passed since she left Massapequa and, what with corresponding with financiers, calling on editors and publishers, every moment of her time had been kept busy. She had found a quiet and reasonable priced boarding house off Washington square, and here Stott had called several times to see her. Her correspondence with Mr. Ryder had now reached a phase when it was impossible to invent any further excuses for delaying the interview asked for. As she had foreseen, a day or two after her arrival in town she had received a note from Mrs. Ryder asking her to do her the honor to call and see her, and Shirley, after waiting another two days, had replied making an appointment for the following day at 3 o'clock. This was the same day on which the paragraph concerning the Ryder-Roberts engagement appeared in the society chronicles of the metropolis.

Directly after the meager meal which in New York boarding houses is dignified by the name of luncheon Shirley proceeded to get ready for this portentous visit to the Ryder mansion. She was anxious to make a favorable impression on the financier, so she took some pains with her personal appearance.

In about twenty minutes the car stopped at the corner of Seventy-fourth street. Shirley descended and with a quickened pulse walked toward the Ryder mansion, which she knew well by sight.

* * * * * * *

There was one other person in New York who that same morning had read the newspaper item regarding the Ryder-Roberts betrothal, and he did not take the matter so calmly as Shirley had done. On the contrary, it had the effect of putting him into a violent rage. This was Jefferson. He was working in his studio when he read it, and five minutes later he was tearing uptown to seek the author of it. He understood its object, of course. They wanted to force his hand, to shame him into this marriage, to so entangle him with the girl that no other alternative would be possible to an honorable man. It was a despicable trick, and he had no doubt that his father was at the back of it. So his mind now was fully made up. He would go away at once where they could not make his life a burden with this odious marriage which was fast becoming a nightmare to him. He would close up his studio and leave immediately for Europe. He would show his father once for all that he was a man and expected to be treated as one.

On arriving home the first person he saw was the ubiquitous Mr. Bagley, who stood at the top of the first staircase giving some letters to the butler. Jefferson cornered him at once, holding out the newspaper containing the offending paragraph.

"Say, Bagley," he cried, "what does this mean? Is this any of your doing?"

The English secretary gave his employer's son a haughty stare and then, without deigning to reply or even to glance at the newspaper, continued his instructions to the servant:

"Here, Jorkins, get stamps for all these letters and see they are mailed at once. They are very important."

"Very good, sir."

The man took the letters and disappeared, while Jefferson, impatient, repeated his question:

"My doing?" sneered Mr. Bagley. "Really, Jefferson, you go too far. Do you suppose for one instant that I would condescend to trouble myself with your affairs?"

Jefferson was in no mood to put up with insolence from any one, especially from a man whom he heartily despised, so, advancing menacingly, he thundered:

"I mean—were you in the discharge of your menial-like duties instructed by my father to send that paragraph to the newspapers regarding my alleged betrothal to Miss Roberts? Yes or no?"

The man winced and made a step backward. There was a gleam in the Ryder eye which he knew by experience boded no good.

"Really, Jefferson," he said in a more conciliatory tone, "I know absolutely nothing about the paragraph. This is the first I hear of it. Why not ask your father?"

"I will," replied Jefferson grimly.

He was turning to go in the direction of the library when Bagley stopped him.

"You cannot possibly see him now," he said. "Sergeant Ellison of the secret service is in there with him, and your father told me not to disturb him on any account. He has another appointment at 3 o'clock with some woman who writes books."

Seeing that the fellow was in earnest, Jefferson did not resist. He could see his father a little later or send him a message through his mother. Proceeding upstairs, he found Mrs. Ryder in her room, and in a few energetic words he explained the situation to his mother. They had gone too far with this matchmaking business, he said; his father was trying to interfere with his personal liberty, and he was going to put a stop to it. He would leave at once for Europe. Mrs. Ryder had already heard of the projected trip abroad, so the news of this sudden departure was not the shock it might otherwise have been.

Just Exactly Right.

"I have used Dr. King's New Life Pills for several years, and find them just exactly right," says Mr. A. A. Felton, of Jacksonville, N. Y. New Life Pills relieve without the least discomfort. Best remedy for constipation, biliousness and malaria. 25c at F. G. Hines & Co. drug store.

TAFT'S RELIGION.

A Consistent Christian with No Spot Upon His Record of Private Conduct and Public Service.

To dispose of questions which should not be asked as speedily as possible let us say that Mr. Taft is a member of the Unitarian church. That was the church of his parents, and he has never separated himself from it. His wife, however, is an Episcopalian, and he worships more often beside her in her church.

These are the facts, which are utterly and absolutely unimportant. The matter of a man's religion has no rightful place in consideration of his fitness for the presidency. The constitution of the nation, ordained and established "to secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity," expressly places the very suggestion of such thought outside the pale of patriotism.

No words can be clearer than these from our country's fundamental law. "No religious test ever shall be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States."

The numerous queries about Mr. Taft's religious belief shows simply the extent to which his enemies have gone to rouse some prejudice against him. Since there was no spot upon his whole clean record of private conduct and public service to which they could point to Taft's detriment they displayed their willingness to descend to any depth of petty, cowardly, contemptible attack that might do him harm.—Philadelphia North American.

Union Labor Vote.

Hon. William H. Buchanan is one of the leading union men of western New York and in 1907 was the Democratic candidate for assemblyman in Chautauqua county. This is what he has to say of the effort of Mr. Gompers to turn the labor vote over to Mr. Bryan:

"I am a union labor man, and I want to say further that no man can carry the labor vote into the Democratic camp. I know how union labor men feel in this city, and three-fourths of them will stand by the Republican party because only in that way have they the assurance of freedom from the business disturbance that Mr. Bryan promises for at least four years if he can be elected. We workingmen can't earn wages if statesmen are put in office to disturb business and make trouble."

Dust Layer.

Water gas tar makes a satisfactory dust layer when used in moderate quantities on roads already in fairly good condition. It can be applied to good advantage with an ordinary sprinkling cart.

"Sunny"—Empress of Russia

The most beautiful queen on any throne, she has long been called." Kellogg Durland thus begins his marvelous life story of the Tsaritsa of Russia in the September Woman's Home Companion. "She is tall and stately; her hair is luxuriant and rich in color. Eyes that some call blue and some call gray look out through long, dark lashes, and in them lies a great sadness, an appealing wistfulness touched with regret, a silent melancholy. Yet as a child she was known as 'Sunny.'

"The life story of 'Sunny' has never been told in English. This is curious, because there probably is not a person in the world who would not like to hear the wonderful romance of how a poor little German princess became a great sovereign, the co-ruler of one of the vastest empires on earth, the mistress of a fabulously rich and bewilderingly extravagant court, and perhaps the most powerful woman in Europe. 'Sunny' was the childhood nickname of this poor little princess, and after a quiet girlhood, where there was a constant struggle to maintain appearances, she was courted by a wayward gallant who was heir to a mighty crown. 'Sunny' lost her heart to the royal wooer, and he, putting aside the less noble loves of his reckless, youthful days, pledged himself to her—persistently courted her against wide opposition—turned a deaf ear to the councils of emperors and queens who tried to discourage the match, and after years of battling with diplomatic intrigue and personal restraint, he carried his purpose, married the German princess, who was truly the bride of his heart, and raised her from the obscurity and poverty of her own home to the rank of Empress. This is the story of Princess Alix of Hesse whom Nicholas II made Tsaritsa of Russia."

It Can't Be Beat.

The best of all teachers is experience. C. M. Harden, of Silver City, North Carolina, says: "I find Electric Bitters does all that's claimed for it. For Stomach, Liver and Kidney troubles it can't be beat. I have tried it and find it a most excellent medicine." Mr. Harden is right; it's the best of all medicines also for weakness, lame back, and all run down conditions. Best too for chills and malaria. Sold under guarantee at F. G. Courier Grange Column

An argument which we often hear advanced against primary elections by the few who still remain opponents to the plan, is that the people do not take an interest and turn out and vote. To one who has been misled by that argument, a study of the vote cast in Charlevoix county at the last primary will prove of interest, particularly in showing the interest taken by the rural voters.

In studying the vote of this county you must also take into consideration the fact that we had no local contests to draw out the vote, also that it was a very busy time on farms, and forest fires were raging in different sections, also that at a primary only enrolled Republicans could vote while at a general election all the qualified electors vote who desire.

In 1906, 1726 votes were cast for the Republican candidate for governor in Charlevoix county, while at the 1908 primary, 1034 votes were cast for the three canndidates for the Republican nomination.

In 1906, of the 1726 votes, 1155 were cast in the cities of Charlevoix and Boyne City, and in the township of South Arm, leaving 571 votes to be cast in what is considered the purely agricultural section of the county.

In 1908, notwithstanding the busy season of the year, fires, etc., we find that, again leaving out the cities of Charlevoix and Boyne City and township of South Arm, 439 votes were cast for the Republican candidates, showing that with a growing familiarity with the principles of direct nominations the farmer vote has become a controlling factor and must be reckoned with and it is no longer possible for the cities of a state or of a county to divide the offices between them and give the farmer what is left.

Maple Grove Grange No. 1255.

Maple Grove Grange met in regular session September 13 with David Smith in the chair.

G. W. Ford, Harry Gilbert and Johnnie Leist were elected to membership.

The insurance director reported that he had received information from headquarters that one of the officers would be present shortly and requested that an open meeting be called for the benefit of the patrons and public generally.

Grange voted to hold a dance September 25. E. E. Stroud and David Smith general managers, Robert Minier and Thomas Scroggie door managers. F. J. Bartholomew to have charge of refreshment.

Lecturer's hour consisted of music and story telling, Robert Minier carrying away the honors as best story teller.

BRYAN AS PROPHET FAILS TO QUALIFY

Disasters He Foretold Never Come to Pass.

OPPOSITE IS ALWAYS TRUE.

Gold Standard Does Not Slay, Nor Does It Write Future In Blood.

As a prophet William Jennings Bryan has never been a success. The calamities which he has foretold would have brought unlimited disaster to the country if they had ever been realized. But they never came to pass. The harrowing pictures which he painted were merely figments of his imagination, based on absolutely no foundation whatever.

It is well to have Americans remember that prophecies uttered by the orator of the Platte must be discounted fully 100 per cent, for all signs indicate that he feels the fates once more and is about to begin prophesying again. A wide assortment, Mr. Bryan might by this time have learned that the forecast of evil will never be believed by those who have found that in the past his vaticinations have been but empty air.

"Driving Country to Ruin."

For instance, when Mr. Bryan was a member of the House of Representatives in 1892 he was absolutely certain that protection was driving the country headlong to rack and ruin, and in his speech delivered March 16 of that year he drew the following agonizing pictures:

"Protection has been our cannibal tree, and as one after another of our farmers has been driven by the force of circumstances upon that tree and has been crushed within its folds his companions have stood around and shouted, 'Great is protection!' • • • Thus in every State, so far as these statistics have been collected, the proportion of home owning farmers is decreasing and that of tenant farmers increasing. This means but one thing. It means a land of landlords and tenants, and, backed by the history of every nation that has gone down, I say to you that no people can continue a free people under a free government when the great majority of its citizens are tenants of a small minority. Your system (protective tariff) has driven the farm owner from his land and substituted the farm tenant."

How far this picture portrays the America of to-day or the America of any year since he made that speech any American can answer. Even in Mr. Bryan's own State he can find an answer right at his doors, for the farms of Nebraska have doubled in value.

"Murderous Gold Standard."

But during the four years succeeding that speech Mr. Bryan's agitation grew no less nor did the demon which he had raised in his own imagination hide with diminished head, for in 1896 he again saw destitution threatening the country. He had a remedy for it, a panacea, a fetich which he held up for worship—free silver. Here are some of the things Mr. Bryan said would happen if the gold standard were continued:

"I reply that if protection has slain its thousands the gold standard has slain its tens of thousands."—From speech at Democratic National Convention, July, 1896.

"Do not let the Republicans beguile you about the future. The future is written in blood crushed out of you by gold."—From speech at Erie, Pa., August, 1896.

"Ah, my friends, there is another reason why people have gone into the cities and left the farms. It is because your legislation has been coining the foreclosure of mortgages upon the farms. • • • Mark my words! If the gold standard goes on and people continue to complain, the gold standard advocates instead of trying to improve the condition of the people will be recommending that you close your schools so that the people will not realize how much they are suffering."—From speech at Monmouth, Ill., October, 1896.

But whom has the gold standard slain? What future did it write to blood? What district schools did it close? Again the condition of the country makes a calm reply confuting the impassioned orator.

Campaigning again in 1900 Mr. Bryan decided that imperialism was another danger to the country. If it were continued the Fourth of July would be forgotten by all Americans and the "spirit of '76" would become a thing of the past. Speaking at Lincoln, Mr. Bryan said:

Sees Death of Patriotism.

"The fight this year will be to carry out the sentiment of that song we have so often repeated, 'My Country, 'Tis of Thee.' If we lose, our children and our children's children will not succeed to the spirit of that song, and celebrations of the Fourth of July will pass away, for the spirit of the empire will be upon us."

Is there any spot in these United States where the spirit of 1776 is dead and forgotten and the Fourth of July a meaningless date on the calendar?

One of the most ridiculous of these prophecies was contained in a speech Mr. Bryan made in support of Judge Parker during the campaign of 1904, when he attacked President Roosevelt bitterly. This prophesy had it that military despotism was sure to follow the decrease in the size of the standing army. In this speech Mr. Bryan also emphasized the fact that he was then and always would be a firm believer in the principle of free silver. He summed up his position on this question in the following sentence:

"I believe to-day in the principles set forth at Chicago and Kansas City 1:16 to 1) and shall continue to fight for those principles."

Bryan's Precinct Republican.

At the recent primary election in Nebraska Lancaster Precinct No. 4, in which is located Fairview, the voting precinct of W. J. Bryan, cast thirty-five Republican votes and twenty-six Democratic. The same precinct last fall cast forty-three Republican votes and thirty-five Democratic, a Democratic loss of slightly more than 1 per cent. When Mr. Bryan lived in town he registered in Precinct A of the Fifth Ward, a polling place which usually could be depended upon to vote about the proportion of three Republicans to one Democrat. At the time he removed to Fairview he remarked jocularly that he was going to a community where the political division was more even, and he hoped in time so to reform Lancaster No. 4 as to make it veer around to his way of thinking.

Friday night is souvenir night at the Laf-a-Lot and each lady will receive a pretty souvenir. The contest for the baby, which will be given away on Saturday night, is getting very interesting. All votes must be in by Friday night. A fine program this week. 38tf

LABOR WORLD FOR TAFT.

Characterizes Him as True Friend of the Workingman.

(From the Concord (N. H.) Monitor.)

The Labor World comes out strongly in its advocacy of Mr. Taft. It characterizes him a true friend of labor and declares that the unfair attacks of Mr. Gompers will have little or no effect in alienating from him the labor world. It says: "That Secretary Taft is a true friend of labor is certain, and all the untrue, ungenerous, vicious attacks that President Gompers or any one else may make on him cannot prevent him from continuing to be the friend of the wage worker. Organized labor cannot afford to have itself split up into factions on this political issue. That President Gompers is wrong in forcing this most ominous fight is certain, and intelligent wage workers will certainly come to this conclusion."

Campaign Funds.

"We welcome Mr. Taft to this advanced ground," said Mr. Bryan in one of his numerous interviews since the Denver convention. The ground referred to is Mr. Taft's statement that no campaign contributions would be received from corporations. Mr. Bryan intended to convey the impression that Mr. Taft had come to that determination after the Denver convention. In that the Democratic "peerless one" is not honest. Mr. Taft is a law abiding citizen. Such contributions are unlawful, made so by a law passed by a Republican congress at the instance of a Republican administration of which Judge Taft was a part six months before the Denver convention. Be honest, Mr. Bryan, if you can!

Grocery Qualities

The higher the quality, the lower the prices!
We mean that on really superexcellent groceries our prices are considerably lower than what you will find in other stores. In fact, much of the goods we carry is not carried or pushed by other dealers because the margin of profit is greater on inferior grades of goods.
Dependable groceries and meats—our prices. A combination thrifty people will not ignore.

"Mother, why do you put wine in the pudding sauce?" and the small hand touched the bottle marked "Sherry."

"Because it makes it taste nice, dear," and Mrs. Clinton beat the foamy sauce briskly.

"But, mother, teacher says wine is bad for people," and the great bronze-brown eyes wore a troubled look. "Why did mother and teacher differ in opinion?

"Your teacher is mistaken, Grant. Now run away and play."

But after the little lad had left the room, Mrs. Clinton gazed from the window with unseeing eyes. The old home had come before her with its household of boys and girls, and she saw the bonnie youngest brother, who had eaten wine sauce at mother's table—and she had followed him to a drunkard's grave. Why had she tempted her precious little son? How could she forget?

"Mother, this is not wine sauce. Why?" asked Grant when the desert was served at dinner.

"Because mother thinks as teacher does, dear. Wine is bad for people," and Mrs. Clinton bent and kissed the little face, so fair and pure in its baby innocence. O that she might keep him thus!

"I'm very glad, mother, 'cause Mr. Brown takes wine, and he can't walk straight like father, and the boys say it is wine that makes him tremble and go from one side of the street to the other. I want to be straight, always," and the small figure sat up very erect.

"Yes, mother wants you to be like father," said Mrs. Clinton, with trembling lips. "We will tell him all about it tonight."

"And mother, dear, the sauce tastes better without wine. Please may I have some more?"

That night the father and mother talked long and earnestly, after Grant had gone to bed, and as they stood beside the sleeping child, so rosy and dimpled and sweet and safe, they prayed the Father in Heaven that they might never cause the small feet to trip and fall, but rather lead him through the straight and narrow way to the Home Peaceful.

LETTER FROM DOROTHY IDDINGS

Of the Class of '08 Charlevoix High School

WRITTEN FROM PRESCOTT, ARIZONA

A Charlevoix Girl Who Makes Good Use of Her Eyes.

A Very Interesting Description of Her Summer Spent in California and Arizona.

Prescott, Arizona, Sept. 8, 1908.
My Own Dear Papa:

Time flies so swiftly that it does not seem almost a week since we left Los Angeles. It does not seem possible that summer is almost gone and that school will commence this coming Monday. How strange it will seem not to be packing my school books and starting off at the first tap of the bell. It makes me feel homesick when I think it will never ring for me again. I have been attending the same place and I have grown to love it dearly.

By this time the summer people are fast going and everyone is getting ready for the winter. It begins to feel quite fall like here. It rained a good deal yesterday and today the air is very cool. Coming in from California with the sudden change of climate I took a little cold, but it is all over now. Since we have been home we have been resting from our visit in California. We have stayed right at home and had a good time all by ourselves. Roy has been quite busy for court commenced today.

Sunday afternoon we took a short horseback ride to Thumb Butte. We climbed to the top of the mountain and such fun as it was climbing the rocks. It took me some time to get along without slipping and sliding a great deal, but then when you are in Arizona you get accustomed to those things. Just think of climbing on your hands and knees up slippery rocks and rocky boulders almost perpendicular and about one hundred feet into the air. When we succeeded in getting to the top we were perfectly willing to sit down and gaze down the valley beneath and Prescott in the distance. The view was simply perfect and I think it was almost equal to that of Mt. Home in California. I walked out to the edge of Dead Man's Point and looked down and such a feeling came over me that it is hard to explain. We made the descent safely and had our lunch of fried chicken, sandwich and grapes by a mountain stream. At eight we started back by moonlight and the ride was a most delightful one. I never saw the moon look as it did that night. The rocks and shrubbery loomed up so clearly and the mountains on both sides that it seemed as light as day and everything still and peaceful, save for wind blowing through the pines and a faint tinkle of a cow bell in the valley below. I will never forget it as long as I live for it made a great impression on my mind. You do not know how I wish you had been there. So many times I have wished you could have taken this grand trip for I know how I have enjoyed it all.

I am afraid I never can tell you about the California visit. We took in everything but the Catalina Islands so you can imagine we were not still very much of the time. We would start down the "Angels Flight" every morning between ten and eleven, take breakfast at a cafe and start out to be gone all day.

We went to Long Beach a number of times, went swimming in the plunge, then out into the surf, where we would stay for an hour or so, then would dress and have lunch. I feel very proud that I learned to swim. Both Gerty and I could swim across the plunge on our backs without a single person to help us. Now don't you think your daughter quite a swimmer. I did so enjoy the ocean bathing. The water was so cool and fresh and when those monstrous breakers would come tumbling in and break all over you and sometimes knock you over, head under and feet upward, you felt almost like yelling at the top of your voice. Several times Roy rescued me and a good share of the time it was all he could do to keep himself and Gerty and myself on our feet. Wimpy did not care much for it so she would stand on the beach and take our pictures.

In the afternoon we would get beach chairs and settle ourselves to enjoy the band concert.

We visited all the other beaches, Venice, Ocean Park, Santa Monica by the sea, Playa Del Rey, Redonda, Moonstone Beach, but all of us enjoyed Long Beach the best.

About six we would return to the New Marylou, dress for dinner and then would wend our steps to the Cafeteria or the Bristoe Cafe.

We saw every play in the city, but we enjoyed it most at the Orpheum where it was most vandeville. Some of the plays at the other theaters were: "She stoops to conquer," "The contented woman," "The college widow," Lonesome town."

Roy took us auto riding a great many times in a large Pierce Arrow and in that way we saw a great deal of the city. Such beautiful residents and the surroundings were simply ideal. Vines and such flowers, flowers of every hue and description. The palm trees are graceful and there were any amount of them, but I believe I prefer the stately pine of Michigan and Arizona.

The Mt. Lowe trip was grand. I purchased a souvenir book of it to take to you so you can read all about it.

Los Angeles is without exaggeration the most beautiful city I ever saw and Roy and Gerty who have been to many of the large cities in the United States, made the same remark.

There will be so much to tell you when I get home I am afraid it will take a year for I have not told you half of it and it seems now as though I have written a great deal. Roy, Gerty and I also went to San Diego for a three days' visit. We stayed at Tent City with the Shelleys for two days then spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Parmelee, they made it so pleasant for us and they think Roy and Gerty are just fine. Mr. Parmelee is ever so nice and he did so want to see you. I rather think you ought to come west this fall and come back with me. Of course I can make the trip safely as far as Chicago for I have travelled by myself quite a good deal this summer.

Addios as ever
Daughter Dorothy.

SPLENDID ATTRACTIONS

Have Been Secured for the Citizen's Lecture Course.

The officers of the Charlevoix Citizen's Lecture Association have not been idle during the summer and have secured a splendid list of attractions for this season's course.

The first attraction will be the Schildkret Hungarian Orchestra some time in October. This must not be confused with the Hungarian Orchestra which appeared last winter for is an entirely different company.

No. 2 will be Elias Day and Mrs. Oranne-Truitt-Day, who are unsurpassed as entertainers.

No. 3, the famous humorist Lou J. Beauchamp.

No. 4, the Parland Newhall Company, bell ringers and male and brass quartette.

No. 5, the concluding number will be a lecture by the famous Dr. Driver.

The success of last season's course makes the demand for tickets lively and it will be in the interest of all to secure the tickets early.

Norwood Residents Ask for a More Strigent Law.

At a Public Meeting Held Wednesday Night—Adopt Resolutions.

Norwood, Mich., Sept. 17, 1908.
Charlevoix COURIER:

A meeting was held at Norwood, Charlevoix county, Michigan, Wednesday evening, September 16, 1908, for the purpose of asking our representative to present to the next meeting of the legislature of the state of Michigan, a bill regarding the setting of fire to stump or brush in order to clear land during the prohibitive season. To so amend the present law that it will carry with it a criminal penalty in addition to the statute now in force.

We respectfully present this suggestion to our representative, believing that great good will result from the moral effect the passage of this law will have on the community at large.

It will make the conservative and careful man more careful and the irresponsible and careless man think twice before he lights his match.

It is a regretable fact that it seems almost always to be people who are financially irresponsible who first start the fires, and this year's loss by fire has been beyond computation, not only in loss of property, but on account of the dense smoke, hundreds of resorters have been driven from this county, thereby entailing great loss to all our hotels, boarding houses, transportation companies, as well as the butcher, the baker and the farmer.

The following resolution was adopted:

Unanimously resolved by those in attendance at a meeting, held in Norwood, Charlevoix county, Michigan, Wednesday evening, September 16, 1908, that our representative for this district be requested to present to the honorable legislature of the state of Michigan at its next assembly a bill, in addition to the one now in force, making it a criminal offence to set fire to brush or stump during the prohibitive term, or during seasons of excessive drought. Respectfully,

GEORGE H. VANPELT, Secy.

FAREWELL TO OLD FARM

Family of John Brown Held a Reunion Sunday, September 20.

Sunday the children of John Brown, of Hayes, and their families together with other old time friends to the number of thirty-one, held a re-union and bade farewell to the old farm, which Mr. Brown has recently traded to Sheriff McWain.

Mr. Brown moved on the farm thirty years ago from Canada when only a small portion of it was cleared and has made it a valuable piece of property as the result of his hard labors. Mr. Brown will move to Boyne City this week, where he will enjoy a well-earned rest.

SHOCKING ACCIDENT

Little Son of J. H. Reid Poisoned by Eating Matches.

Wednesday afternoon of last week J. Melvin, the twenty months' old son of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Reid climbed up on a writing desk and got some matches and ate them, dying from the effects about eleven o'clock the same night.

Mr. Reid, who is traveling on the road, was located at Brown City, near Port Huron and arrived home Friday night.

The funeral was held at the house Saturday afternoon, Rev. H. A. Putnam officiating. The floral tributes were many and beautiful. Burial took place at Brookside cemetery.

MICHIGAN CONFERENCE

Of the M. E. Church Held at St. Joseph Last Week.

Rev. R. A. Wright is Returned to Charlevoix—Other Matters of Interest.

The Michigan Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church was largely attended, it being the first meeting since the general conference. Next year's conference will be held at Grand Rapids.

Former Charlevoix pastors were located as follows: Rev. J. W. Vickers goes to Allegan; Rev. A. F. Nagler to South Haven. Rev. Taylor, of Marshall, is sent to Boyne City, and Rev. R. E. Yost and Rev. W. W. Lanport are returned to Norwood and East Jordan.

Charlevoix residents will be pleased over the return to this charge of Rev. Wright, who during his two years, work in this city, has endeared himself to all our citizens who will welcome him back at an informal reception which will be held at the church parlors Friday night.

Farm House Burned Down.

The farm house of Herman Barber near Deer Lake was completely destroyed by fire Sunday morning, September 13. The family had difficulty in escaping with their lives and were unable to save anything. Loss $800 partially covered by insurance.

CARNEGIE LIBRARY SITE CHOSEN

At Meeting of Subscribers Tuesday Afternoon.

CORNER STATE AND CLINTON STREETS

Five Different Sites Were Presented for Consideration.

Site Chosen Had a Majority Over All—Work of Construction Will Commence Immediately.

The meeting held Tuesday afternoon by the subscribers of the Carnegie library fund was well attended, seventy-five being present.

Dr. G. W. Crouter was chairman of the meeting, Robert W. Kane secretary. Major E. B. Green, chairman of the committee on site presented his report. Five different sites being under consideration, viz.: The Carpenter site, corner State and Clinton streets; Miller site on Clinton street; Morgan on State street; Mason, corner Belvedere avenue and Bridge street, and Geikie and Hurd lot on Park avenue.

Remarks were made on the several sites offered by Mrs. J. P. Wilson, George H. VanPelt, S. S. Bailey, W. E. Hampton, Mrs. Sears, Dr. Crouter, Rev. H. A. Putnam, F. J. Meech, W. H. Miller, Major Green and a letter was read from E. C. Waller.

On motion of Mr. Nicholls, the secretary called the roll of those present to express their preference, the Carpenter site leading.

Moved by F. J. Meech that the committee be instructed to purchase the Carpenter site, which resulted in the following vote—Yes 375; no 323. 418 votes were changed from no to yes, leaving the final vote, yes 793; no 105.

The price of the site chosen is $2000 and is one very convenient to the city. The committee will immediately get busy and a building and library worthy of Charlevoix-the-beautiful will soon be erected.

H. S EARLE WILL RESIGN

As State Highway Commissioner January First

Horatio S. Earle, of Detroit, has reiterated the statement that he would resign his job as state highway commissioner on January 1.

"I feel that it is the only thing I can do under the circumstances," said Mr. Earle. "The matter of who is governor does not make any difference."

Mr. Earle explained that the legislature had made the term expire in July instead of in January.

"I should feel in a very awkward position during the five or six months that the legislature was in session, and considering the appropriation for this office. My successor might not be in accord with the plans I should be making, and the work of the office would naturally be set back for considerable period. I haven't the least desire to do anything of this sort."

Mr. Earle did not say whether he would accept a reappointment, but didn't seem to except one.

JOHN WAKEFIELD DEAD

Had Been a Resident of Charlevoix for Over Thirty Years.

John Wakefield died at his home in Charlevoix township Sunday morning of heart failure. Mr. Wakefield was sixty-two years of age and has been a resident of this county for over thirty years, and leaves a wife and three children. The funeral was held at the house Monday, Rev. H. A Putnam officiating.

SLAG AND "CANDY" ROADS.

Office of Public Roads Makes Unique Departure in Road Making.

Experimental Roads are Constructed with the By-products of Blast Furnaces and Sugar Refineries.

Uniquely interesting are a number of the experiments now being conducted by the Office of Public Roads of the United States Department of Agriculture; one being the effort to build a dust-proof road by combining the heretofore little used blast furnace slag, with asphalt or tar.

This endeavor is of the utmost economic importance, because if the hoped-for success is attained, unsightly mountains of slag will soon disappear from the vicinity of scores of cities, and a ready market will have been established for vast quantities of this material.

Experiments already conducted indicate that crushed rock combined with tar or asphalt preparations bids fair to solve in a measure the dustless road problem. Exhaustive laboratory tests have indicated that slag in combination with preparations of tar or asphalt may be made to serve as a substitute for crushed rock. Sections of experimental road are now being constructed which will subject the materials to actual service test.

One of these experimental stretches of road is now in course of construction at Chicago, under the supervision of Chief Engineer Vernon M. Peirce, of the Federal Bureau, and one at Birmingham, Alabama, under the direction of Mr. B. F. Heidel, First Assistant Engineer.

The road at Chicago will be of slag and asphalt; that at Birmingham of slag and tar. The greatest skill and care will be used in putting down these short stretches and they will then be carefully observed during the trying months of winter. If in the spring it has been established that this class of road remains firm, does not rut, sheds water and makes but little dust, a vast step forward will have been taken in road building, and a never-failing market will have been created for blast furnace waste.

Besides this activity in slag experiments, the public roads office is also busy at Newton, Massachusetts, with a special asphalt preparation, never before tried, which the Director and his lieutenants hope may prove efficacious as a dust binding surface material.

More unique than this, however, the office is preparing at the same place to lay a stretch of what facetious writers are almost certain to label a "Candy" Road." Assistant Chemist Prevost Hubbard of Directors Page's scientific corps is leveling a half mile stretch of road, near Newton, and in a few days will be in active supervision of the laying of the first molasses road of history. This molasses is the almost useless by-product of the great cane sugar refineries of the south, and the beet sugar refineries of the west and Southwest. It is sickishly sweet, nearly as black and as thick as tar and almost as powerful as a binder. Having always been a waste product, it can be bought at a lower price than coal tar and in great quantities.

Slag as the useless by-product of the blast furnaces and "molasses" as the useless by-product of the sugar refineries may in a few years revolutionize country road building; create a demand for more extended roads in the states where those products are most easily to be had; and add millions to the wealth of the country by putting a cash value on hitherto waste material.

While experts are laboring with these unique material experiments in east, south and middle west another scientist, also from the office of public roads, is engaged at Independence, Kansas, in trying to devise a method of constructing oiled roads analogous to the methods which have produced the famous oiled roads of Southern California. He is mixing heavy oils, possessing pronounced asphaltic bases with natural soil and sand and compacting the preparation, so formed with a tamping roller. One stretch of this peculiar class of highway will be under construction within a few days. The oiled roads of California have saved millions of dollars to the farmers and fruit growers of that fertile State in the last few years by suppressing the dust that formerly arose in blinding clouds with the passing of every vehicle. Those dust clouds, floating to adjacent fields and orchards depreciated the price of farm produce and lowered the values of real estate to a startling degree. The sprinkling of oil was tried and the dust was held in check. Then some of the roads were plowed and the oil mixed with the earth and the mass firmly rolled to a properly crowned surface. Splendid results followed in most instances.

Kansas has long been dust-ridden and the oiled roads now to be built there will, it is hoped, prove as beneficial to the people of that commonwealth as the California roads have to that State.

There is now in course of preparation a comprehensive treatise on Dust Prevention which will fall from the presses of the government printing office in a few days. Following it in a few weeks will be a symposium embodying the experience and the experiments of all State highway commissioners, park boards and city engineers who have done any work along these lines. Their views and findings will be supplemented by the reports of a federal public road expert who has carefully examined the methods now in use in France and England.

Camphor to Break Up a Cold.

One of the most efficient remedies for breaking up a cold during its earliest stage is camphor. When the eyes begin to water and there is the accompanying tingling of the nose and feeling of chilliness, place three drops of camphor on a lump of loaf sugar and place the sugar in the mouth. Repeat this every fifteen minutes till four or five doses have been taken. At the same time place the feet where they will become thoroughly warm. This will usually prove effectual in breaking up a cold if the camphor is taken at its very beginning. For a child but one drop should be placed upon the sugar and five or six doses administered.—Health.

The Oratory of Gallerus.

The oldest Christian structure in Ireland is a remarkable building, evidently very ancient, but wonderfully well preserved, at Dingle, in County Kerry. It is popularly known as the "Oratory of Gallerus." Who Gallerus was history does not say, but, as the oratory has stood practically uninjured for more than 1,000 years, he was probably one of the converts of St. Patrick.—London Saturday Review.

Colonel Bryan laments the "discrimination that has been going on against the farmer" in electing so few tillers of the soil to Congress and the Senate. What troubles him chiefly, however, is the discrimination which the whole American nation exercises against a certain farmer of Lincoln, Neb., in declining to elect him to the White House.—New York Tribune.

COUNTY NORMAL NOTES.

Our work for the week has consisted largely of material chosen from the state course of study. We have had several very interesting and practical discussions as to the reading, language and number work, which should be taught in the first grade.

The week closed very pleasantly Friday evening with a party on the beach given the class by our instructors, Misses Himes and Reed. While the sweet potatoes were roasting among the coals and some of our number were roasting marshmallows over the fire, Miss Reed entertained us by telling stories relating to the European trip, which she took the past summer.

The Charlevoix county normal class 'til which commenced the year's work Monday, September 14, has a membership of twelve and the distinction of having more high school graduates than any preceding class. The enrollment is as follows: The Misses Mildred Drescher, Deward; Florence and Susan Sheldon, Edith and Alma Brodie, Hazelle Holliday and Cecil Barkley, from East Jordan; Kathryn LaPeer, Clare Finucan, Jessie Durance and Ruth Bowdish, from Charlevoix.

THE LION AND THE MOUSE.

By CHARLES KLEIN.

A Story of American Life Novelized From the Play by ARTHUR HORNBLOW.

COPYRIGHT, 1906, BY C. W. DILLINGHAM COMPANY.

As Jefferson went downstairs something white on the carpet attracted his attention. He stooped and picked it up. It was a letter. It was in Bagley's handwriting and had evidently been dropped by the man to whom the secretary had given it to post. But what interested Jefferson more than anything else was that it was addressed to Miss Kate Roberts. Under ordinary circumstances a king's ransom would not have tempted the young man to read a letter addressed to another, but he was convinced that his father's secretary was no adventurer, and if he were carrying on an intrigue in this manner it could have only one meaning. It was his duty to unveil a rascal who was using the Ryder roof and name to further his own ends and victimize a girl who, although sophisticated enough to know better, was too silly to realize the risk she ran at the hands of an unscrupulous man. Hesitating no longer, Jefferson tore open the envelope and read:

My Dearest Wife That Is to Be—I have arranged everything. Next Wednesday—just a week from today—we will go to the house of a discreet friend of mine where a minister will marry us. Then we will go to city hall and get through the legal part of it. Afterward we can catch the 4 o'clock train for Buffalo. Meet me in the ladies' room at the Holland House Wednesday morning at 11 a. m. I will come there with a closed cab. Your devoted FITZ.

"Phew!" Jefferson whistled. A close shave this for Senator Roberts, he thought. His first impulse was to go upstairs again to his mother and put the matter in her hands. She would immediately inform his father, who would make short work of Mr. Bagley. But, thought Jefferson, why should he spoil a good thing? He could afford to wait a day or two. There was no hurry. He could allow Bagley to think all was going swimmingly and then uncover the plot at the eleventh hour. He would even let this letter go to Kate. There was no difficulty in procuring another envelope and imitating the handwriting, and when Bagley was just preparing to go to the rendezvous he would spring the trap. Such a cad deserved no mercy. The scandal would be a knockout blow, his father would discharge him on the spot, and that would be the last they would see of the aristocratic English secretary. Jefferson put the letter in his pocket and left the house rejoicing.

"Say, Bagley, what does this mean?"

* * * * * * * *

While the foregoing incidents were happening John Burkett Ryder was secluded in his library. The great man had come home earlier than usual, for he had two important callers to see by appointment that afternoon. One was Sergeant Ellison, who had to report on his mission to Massapequa; the other was Miss Shirley Green, the author of "The American Octopus," who had at last deigned to honor him with a visit. Pending the arrival of these visitors the financier was busy with his secretary trying to get rid as rapidly as possible of what business and correspondence there was on hand.

The plutocrat was sitting at his desk poring over a mass of papers. Between his teeth was the inevitable long black cigar, and when he raised his eyes to the light a close observer might have remarked that they were sea green, a color they assumed when the man of millions was absorbed in scheming new business deals. Every now and then he stopped reading the papers to make quick calculations on scraps of paper. Then if the result pleased him a smile overspread his saturnine features. He rose from his chair and nervously paced the floor as he always did when thinking deeply.

"Five millions," he muttered, "not a cent more. If they won't sell we'll crush them."—

Mr. Bagley entered. Mr. Ryder looked up quickly.

"Well, Bagley?" he said interrogatively. "Has Sergeant Ellison come?"

"Yes, sir. But Mr. Herts is downstairs. He insists on seeing you about the Philadelphia gas deal. He says it is a matter of life and death."

"To him—yes," answered the financier dryly. "Let him come up. We might as well have it out now."

Mr. Bagley went out and returned almost immediately, followed by a short, fat man, rather loudly dressed and apoplectic in appearance. He looked like a prosperous brewer, while, as a matter of fact, he was president of a gas company, one of the shrewdest promoters in the country, and a big man in Wall street. There was only one bigger man and that was John Ryder. But, today, Mr. Herts was not in good condition. His face was pale and his manner flustered and nervous. He was plainly worried.

"Mr. Ryder," he began with excited gesture, "the terms you offer are preposterous. It would mean disaster to the stockholders. Our gas properties are worth six times that amount. We will sell out for $20,000,000, not a cent less."

Ryder shrugged his shoulders.

"Mr. Herts," he replied coolly, "I am busy today and in no mood for arguing. We'll either buy you out or force you out. Choose. You have our offer. Five millions for your gas property. Will you take it?"

"We'll see you in hades first!" cried his visitor, exasperated.

"Very well," replied Ryder, still unruffled, "all negotiations are off. You leave me free to act. We have an offer to buy cheap the old Germantown Gas company, which has charter rights to go into any of the streets of Philadelphia. We shall purchase that company, we will put $10,000,000 new capital into it and reduce the price of gas in Philadelphia to 60 cents a thousand. Where will you be then?"

The face of the Colossus as he uttered this stout and deliver speech was calm and inscrutable. Conscious of the resistless power of his untold millions, he felt no more compunction in mercilessly crushing this lusiness rival than he would in trampling out the life of a worm. The little man facing him looked haggard and distressed. He knew well that this was no idle threat. He was well aware that Ryder and his associates by the sheer weight of the enormous wealth they controlled could sell out or destroy any industrial corporation in the land. It was plainly illegal, but it was done every day, and his company was not the first victim nor the last. Desperate, he appealed humbly to the tyrannical money power:

"Don't drive us to the wall, Mr. Ryder. This forced sale will mean disaster to us all. Put yourself in our place; think what it means to scores of families whose only support is the income from their investment in our company."

"Mr. Herts," replied Ryder unmoved, "I never allow sentiment to interfere with business. You have heard my terms. I refuse to argue the matter further. What is it to be? Five millions or competition? Decide now, or this interview must end!"

He took out his watch and with his other hand touched a bell. Beads of perspiration stood on his visitor's forehead. In a voice broken with suppressed emotion he said hoarsely:

"You're a hard, pitiless man, John Ryder! So be it—five millions. I don't know what they'll say. I don't dare return to them."

"Those are my terms," said Ryder coldly. "The papers," he added, "will be ready for your signature tomorrow at this time, and I'll have a check ready for the entire amount. Good day."

Mr. Bagley entered. Ryder bowed to Herts, who slowly retired. When the door had closed on him, Ryder went back to his desk, a smile of triumph on his face. Then he turned to his secretary.

"Let Sergeant Ellison come up," he said.

A moment later the door opened, and Sergeant Ellison entered, followed by the secretary, who almost immediately withdrew.

"Well, sergeant," said Mr. Ryder cordially, "what have you to tell me? I can give you only a few minutes. I expect a lady friend of yours."

The plutocrat sometimes condescended to be jocular with his subordinates.

"A lady friend of mine, sir?" echoed the man, puzzled.

"Yes—Miss Shirley Green, the author," replied the financier, enjoying the detective's embarrassment. "That suggestion of yours worked out all right. She's coming here today."

"I'm glad you've found her, sir."

"It was a tough job," answered Ryder, with a grimace. "We wrote half a dozen times before she was satisfied with the wording of the invitation, but finally we landed her, and I expect her at 3 o'clock. Now, what about that Rossmore girl? Did you go down to Massapequa?"

"Yes, sir. I have been there half a dozen times. In fact, I've just come from there. Judge Rossmore is there, all right, but his daughter has left for parts unknown."

"Gone away! Where?" exclaimed the financier.

This was what he dreaded. As long as he could keep his eye on the girl there was little danger of Jefferson making a fool of himself; with her disappeared everything was possible.

"I could not find out, sir. Their neighbors don't know much about them. They say they're haughty and stuck up. The only one I could get anything out of was a parson named Beetle. He said it was a sad case, that they had reverses and a daughter who was in Paris"—

"Yes, yes," said Ryder impatiently, "we know all that. But where's the daughter now?"

"Search me, sir. I even tried to pump the slavey. Gee, what a vixen! She almost flew at me. She said she didn't know and didn't care."

Ryder brought his fist down with force on his desk, a trick he had when he wished to emphasize a point.

"Sergeant, I don't like the mysterious disappearance of that girl. You must find her, do you hear? You must find her if it takes all the sleuths in the country. Had my son been seen there?"

"The parson said he saw a young fellow answering his description sitting on the porch of the Rossmore cottage the evening before the girl disappeared, but he didn't know who he was and hasn't seen him since."

"That was my son, I'll wager. He knows where the girl is. Perhaps he's with her now. Maybe he's going to marry her. That must be prevented at any cost. Sergeant, find that Rossmore girl and I'll give you $1,000."

The detective's face flushed with pleasure at the prospect of so liberal a reward. Rising, he said:

"I'll find her, sir. I'll find her."

Mr. Bagley entered, wearing the solemn, important air he always affected when he had to announce a visitor of consequence. But before he could open his mouth Mr. Ryder said:

"Bagley, when did you see my son Jefferson last?"

"Today, sir. He wanted to see you to say goodby. He said he would be back."

Ryder gave a sigh of relief and addressing the detective said:

"It's not so bad as I thought." Then turning again to his secretary he asked:

"Well, Bagley, what is it?"

"There's a lady downstairs, sir—Miss Shirley Green."

The financier half sprang from his seat.

"Oh, yes. Show her up at once. Goodby, sergeant, goodby. Find that Rossmore woman and the $1,000 is yours."

The detective went out, and a few moments later Mr. Bagley reappeared usbering in Shirley.

The mouse was in the den of the lion.

CHAPTER XII.

MR. RYDER remained at his desk and did not even look up when his visitor entered. He pretended to be busily preoccupied with his papers, which was a favorite pose of his when receiving strangers. This frigid reception invariably served its purpose, for it led visitors not to expect more than they got, which usually was little enough. For several minutes Shirley stood still, not knowing whether to advance or to take a seat. She gave a little conventional cough, and Ryder looked up. What he saw so astonished him that he at once took from his mouth the cigar he was smoking and rose from his seat. He had expected a gaunt old maid with spectacles, and here was a stylish, good looking young woman, who could not possibly be over twenty-five. There was surely some mistake. This slip of a girl could not have written "The American Octopus." He advanced to greet Shirley.

"You wish to see me, madam?" he asked courteously. There were times when even John Burkett Ryder could be polite.

"Yes," replied Shirley, her voice trembling a little in spite of her efforts to keep cool. "I am here by appointment. Three o'clock. Mrs. Ryder's note said. I am Miss Green."

"You—Miss Green?" echoed the financier dubiously.

"Yes, I am Miss Green—Shirley Green, author of 'The American Octopus.' You asked me to call. Here I am."

For the first time in his life John Ryder was nonplused. He coughed and stammered and looked round for a place where he could throw his cigar. Shirley, who enjoyed his embarrassment, put him at his ease.

"Oh, please go on smoking," she said. "I don't mind it in the least."

Ryder threw the cigar into a receptacle and looked closely at his visitor.

"So you are Shirley Green, eh?"

"That is my nom de plume—yes," replied the girl nervously. She was already wishing herself back at Massapequa. The financier eyed her for a moment in silence as if trying to gauge the strength of the personality of this audacious young woman, who had dared to criticise his business methods in public print; then, waving her to a seat near his desk, he said:

"Won't you sit down?"

"Thank you," murmured Shirley. She sat down, and he took his seat at the other side of the desk, which brought them face to face. Again inspecting the girl with a close scrutiny that made her cheeks burn, Ryder said:

"I rather expected"— He stopped for a moment as if uncertain what to say:

There's a Reason

Why real estate is worth more at one time than another. The price is based upon its rental value.

Its rental value is based upon the demand for it by tenants.

The demand for it is caused by an increase in population.

The increase in population is caused by the advent of manufactories into the community.

A manufactory employing a hundred men suddenly injected into a small city will increase rents in that city 25 per cent. The man who is paying rent, if he is wise, will buy him a house and pay for it with the money that would go for rent.

AND I HAVE THE HOUSE. Small payment down. Balance monthly or quarterly.

Cleaning Satisfaction

A smile of satisfaction will come over your face if you let us do your work, for everything we do is done well. The green and faded look of those clothes is more apparent to observers than to owners themselves. Just look over your wardrobe and see if you do not find some that need to be cleaned or dyed. If so, send them to us or phone No. 204 2-r and we will call and tell you what the cost will be to make them look like new.

A trial will convince you of our ability to save you money in putting men, women and children's garments and household articles in comparatively new condition to do service for a long time. Promptitude is one of our virtues.

BOSSISM DIES HARD.

THE real purpose behind the primary election recount—what is it? Certainly Dr. Bradley has not taken the trouble to demand a recount for the sole purpose of assuaging his grief over defeat, nor for the purpose of getting the nomination for himself. Nobody at all familiar with the situation credits the statement that Dr. Bradley's sole purpose is to clear up the suspicion of fraud and irregularities that cling to the primary election contest for the governorship, and no reasonable person expects there were more frauds and irregularities on one side than on the other. Our own opinion is that men behind Dr. Bradley whose names do not appear on the recount petition have a strong dislike of primary nominations, and would be delighted to see the system discredited and overthrown if possible. These men have fought direct nominations in season and out, have organized opposition thereto in the senate, and have to the present moment succeeded in preventing the enactment of a satisfactory primary election law. Perhaps they are of the opinion that the present mess will occasion sufficient public disgust to prevent the enactment of any further legislation restoring to the people those powers which belong to them under a democratic form of government. Political bossism dies hard.—Lansing Journal.

BEST EQUIPPED CANDIDATE

"Of all the presidental candidates within the memory of this generation, Taft is unquestionably the best equipped, in training and experience, and in wide and close contact with large affairs. In one important respect his equipment is unlike that of any of the presidents, no one of whom had ever served on the bench. With the exception of those nominated on their military records, and two or three who had been governors of their states, the presidents have been men whose political training was in the legislative branch. Taft was never in congress, or even in his state legislature. He is wholly without personal experience in what is called practical politics. He was educated for the bar; early became a judge; the whole trend of his thought and of his ambition has been in the line of judiciary, and his ingrained judicial temperament it was that made him so conspicuously useful and successful in many difficult administrative problems he was later called upon to solve.

"It was a distinct sacrifice he made when President McKinley took him from a life position that he enjoyed, and that was in line of his dearest hopes, to lay upon him the burden of establishing peace and order in the Philippines. The judgment, tact and skill with which he carried on that great task, the candid diplomacy with which he smoothed away perplexing obstacles; the unselfish devotion with which he has upheld the interests of those far-away people in the face of indifference at home, were an honor to the nation. The same qualities of a wise adjudicator have been repeatedly at the service of the country. In Cuba, in Panama, in Japan, it has been necessary only to "send for Taft." Misunderstandings are cleared up and difficulties vanish before this gracious personality, his calm, clear, disentangling mind. His intellectual integrity and disinterestedness have been as unmistakable as his quiet strength, his unswerving sense of justice, his absolute honesty. It is not a mind that moves by impulse or in starting flashing; it is a mind well poised and of singular lucidity, that reaches its results by logical principles, which do not antagonize."—From the Philadelphia Public Ledger Ind. Dem.

HORSES IN SUMMER.

Care and Attention They Should Have During Hot Weather.

Extreme hot weather brings more or less suffering to a horse. The animal that has not received the proper care and attention is very apt to become a victim of heat exhaustion. A bran mash twice a week will assist in keeping the system cool, and in case of overfat a dram of pulverized saltpeter added to the mash will be beneficial.

When the weather is very hot it is better to allow the teams two hours for dinner instead of one, and they should not be fed until they are somewhat cooled off. It will also be best to take off the harness while the horses are eating their dinner. This extra labor is offset by the comfort given the animals.

In a three horse team the middle horse is more liable to heat exhaustion than the rest on account of the additional amount of heat radiated from the horse on either side of him. It therefore is advisable to so change the horses that one will not be compelled to be in the middle more than a half day at a time.

Should it be seen that the animal lags, droops his head, pants hard or ceases to perspire he should at once be unbitched and the harness removed; then with a hose or sponge very cold water should be applied to the back and crown of the head, after which he should be allowed to stand in a shady place outdoors.

If, however, the exhaustion becomes more pronounced and the eyes of the horse are bloodshot, the nostrils fiery red and the pulse bounding strong and fast, give, in addition to the above treatment, four ounces of good whisky in a pint of water or one ounce of aromatic spirits of ammonia and two ounces of spirits of nitrous ether in a quart of water, repeating the dose every hour until the pulse becomes normal and the horse stops panting and holds up his head; then give him a half pailful of water in which one ounce of pulverized saltpeter has been dissolved. The next day give one-third of an ounce of the saltpeter in the drinking water three times.

If, after all this treatment, the horse lapses into a condition of semiconsciousness, which can be told by a sleepy look, the eyes half closed, forgetting to chew the food taken into the mouth and staggering when attempting to walk, he should be given two grams of iodide of potash three times daily in the drinking water. The food should be composed of soft mashes and fresh green grass and the head kept cool by applying cold water, but not ice packs, as they are apt to produce softening of the brain.

It is dangerous to bleed a horse for heat exhaustion or sunstroke and equally harmful to dose him with tincture of aconite.

The Capuchin church in Vienna is not only the Hapsburg family sepulcher, but is said to be also probably the most striking burial place in the whole world. Over and above the more than a hundred coffins, those of emperors and empresses draped in black velvet and gold, while the lesser Hapsburgs rest under red and silver trappings, there is an array of crystal vases, each containing the heart of a Hapsburg. Ever since the thirteenth century it has been the custom of the royal house for its dead to have the heart removed and separately enshrined in a little crystal casket, while another custom requires the Hapsburgs to lie actually in wood, which, however, may have an outer metal covering.

A GREAT DISCOVERY

Certain Ingredients That Really Grow Hair When Properly Combined.

Resorcin is one of the most effective germ destroyers ever discovered by science, and in connection with Beta Napthol, which is both germicidal and antiseptic, a combination is formed which destroys the germs which rob the hair of its natural nourishment, and also creates a clean, healthy condition of the scalp, which prevents the development of new germs.

Pilocarpin, although not a coloring matter or dye, is a well-known ingredient for restoring the hair to its natural color, when the loss of hair has been caused by disease of the scalp.

These ingredients in proper combination, with alcohol added as a stimulant and for its well defined nourishing properties, perfect the most effective remedy that is known for scalp and hair troubles.

We have a remedy which is chiefly composed of these ingredients, in combination with other extremely invaluable medicinal agents. We guarantee it to positively cure dandruff and to grow hair; even though the scalp in spots is bare of hair. If there is any vitality left in the roots, it will positively cure baldness. If the scalp has a glazed shiny appearance, it's an indication that baldness is permanent but in every other instance, baldness is curable.

We want everyone troubled with scalp disease or loss of hair to try Rexall "93" Hair Tonic. If it does not cure dandruff and grow hair to the satisfaction of the user, we will without question or quibble return every cent paid us for it. We print this guarantee on every bottle. It has effected a positive cure in 93 per cent of cases where put to a practical test.

Rexall "93" Hair Tonic is entirely unlike, and in every particular better, than any thing else we know of for the purpose for which it is prescribed. We urge you to try this preparation at our entire risk. Certainly we know of no better guarantee to give you. A. B. Fleischer, proprietor Ivy Drug Store.

Tailoring for Men

There are plenty of good tailors who lack the business acumen to conduct a shop upon a basis which would allow a fair charge for their efforts. They know all about cutting and fashioning, but chaos supplants system and method in the conduct of their business. They are compelled to ask prohibitive prices for their apparel to make debit and credit balance.

There is where we have the advantage. Our tailors are master craftsmen. They know every detail, every branch and every trick which adds individuality and character to a man's apparel. But the system is ours. There can be no time idled or material wasted. That is why we can provide a suit or coat to your measure for which we charge from $15.00 to $35.00.

It is that class of merchant tailoring in which the most critical and fastidious men find their ideas and tastes cleverly defined. May we convince you of this? The saving certainly warrants a fair trial.

There are many writers of melodrama who evolve parts as clever as that of "Old Arkansaw," but few authors, if any can equal Fred Raymond's ability in introducing comedy into a ploy. Those who have seen "The Missouri Girl" know that fun predominates in the performance and it is said that "Old Arkansaw" abounds with the same spirit of humor as Mr. Raymond's former plays. "Old Arkansaw" will be seen here on Monday, September 28, at Charlevoix Theater. 3301

THEATRICAL

One of the most pretentious attractions which will be seen at the Charlevoix Theater this season is Fred Raymond's famous comedy drama, "Old Arkansaw," which will be presented on Monday evening, September 28. This is one of the most unique plays ever brought to our city. It fairly bubbles over from beginning to end and affords an evening of rare amusement. "Old Arkansaw" presents some stage characters which are entirely different from those seen in other dramatic or comedy productions. There is nothing low, vulgar or questionable, but every line and situation is as clean, pure and wholesome as a spring of running water from the bosom of the mountain.

An attraction that has had a tremendous amount of success throughout the country is the dramatization of Mrs. Mary J. Holmes' widely read novel, "Lena Rivers." The drawing powers of this play are said to be extraordinary and it is not difficult to understand why Mrs. Holmes' books have appealed to all classes for over fifty years and her readers probably number over ten millions. It stands to reason that a good play made out of this book would enjoy success, commensurate with the success of the story. From reports a more than good play was made out of the book, hence it is being heralded as the greatest comedy success of modern times. It will please any number of people to know that "Lena Rivers" will be presented at the Charlevoix Theater Friday evening, September 25. The company is said to be an exceptionally strong one and is under the direction of Burton Nixon. The play contains all of the good things which made the book so interesting.

An exceptionally strong bill is being played at the Laf-a-Lot Theater this week, consisting of a single musical act, by the premier mandolinist of America, Mr. Chas. Rector. He also renders some very clever selections on the banjo. The funny sketch team Reade & Wright are introducing some good sketches. Their singing is fine and Mr. Reade as a black face oddity buck and wing dancer is undoubtly the best seen here in some time. The motion pictures and illustrated song are both interesting and educational.

Friday night at the Laf-a-Lot Theater each lady will receive a beautiful hat pin souvenir. Saturday afternoon is school children's souvenir matinee, each child receiving a souvenir. Saturday night the baby pig is to be raffled off for the benefit of the H. S. Athletic Association. 3301

The Cause of Many Sudden Deaths

There is a disease prevailing in this country most dangerous because so deceptive. Many sudden deaths are caused by it—heart disease, pneumonia, heart failure or apoplexy are often the result of kidney disease. If kidney trouble is allowed to advance the kidney-poisoned blood will attack the vital organs or the kidneys themselves break down and waste away cell by cell.

Bladder troubles most always result from a derangement of the kidneys and a cure is obtained quickest by a proper treatment of the kidneys. If you are feeling badly you can make no mistake by taking Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and sold by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sized bottles. You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful new discovery and a book that tells all about it, both sent free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co. Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper.

Neighborhood Notes

Secretary Lilly, of the Emmet County Fair Association, today received from the secretary of the State Fair Association word of the prizes awarded the Emmet county exhibit for this section of the state. This county took first premium for special exhibit of potatoes; second for vegetables and grain, and third for fruit, which is a splendid showing for the northernmost county in the district and proves the push and energy of the Emmet county farmer and fruit raiser. The Emmet county exhibit at the county fair, commencing next week, will be vastly superior to the one at the state fair and will be worth your time to inspect.—Petoskey Evening News.

HOW TAFT WAS SOUGHT BY M'KINLEY.

The Manner in Which the Republican Candidate Was Called to a Larger Sphere of Action.

One afternoon early in 1900, when Judge William H. Taft was dictating a decision of the United States Court in the Federal Building in Cincinnati, a telegram was placed in his hands. He tore off the envelope and was surprised to find a telegram from President William McKinley, reading:

"I shall take it as a great favor if you will call on me some time next week."

Judge Taft guessed at the meaning of the summons and guessed wrong. He went to Washington and was shown into a room at the White House, where he met the President, and Secretary Long of the Navy. Later, Elihu Root, the Secretary of War, came in. Then, to use Mr. Taft's own words:

"Mr. McKinley said that he wanted to send me to the Philippines to help in the work of establishing civil government as the army moved on. I thought of my place on the bench and hesitated. Besides, I believed and said we could get along without the Philippines.

"'But we have them and must take care of them,' the President replied.

"'You are at the turning of the ways in your life,' Mr. Root then observed. 'The bench is the easy road. You can stay there and be comfortable. On the contrary, the Philippines will demand paramount sacrifices and risks and much hard work, but you will have an opportunity of doing your country a very great service.' I went home, and argued the matter for two weeks."

The telegram to Cincinnati opened the door of American history to William H. Taft and made him the Republican candidate for President of the United States.

Obligations of Civil War.

Money indebtedness is not the only obligation we incurred and assumed in the great civil war. There was a still greater debt, an everlasting obligation that could never be paid in full. But in the years that have followed, the Republican party has inaugurated and developed pension laws under which over three and one-half billion dollars have been paid to disabled veterans or to the survivors of those who gave their lives for their country and their flag. This pension system, a product of the policy of the Republican party, has no precedent in history and no equal in justice and generosity among the nations of the earth.—Hon. James S. Sherman.

Prohibition Leads to Prosperity

Before the days of prohibition there were licensed saloons, breweries and distilleries throughout Maine. These have all been banished.

Under license, Maine was a poor state. Under prohibition, Maine has become very prosperous.

Maine is the only state that has more saving banks depositors than voters.

One-third of the people of Maine, including women and children, have money in the savings banks.

Maine has an excellent public school system. Not a dollar of revenue from the liquor business is needed or received to support the schools of Maine.

Maine is a great summer resort. About fifteen million dollars are left in the state each year by summer visitors and tourists; people who do not depend upon the saloon for entertainment.

Maine takes care of its children instead of taking care of saloons. Of the three million child laborers in the United States, Maine's proportion would be 35,000. Maine has but 1,400.

Prohibition reduces crime. There were in the United States last year 9,300 murders and homicides. Maine had but three.

Prohibition hurts the liquor business by reducing the amount of liquor manufactured, sold and consumed. This is why the liquor people are always opposed to prohibition.

Standard University Bar Liquors

The liquor question at Stanford University has at last been settled and the indications are that it has been settled for all time. The trustees of the university recently adopted the following resolution:

"The academic council is instructed to prohibit the use of liquor in fraternity chapter houses, student clubhouses and other student lodgings."

The action taken by the trustees and the specific instructions given to the university authorities practically end the controversy on the liquor question at Stanford.

From now on, not only will liquor not be allowed in the buildings of the university, but any student who shall have or shall keep intoxicating liquors of any kind in his room will be expelled and the leases of fraternity and clubhouses will be subject to this rule. The lease on any building where liquor is kept will be forfeited.

"You didn't really care when your daughter eloped with young Naybody?"

"Of course not."

"Then why did your motor car pursue theirs eighty miles?"

SOCIALISM AND ART.

Co-operation Would Inspire and Give a Unifying Ideal.

Socialism would give to art a unifying ideal for which it is now sorely languishing. This is the view of Mr. Walter Crane, the English artist, who, like his great predecessor, William Morris, belongs to the ranks of those professing the Socialist ideal. In the London Daily Mail he declares that modern art "cannot be said to be successful in great public monuments—almost the only objects in which it is possible to unite all the arts in their noblest form." These monuments are not successful, he contends, because architecture, sculpture and the beautiful arts of decorative design and handicraft "have always flourished under some dominating ideal of life." By way of illustration he cites the following:

"The nature worship of ancient Egyptians and Greeks and of the Hindoos; the monotheism of the Moslems, the Catholicism of the middle ages, for instance, all these have proved great, inspiring, unifying influences in the arts in their countries and periods, and to them we owe sublime monumental works which have never been equaled and compared to which modern efforts seem ephemeral and trivial."

In his view the modern world is at present offered in Socialism just such an ideal as it requires to draw its scattered activities into a united system. We read:

"Now, in Socialism we have a great unifying ideal of human life, a new ideal, an inspiring ideal, a religion, in short, which sums up the past and looks to the future, dealing into history a new meaning, in which the gradual evolution of humanity is discovered, and the truth of the philosophic dictum of the three great periods in relation to the economic system on which the form of society in every age depends—primitive mankind, intermediate divergence and ultimate manhood, as out of the strife and discords of the present slowly emerges the new order, as a great statue takes form under the sculptor's hand out of the shapeless mass of marble.

"I should therefore expect that under Socialism there would be greatly enlarged scope and opportunity for public work of a monumental and commemorative character. I should expect a demand for and a great development of mural painting, as I believe its educational value would become more and more recognized as well as the pleasure and stimulus to the imagination it might afford on the walls of schools and public buildings—under capitalism so much neglected.

"Simultaneously I should expect a renascence in architecture and sculpture. Our cities would acquire a beauty undreamed of when they were built to dwell in and when there were no more slums and when the 'homes' in them which the Socialists would destroy had gone.

"As for the arts of design and handicraft, the arts which are inextricably associated with social life and depend for their very existence upon cooperation, they would certainly flourish exceedingly in a cooperative commonwealth. The art of the gardener, the art of the potter, of the weaver, of the smith, of the printer, would be always in demand and under Socialism freed from commercial degradation."

A Big Undertaking.

But Socialism is a mighty big undertaking!

Of course it is a big undertaking. What of it?

The American people are not in the habit of backing down before a big undertaking.

If the public can manage the United States army for warlike purposes, it can manage its collective self in peaceful pursuits.

If it can manage the United States navy, it can manage the ocean passenger and freight business.

If it can operate the postoffice, it can operate the telegraph, telephone, express and railroad lines.

If it can make warships, it can make automobiles and self binders.

If it can make rifles, it can make knives and forks.

If it can make army saddles, it can make boots and shoes.

If it can run a state university, it can run a packing house.

If it can run an insane asylum, it can manage an oil refinery.

If it can irrigate land, it can dig coal.

If it can build bridges, it can build factories.—M. W. E.

The Real Enemies.

"The real source of misgovernment—the active cause of corruption—is to be found not in the slums, not in the population ordinarily regarded as ignorant and vicious, but in the selfishness and greed of those who are the recognized leaders in commercial life," says Professor J. Allen Smith, professor of political science in the Washington university.

The language of Socialism is a world language. It is spoken in Germany and Argentina, in America and Australia. It is spoken wherever men are herded together in masses and made the slaves of machines. It is a language of brotherhood and comradeship, of mutual service and mutual escape, of liberty, justice and humanity.—Upton Sinclair.

THE LION AND THE MOUSE.

By CHARLES KLEIN.

A Story of American Life Novelized From the Play by ARTHUR HORNBLOW.

Copyright, 1906, by G. W. Dillingham Company.

then he added, "You're younger than I thought you were, Miss Green; much younger."

"Time will remedy that," smiled Shirley. Then, mischievously, she added: "I rather expected to see Mrs. Ryder."

There was the faintest suspicion of a smile playing around the corners of the plutocrat's mouth as he picked up a book lying on his desk and replied:

"Yes, she wrote you, but I—wanted to see you about this."

Shirley's pulse throbbed faster, but she tried hard to appear unconcerned as she answered:

"Oh, my book! Have you read it?"

"I have," replied Ryder slowly, and, fixing her with a stare that was beginning to make her uncomfortable, he went on: "No doubt your time is valuable, so I'll come right to the point. I want to ask you, Miss Green, where you got the character of your central figure—the Octopus, as you call him—John Broderick?"

"From imagination, of course," answered Shirley.

Ryder opened the book, and Shirley noticed that there were several passages marked. He turned the leaves over in silence for a minute or two, and then he said:

"You've sketched a pretty big man here."

"Yes," assented Shirley; "he has big possibilities, but I think he makes very small use of them."

Ryder appeared not to notice her commentary, and, still reading the book, he continued:

"On page 22 you call him 'the world's greatest individualized potentiality, a giant combination of materiality, mentality and money—the greatest exemplar of individual human will in existence today.' And you make Indomitable will and energy the keystone of his marvelous success. Am I right?" He looked at her questioningly.

"Quite right," answered Shirley.

Ryder proceeded:

"On page 26 you say 'the machinery of his money making mind typifies the laws of perpetual unrest. It must go on relentlessly, resistlessly, ruthlessly making money, making money, and continuing to make money. It cannot stop until the machinery crumbles.'"

Laying the book down and turning sharply on Shirley, he asked her bluntly:

"Do you mean to say that I couldn't stop tomorrow if I wanted to?"

She affected to not understand him.

"You?" she inquired in a tone of surprise.

"Well, it's a natural question," stammered Ryder, with a nervous little laugh. "Every man sees himself in the hero of a novel just as every woman sees herself in the heroine. We are all heroes and heroines in our own eyes. But tell me what's your private opinion of this man. You drew the character. What do you think of him as a type—how would you classify him?"

"As the greatest criminal the world has yet produced," replied Shirley without a moment's hesitation.

The financier looked at the girl in unfeigned astonishment.

"Criminal?" he echoed.

"Yes, criminal," repeated Shirley decisively. "He is avarice, egotism and ambition incarnate. He loves money because he loves power, and he loves power more than his fellow man."

Ryder laughed uneasily. Decidedly this girl had opinions of her own which she was not backward to express.

"Isn't that rather strong?" he asked.

"I don't think so," replied Shirley. Then quickly she asked: "But what does it matter? No such man exists."

"No, of course not," said Ryder, and he relapsed into silence.

Yet while he said nothing the plutocrat was watching his visitor closely from under his thick eyebrows. She seemed supremely unconscious of his scrutiny. Her aristocratic, thoughtful face gave no sign that any ulterior motive had actuated her evidently very hostile attitude against him. That he was in her mind when she drew the character of John Broderick there was no doubt possible. No matter how she might evade the identification, he was convinced he was the hero of her book. Why had she attacked him so bitterly?

At first it occurred to him that blackmail might be her object. She might be going to ask for money as the price of future silence. Yet it needed but a glance at her refined and modest demeanor to dispel that idea as absurd. Then he remembered, too, that it was not she who had sought this interview, but himself. No, she was no blackmailer. More probably she was a dreamer—one of those meddling sociologists who, under pretense of bettering the conditions of the working classes, stir up discontent and bitterness of feeling. As such she might prove more to be feared than a mere blackmailer whom he could buy off with money. He knew he was not popular, but he was no worse than the other captains of industry. It was a cutthroat game at best. Competition was the soul of commercial life, and if he had outwitted his competitors and made himself richer than all of them he was not a criminal for that. But all these attacks in newspapers and books did not do him any good. One day the people might take these demagogic writings seriously, and then there would be the devil to pay. He took up the book again and ran over the pages. This certainly was no ordinary girl. She knew more and had a more direct way of saying things than any woman he had ever met. And as he watched her furtively across the desk he wondered how he could use her—how instead of being his enemy he could make her his friend. If he did not, she would go away and write more such books, and literature of this kind might become a real peril to his interests. Money could do anything. It could secure the services of this woman and prevent her doing further mischief. But how could he employ her? Suddenly an inspiration came to him. For some years he had been collecting material for a history of the Empire Trading company. She could write it. It would practically be his own biography. Would she undertake it?

Embarrassed by the long silence, Shirley finally broke in by saying:

"But you didn't ask me to call merely to find out what I thought of my own work."

"No," replied Ryder slowly, "I want you to do some work for me."

He opened a drawer at the left hand side of his desk and took out several sheets of foolscap and a number of letters. Shirley's heart beat faster as she caught sight of the letters. Were her father's among them? She wondered what kind of work John Burbect Ryder had for her to do and if she would do it whatever it was. Some literary work probably, compiling or something of that kind. If it was well paid, why should she not accept? There would be nothing humiliating in it; it would not tie her hands in any way. She was a professional writer in the market to be employed by whoever could pay the price. Besides, such work might give her better opportunities to secure the letters of which she was in search. Gathering in one pile all the papers he had removed from the drawer, Mr. Ryder said:

"I want you to put my biography together from this material. But first," he added, taking up "The American Octopus," "I want to know where you got the details of this man's life."

"Oh, for the most part—imagination, newspapers, magazines," replied Shirley carelessly. "You know the American millionaire is a very overworked topic just now—and naturally I've read"—

"Yes, I understand," he said, "but I refer to what you haven't read—what you couldn't have read. For example, here." He turned to a page marked in the book and read aloud: "As an evidence of his petty vanity, when a youth he had a beautiful Indian girl tattooed just above the forearm." Ryder leaned eagerly forward as he asked her searchingly, "Now who told you that I had my arm tattooed when I was a boy?"

"Have you?" laughed Shirley nervously. "What a curious coincidence!"

"Let me read you another coincidence," said Ryder meaningly. He turned to another part of the book and read, "the same eternal long black cigar always between his lips."

"General Grant smoked, too," interrupted Shirley. "All men who think deeply along material lines seem to smoke."

"Well, we'll let that go. But how about this?" He turned back a few pages and read: "John Broderick had loved when a young man a girl who lived in Vermont, but circumstances separated them." He stopped and stared at Shirley a moment, and then he said: "I loved a girl when I was a lad and she came from Vermont, and circumstances separated us. That isn't coincidence, for presently you make John Broderick marry a young woman who had money. I married a girl with money."

"Lots of men marry for money," remarked Shirley.

"I said with money, not for money," retorted Ryder. Then, turning to the book, he said: "Now, this is what I can't understand, for no one could have told you this but I myself. Listen." He read aloud: "'With all his physical bravery and personal courage, John Broderick was intensely afraid of death. It was on his mind constantly.' Who told you that?" he demanded somewhat roughly. "I swear I've never mentioned it to a living soul."

"Most men who amass money are afraid of death," replied Shirley with outward composure, "for death is about the only thing that can separate them from their money."

Ryder laughed, but it was a hollow, mocking laugh, neither sincere nor hearty. It was a laugh such as the devil may have given when driven out of heaven.

"You're quite a character!" He laughed again, and Shirley, catching the infection, laughed too.

"It's me and it isn't me," went on Ryder, flourishing the book. "This fellow Broderick is all right; he's successful and he's great, but I don't like his finish."

"It's logical," ventured Shirley.

"It's cruel," insisted Ryder.

"So is the man who reverses the divine law and hates his neighbor instead of loving him," retorted Shirley.

She spoke more boldly, beginning to feel more sure of her ground, and it amused her to fence in this way with the man of millions. So far, she thought, he had not got the best of her. She was fast becoming used to him, and her first feeling of intimidation was passing away.

"Um!" grunted Ryder. "You're a curious girl. Upon my word you interest me!" He took the mass of papers lying at his elbow and pushed them over to her. "Here," he said, "I want you to make us clever a book out of this chaos as you did out of your own imagination."

Shirley turned the papers over carelessly.

TAFT COMES FROM GOOD STOCK.

Family Ranked Among the Plain People for Many Years.

The Tafts—those who at present are the Tafts—hail ancestrally from Uxbridge, Mass. They say that Tafts are so thick in Uxbridge that even a woman can't throw a stone without hitting one.

Some years ago—in 1874, to be exact—there was a Taft reunion in Uxbridge, to which descendants of the original Robert Taft came flocking from all parts of the country. One of the conspicuous features of the affair was a historical address by Alphonso Taft, father of the present Republican candidate. He traced the history of various branches of the family, and when he came to the one to which he and his children belonged he said:

"Our family have not embarked much upon national politics, except that they have stood in the battles of the country when national independence was to be won, and also when the Union was at stake. But brilliant political careers have not been characteristic of the Tafts in the past. It is not safe to say what may be in store for them. There is a tide in the affairs of men and also of families."

This is taken from the account of the reunion published at the time. Alphonso Taft would perhaps have been somewhat dazzled if he could have foreseen how quickly and brilliantly the family would proceed to "embark upon national politics." He himself started the turn of the tide which he predicted. It seems to be reaching its flood in the career of the son who that year was entering Yale.

As Alphonso Taft described his immediate ancestors one sees where his son got certain characteristics. Peter Taft (1715) was "a large, good-looking man of magnanimous disposition." He had four sons.

Aaron, the candidate's ancestor, was also so magnanimous that he lost money by indorsing a friend's notes; he was a man "of great intelligence and integrity." And then, going somewhat further back, there was Captain William Taft, who took Blarney Castle in the sixteenth century "by blarney quite as much as by military prowess." Good stock was Captain William from which to make a twentieth century Secretary of War Williams.

A Grand Record.

The Republican party is not only rich in men, but rich in practical and beneficial principles—it is rich too in its record, in promises performed and pledges fulfilled, and so we are for party and party principles first and will acquiesce in the choice of the majority, rallying around the standard bearer who will carry us again to victory.—Hon. James S. Sherman.

Courier Grange Column

Ironton Grange No. 707.

Ironton Grange No. 707 met in regular session September 15, with an attendance of nineteen and was opened in regular form by the worthy master.

The motion was made and supported that the grange buy the M. E. church building, also the chairs, lamps and organ that belongs to the church. Some of the members were afraid they could not get the money to pay for them as there was not enough in the treasury, but Brother John Knudsen offered to give ten dollars to help pay for the church and Brother Coblentz said if they wanted a honey social to get some money he would furnish the honey and Sister Knudsen offered biscuits to go with the honey.

Delegates were elected to the county convention.

Lecturer's hour consisted of reading a part of the new constitution by the worthy lecturer and song by the grange.

By this time most of the members were sleepy and some were asleep so the grange closed in regular form.

Marion Center Grange No. 956.

Marion Center Grange met in regular session September 16 and was opened in regular form. Officers all present.

The usual order of business was transacted. Two candidates names were presented and balloted on. The various committes on county fair reported progress in their collection of exhibits.

The grange voted to have the annual plowing match Thursday, October 22, and arrangements are in progress for a good time. A chicken-pie dinner will be served in the grange hall dining room. Everybody come and have a good time.

South Arm Grange No. 815.

South Arm Grange met Saturday, September 19, and was called to order by Worthy Master Olney.

Short discussions on the fair exhibit followed. Brother and Sister Murphy and Brother and Sister Nice were elected delegates to the county convention.

The members of the grange have been divided into four parts and a four-sided literary contest will commence next meeting.

Brother Olney brought a half bushel measure filled with muskmelons and treated all the members.

Brother St. Johns presented a handsome framed picture, which he had painted to the grange. They also extended to Brother St. Johns a rising vote of thanks.

The lecturer's hour consisted of questions raised by the members and discussed by others. The question—"Should children of the grades be made to study at home evenings, was discussed at length, the general opinion was they should not.

Deer Lake Grange No. 8269.

Deer Lake Grange met in regular session September 19 and was called to order by Worthy Master H. C. Barber.

Motion made by Brother H. J. Korthase, supported by Brother I. S. Barber that a special meeting be held September 21 to discuss farm question. Carried.

Brothers Henry Sudman, I. S. Barber, Wilbut McGeorge and H. C. Barber were elected delegates to county convention.

The lecturer's hour was taken up by Wilson Grange, which gave one of the finest programs ever given at our hall, consisting of recitations, readings, songs and instrumental music, after which a supper was furnished.

Members present, Deer Lake Grange 28, Wilson Grange 32, Pine Lake Grange 4, Boyne Valley Grange 2. Total 66.

Arizona Socks.

A California pioneer was discussing the early mining days: "Flour sacks were valuable. You unraveled the sewing down one side and you had a piece of cloth about a yard square. Shaken and washed, it made good patches for underclothes on a pinch and made miners' towels. But their chief use was for 'Arizona socks.' One flour sack would make three good pairs. You ripped the piece into three inch strips. Soft and nice on the feet too. Just put your foot down, laid one end of it flat along the instep, folded about two inches under the toes and then wrapped around the foot and up the ankle, with a final inch in. No darning, you could reverse end; wear fine too."—San Francisco Chronicle.

Convincing Exposition of Fallacy of Bryan's Panacea for Solving Problems of Modern Business.

(From Gov. Hughes' Youngstown speech.)

When we consider remedies that are proposed for the trusts, we find ourselves journeying in a land of dreams. Again the magician of 1896 waves his wand. At a stroke difficulties disappear and the complex problems of modern business are forgotten in the fascination of the simple panacea. And, as the free coinage of silver in the ratio of 16 to 1 was to destroy the curse of gold, so the new found specific of equal perfection is to remove the curse of industrial oppression. The delusion of 1908 is comparable only to that of twelve years ago.

The first suggestion is that the law should prevent a duplication of directors among competing corporations. However advisable it may be to have independent directorates of competing corporations, it would seem still more important to have independent stockholders, for a majority of the stockholders of a corporation choose the directors. If a law were passed preventing the duplication of directors it would easily be evaded in the selection of men who would represent the same interests. The most ordinary experience shows that it is not necessary to serve on a board of directors in order to control its proceedings. Whatever the advantage of such a law as is proposed, it hardly rises to the dignity of a "remedy," or vindicates its title to a place in an imposing scheme of reform outlined in a national platform.

But the more important proposal is "that any manufacturing or trading corporation engaged in interstate commerce shall be required to take out a federal license before it shall be permitted to control as much as 25 per cent of the product in which it deals." A license is permission, and the object of the remedy is not to regulate large businesses, but to destroy trusts. Hence the supposed efficiency of the plan is to be found in the prohibition of the control by any such corporation "of more than 50 per cent of the total amount of any product consumed in the United States." This is another delusion of ratio.

It might be interesting to inquire what is the meaning of "any product consumed in the United States." Does it refer to a class of commodities? And, if so, how shall the classes be defined? Or does it refer to each separate article of commerce? And, if so, what account does this proposal take of the skill and initiative of manufacturers who have built up a more or less exclusive trade in particular articles, often protected by trade-marks, although in most active competition with other articles designed for the same general purpose and seeking the same market? In a desire to correct the evils of business are we to place an embargo upon honest endeavor whose activities present none of the abuses requiring remedies? And, if not, what statutory definitions shall be found to be adequate and just if we lay down our prohibition in terms of volume or ratio of business and not in terms of right and wrong? If we adopt Mr. Bryan's proposal, to what period of production is the prohibition to apply? Is the excess for a day or for a month to be considered? Or is the average production for a year to be taken? And what system shall be devised by which suitable information may be furnished in the nature of danger signals along the routes of trade so that the manufacturer may know when he is about to exceed the prescribed ratio? He may justly be required to govern his own conduct, but how shall he be apprised of the conduct of others upon which is to depend his guilt or innocence?

The patent laws confer a true monopoly in the exclusive right to manufacture and sell. Are these laws to be repealed because a "private monopoly is indefensible and intolerable?"

Bryan's Crude Reasoning.

An example of Mr. Bryan's reasoning is found in his statement that "when a corporation controls 50 per cent of the total product it supplies forty millions of people with that product." There are, of course, specialties which have a limited market and are used by a relatively small number of the people of the United States. More than 50 per cent, and indeed even as much as 100 per cent of the trade in such articles may be in the control of a particular corporation. This may, in fact, be relatively a small corporation. It may never have aspired to the unsavory renown of a "trust." But by presenting its particular line with fidelity and meeting satisfactorily a limited want; or by reason of some secret processes or advantage of experience, it may control the trade in a given article of commerce. Or, suppose a concern controls the whole trade in some useful byproduct which it has found it advantageous to make, is the trade to be prohibited?

The Democratic platform makes no exceptions to cover such cases, and we have learned that it is equally "binding as to what it omits."

If we could imagine such a crude prohibition to be enacted into law, and to be regarded as valid, what would be the effect? Mr. Bryan, with his usual readiness, suggests that the concern may sell as much of its plants as are not needed to produce the amount allowed by law. He speaks as though every manufacturing concern had as many fully equipped units of production as would correspond to any given percentage of trade which it might be required to lop off. Plants are not so easily dismembered. Reduction in output means reduction in work, reduction in the number of men employed and curtailment of the efficiency of a going concern. Let us suppose a concern which controls 80 per cent of a given product—that is to say, makes and sells $8,000,000 in value out of a total trade in the product amounting to $10,000,000. Is it to be compelled to reduce its output to $2,000,000 because only $2,000,000 in value are made by others? Then, if it could sell a part of its plant on Mr. Bryan's theory, what should it sell? Should it sell off enough to reduce its capacity to $5,000,000, and allow three-fifths of its plant to remain idle until others developed a capacity for handling the other $5,000,000? Should it assume that the total trade will increase and is not always to remain at $10,000,000, and hence retain a larger portion of its plant in idleness? Or suppose a concern controls 100 per cent of the trade in some article, what plants shall it retain? It can produce nothing until others produce; but it may produce an amount equal to the production of others, and it hopes the trade will grow. What a vision of business uncertainty and confusion, of idle and impaired plants, of the ruin of workingmen whose lives have clustered around particular industries and who depend upon their continued efficiency, is presented by this fanciful remedy for the destruction of trusts!

Apart from this, if the dissolution were effected in the manner desired and portions of plants could be sold and were sold as suggested, to whom would the sale be made? Would it be necessarily to foes or to those unwilling to be competitors and anxious to take advantage of its plight?

This proposal in its utter disregard of the facts of business, in its substitution of the phantasies of the imagination for the realities of life, stamps the Democratic platform with the fatal stamp of 1896. The commerce and industry of this country, the interests of its wage earners and of its interdependent masses, who must rely upon the stability of business, cannot afford to give license to such vagaries.

In the solemnity with which this proposal has been declared, and the insistence with which it is advocated, we find an appropriate test of the capacity of our opponents to deal wisely with the problems of the day.

A Tea Party in Darkness.

There is a tradition to the effect that when domestic lighting by gas was still a novelty Sir Walter Scott introduced it into every room and staircase of the house that he was building at Abbotsford and did so without provision for any unexpected failure. His entering into possession was made the occasion for a house warming on a scale of considerable magnitude, and in the very middle of the festivities all the lights suddenly went out. The guests were left in absolute darkness until such time as mounted messengers could return from Melrose, whither they had been dispatched with instructions to collect all the tallow candles and tin sconces or candlesticks which the village contained.—London Times.

Those wishing to put out a patch of red raspberries, see E. A. Reed for plants. He has a fine lot of them for sale at 75c per hundred. 37tf

Grocery Qualities

The higher the quality, the lower the prices!
We mean that on really superexcellent groceries our prices are considerably lower than what you will find in other stores. In fact, much of the goods we carry is not carried or pushed by other dealers because the margin of profit is greater on inferior grades of goods.
Dependable groceries and meats—cut prices. A combination thrifty people will not ignore.

VALUE OF THE SILO.

The silo is an established factor in American husbandry. While it is more commonly used by dairymen than by other feeders, the time is not far distant when the silo will be depended largely upon to furnish succulent food to all classes of farm live stock. The comparative merits of feeding a corn crop in cured condition or converting it into silage and then feeding it are as follows: The losses of nutrients in either case are about equal. The digestibility is about the same for each. Silage, however, is more completely consumed, more readily eaten and in greater quantity than when the same material is cured. It can be placed in the silo when ready regardless of the weather and when so disposed of is in the best possible condition for feeding and handling.

The silo is also much more economical in storage per unit of nutrients than any possible inclosure for dry, bulky hays or fodders. The labor and expense of harvesting and storing a crop for the silo come all at one time, and further anxiety is over. It is ready to feed at any season and will keep, if properly made, for years. If the crop is cured and the forage and grain fed separately, the labor of preparation is endless and the forage soon loses palatability.

The above are some facts for doubters and procrastinators to think upon. It is not meant to have all corn converted into silage. Every milk producer, however, with ten cows should have a silo. Those keeping fewer cows should expand their business until a silo can be used advantageously. Materials should be ordered and plans perfected early in the year for a silo to receive the crop, as construction is always delayed, and if concrete or plastered silos are erected they need time to harden. The point is to be prepared to take care of an immature crop whatever the line of farming.

Dairymen voluntarily deprive themselves of many millions of dollars each year through a pernicious, wasteful custom of running their cows in the stalk fields all winter instead of converting part of the crop at least into silage and feeding it where the animals would be comfortable. An eminent authority concludes that there is 12 per cent greater return through feeding a crop as silage to dairy cows than by feeding the same in a cured form. The silo is indispensable in most lines of husbandry.—Herbert A. Hopper, in Charge of Dairy Extension, Purdue Experiment Station.

WARNER IS THE WINNER

By the Decision of the Supreme Court Monday.

BRADLEY LOSES ON EVERY POINT

Justices Say Canvassers Cannot Go Behind Returns.

Bradley May Drop Contest to Continue as Longer Would Only be for Purpose of Delay.

In giving Gov. Warner the victory in the recent controversy the supreme court pays but little attention to the proposition presented by the Bradley attorneys to the effect that the law is unconstitutional.

In holding that the state board of canvassers cannot go back of the returns, and cannot compare the poll lists with the enrollment, as the board has done, the court, in the opinion of most of the politicians effectively disposes of the Bradley claims to the nomination unless some unsuspected error or fraud is found in the returns during the forual canvas, which will be resumed. Justice MacAlvay filed the only dissenting opinion.

The ruling opinion was written by Justice Ostrander, and in it it is declared that the language of act relative to a recount contains no ambiguity and clearly says that the state board may only investigate error or fraud by the board of election inspectors in the count of return. The court says the act simply provides for a "recount—another count—of the ballots." Again the court says: "We do not find ambiguity in the language of the act, nor any necessary conflict between the general purpose of the legislation and the provision for a recount of the votes, for doing again what the inspectors of election have done. This conclusion is supported by a consideration of other provisions of the law.

The fixing of dates for enrollment and for the primary election, with reference to the constitutional general election day is indicative of the legislative conception of the powers and duties of the respondent in the premises. But beyond this, the object of legislation, which is to secure direct voting for candidates for public office, could not in fact be accomplished if the inquiry proposed could be entered upon. Upon well-settled principles courts will decline to nullify a statute by construction unless the duty to so do is clear.

The court further says that there is no provision of the law which permits of the drawing out of ballots except when it appears that they exceed the number of ballots cast, as shown by poll lists, and says the board of canvassers exceded its authority in using the enrollment list and in withdrawing these 14 votes from the ballot boxes from Oliver township, in Huron county. This is in the exact line with the arguments of the Warner attorneys.

Justice MacAlvay, in his opinion, discusses the intent of the primary law to remove improper influence and manipulation from primaries, and says it is only through the enrollment that the separation of parties is maintained and party solidarity preserved. He adds that party enrollment is so carefully safeguarded in the law because the legislature knew that the success or failure of the law depends upon it. The party enrollment, he argues, is the only authority for receiving party votes, and the only basis upon which can be determined the fact that a candidate for governor has received the required percentage of all lawful votes cast for the office.

Again he says: "I consider captious the argument which confines the work of the board to merely counting the votes in the boxes. The statute means the counting of the lawful votes cast, and the enrollment is the only guide which points out such votes."

GOES TO CENTRAL LAKE

George A. McCartney the New Manager of the Torch.

George A. McCartney, left for Central Lake Monday, where he has accepted the position of editor and manager of the Central Lake Torch. Mr. McCartney has long been a resident of Charlevoix and for a number of years has been connected with the COURIER. Prior to the purchasing of the plant by the present firm, he operated it under a lease, and made good as an all around newspaper man. Since then he has been in charge of the COURIER'S job department, and to his skill is much of its popularity due.

Central Lake, and the Torch, are to be congratulated on the securing of so well qualified a man, and we can confidently look for a better paper each week under his management.

ALDERMAN FOWLER RESIGNS

At Last Meeting of Council—Joseph Smith Elected.

New Sidewalks—Generator Purchased—Other Important Business.

At the meeting of the council Thursday night, sidewalk petitions were received from Chicago Club and E. N. Wiley, and walks ordered in. This will be a great improvement as with two short exceptions it will give a cement walk from the depot to the bridge.

A generator was purchased from the Westinghouse Electric Company, for $1,800, same to be here in fifteen days.

By resolution, the contract with the N. L. Prodnce Co. was declared forfeited, and the produce company were ordered to vacate in sixty days.

The dock and old water works were condemned, and the Chief of Police was ordered to post danger signs, on property.

Alderman Fowler presented his resignation as alderman from the second ward, which was accepted, and Joseph Smith was unanimously elected to fill the vacancy.

Resolutions were adopted expressing the regret of the council over the retirement of Mr. Fowler, and their appreciation of his services to the city.

I feel that the country is indeed to be congratulated upon the nomination of Mr. Taft. I have known him intimately for many years and I have a peculiar feeling for him, because throughout that time he worked for the same object, with the same purposes and ideals.

I do not believe there could be found in all the country a man so well fitted to be President.

He is not only absolutely fearless, absolutely disinterested and upright, but he has the widest acquaintance with the nation's needs, without and within, and the broadest sympathies with all our citizens.

He would be as emphatically a President of the plain people as Lincoln, yet not Lincoln himself would be freer from the least taint of demagogy, the least tendency to arouse or appeal to class hatred of any kind.

He has a peculiar and intimate knowledge of and sympathy with the needs of all our people—of the farmer, of the wage earner, of the business man, of the property owner.

No matter what a man's occupation or social position, no matter what his creed, his color, or the section of the country from which he comes, if he is an honest, hard working man who tries to do his duty toward his neighbor and toward the country, he can rest assured that he will have in Mr. Taft the most upright of representatives and the most fearless of champions.

Mr. Taft stands against privileges and he stands pre-eminently for the broad principles of American citizenship which lie at the foundation of our national well being.

HISTORICAL SOCIETY

Will Hold First Fall Meeting Tuesday, October 6.

This Year's Course of Study Will be "Our Country."

One of the oldest institutions of Charlevoix is the Historical Society, which was incurporated November 24, 1879. Since then each winter it has held its meetings at the homes the of members and carried out a well planned course of study.

This year's officers are:

President—Hon. F. W. Mayne.

1st Vice President—Mrs. J. L. Crane.

2nd Vice President—R. W. Kane.

Secretary—Miss Annie A. McCartney.

Treasurer—Mrs. Margaret L. Washburn.

Librarian—Miss Edna Sue Green.

Executive Committee—Dr. F. H. Wilkinson, George A. McCartney, Mrs. D. C. Nettleton, Mrs. Forrest S. Blanchard, Mrs. A. F. Bridge.

The COURIER Press has recently issued the year book of the society for the coming season, and from it gleans the following points of interest.

This year's course of study is "Our Country." An open meeting will be held October 23 at the M. E. church when Hon. L. F. Knowles will deliver an address on "The New Constitution," after which the subject will de discussed.

On February 18 will occur the annual banquet, which is a feature of Charlevoix's social life.

The first meeting will be held October 6 with Major and Mrs. E. H. Green, when the following program will be given:

Music.

Paper, "Moral—Relation of the United States to the Orient," Rev. Holden A. Putnam.

Singing, "Star Spangled Banner," by the society.

Social intermission.

Music.

Current events of the last five months, Mrs. H. S. Hurstin.

Business.

All members are requested to communicate with the chairman of the executive committee, Dr. F. H. Wilkinson and secure a copy of the year book.

Harry Nicholls is President.

At a meeting of the board of directors of the Board of Commerce held last night, Harry Nicholls was elected president in place of F. E. Turrell, removed from the city and S. A. Marting was elected 1st vice president in place of Harry Nicholls.

BIG CAR FERRY SOLD

Grand Trunk System Purchases Manistique No. 1.

Will be Taken to Milwaukee—Smaller Boat Will Take Her Run.

H. P. Hughart, general manager of the G. R. & I. railroad announces that the car ferry Manistique No. 1 will soon be taken to Milwaukee by the Grand Trunk system which recently purchased the ferry, and that a smaller one will be sent to continue the run between Northport and Manistique.

The Manistique has been on the run for about five years, in command of Captain Robertson, one of the ablest and most experienced captains on the lakes. Captain Robertson and his entire crew, it is said, will accompany the Manistique to Milwaukee.

The Manistique is one of the finest car ferries on the lakes, having a capacity of 33 cars, but the business between Northport and Manistique has not been sufficient to keep the big boat busy. It is believed that a car ferry having a capacity of 22 cars can keep the freight cleaned up.

Both Captain Robertson and his wife have made a large circle of friends since locating at Northport, and should they make their home elsewhere they will be greatly missed by their Northport friends.

PIANO INSTRUCTION

After October 1st, I shall be at ome to any one desiring piano instruction. I am a graduate of the Muskegon St. Mary's school of music and also studied with Prof. York, of Detroit, all last winter.

McCARTNEY—HAMILTON

Marriage of Interest to Charlevoix People Last Wednesday Evening.

On Wednesday evening last, at the home of the mother of the groom, Mrs. Harriet A. McCartney, at 240 Park Avenue, occurred the marriage of Hugh C. McCartney to Miss Mary M. Hamilton.

The marriage ceremony was performed by Rev. R. A. Wright, pastor of the M. E. Church in the presence of a small number of invited guests and relatives of the contracting parties. The ring service was used, little Abbot Fox, nephew of the groom acting as ring bearer. The wedding march was played by Mrs. F. H. Wilkinson. Light refreshments were served after the ceremony.

The rooms were modestly decorated with smilax and cut flowers. Numerous pretty gifts were given by friends of the bride and groom and the school children contributed a life-sized imitation of an old-fashioned belling.

Mr. McCartney has lived in Charlevoix a great portion of his life and has many friends, while his wife a neice of E. S. Stacks, has been a teacher in the public schools of this city and is a talented and capable young lady. Together they will have the best wishes of all our people for a happy and prosperous life. They will make their home with Madam McCartney on Park avenue for the present.

Detroit was the Mecca for all the prominent republicans of the state this week, for although the governor and lieutenant governor had been named at the primaries, there were contests on for several places on the state ticket.

Probably Charlevoix county was more interested in the contest for auditor general between Palmer, of Manistee, Simpson, of Hartford, and Fuller, of Ford River, than any other contest before the convention.

Governor Hughes, of New York, was present and addressed the convention.

The ticket as named which is printed above, is a good one all sections of the state being represented.

STATE TAXES LOWER

Charlevoix County's Share $11,509.28 Last year $16,901.63.

The annual apportionment of state taxes which has just been forwarded to the several counties by the auditor shows that the total state tax to be paid in December is $1,100,422. Of this sum $663,287.50 goes to the support of the university $873,177 for the current expenses of insane asylums, $112,000 for current expenses of prisons, $300,000 for the general purposes of the state government, $107,000 for the military forces and the balance for educational and reformatory institutions of the state, state highway department, board of health, library and other purposes.

Wayne county will pay a total tax of $809,883.37; Houghton, $338,570; Kent, $220,000; Saginaw, $103,800, but no other county pays more than $100,000. Calhoun is close with $99,146, Lenawee with $94,340 and Washtenaw with $91,380.

Lake county pays the small state tax, $1,895, but Crawford is a close second with $3,800.

Charlevoix county pays $14,500.28.

FAIR WAS A RECORD BREAKER

In Point of Attendance, Attractions and Exhibits.

RACES WERE THE BEST EVER HAD

Granges Made Large Displays of of Grain, Fruit and Vegetables.

A. B. Nicholas, Jr., Elected Secretary—Nat Burns Director—A Good Financial Showing.

The annual fair of the Charlevoix Agricultural Society held at East Jordan last week was the most successful fair held in the history of the society.

Large crowds were in attendance each day and every attraction advertised was pulled off except the address by Congressman Townsend, who was unavoidably absent, but whose place was ably filled by Hon. Grant Fellows, of Hudson.

In the floral hall all exhibits were ahead of previous years, different East Jordan business firms making large displays as well as a good display of the farm and home. As usual the granges of the county made grand displays. The high position which is occupied by Charlevoix county as a fruit producing section being demonstrated by the large exhibits of South Arm, Marion Center and Peninsula Granges. Marion Center Grange led in the display of grain; South Arm in vegetables.

In poultry the display was excellent, George W. Cook, of this city, having a large display.

The election of officers resulted in the re-election of Robert Price as president and Martin Ruhling treasurer. A. B. Nicholas, Jr., of East Jordan, was elected secretary in place of R. A. Brintnall. J. H. Lanway, of East Jordan, and John A. Newville, of Boyne City, were re-elected directors. Nat Burns, of Marion, was elected a director to succeed Alfred VanDusan.

Financially the fair was a success as the following statement shows:

WELCOMED HOME

Reception Given to Rev. Dr. R. A. Wright.

At Methodist Church Friday Night. An Able Minister.

Friday night a reception was held at the parlors of the Methodist Church to welcome back Rev. Dr. Wright, who has been returned to the Charlevoix charge by the Methodist Contrence.

Hon. A. Buttars acted as master of ceremonies, and after a few introductory remarks of congratulation over the return of Mr. Wright, introduced Rev. H. A. Putnam, pastor of the Congregational Church, and Rev. F. H. Bayles, of the Baptist Church, who extended to Mr. Wright, on behalf of their churches a hearty welcome back. Music was furnished by Dr. F. H. Wilkinson, and refreshments served to the guests present who numbered about one hundred fifty. Dr. Wright has now been a resident of Charlevoix, two years, coming here from Manistee, and each year the respect and affection felt for himself and family has grown stronger, and the church has prospered well under his ministry. Mr. Wright is a plain out spoken man, never hesitating to condemn that which he believes to be wrong, and every word which he speaks has the ring of true sincerity.

The COURIER, in common with all citizens of Charlevoix, expresses its pleasure that one who is so desirable a minister, citizen and man, will remain with us another year.

Cohen's store will be closed Monday, October 5th, until 3 p. m. on account of the Jewish holiday.

Ethan Jolliff goes to Grand Rapids next Monday in the interest of the Bennett Piano Company.

Peebles Bros. sold $2000 worth of lumber on Monday. They expect soon to get ready for another winter's cut.

Mr. Peadon, of Palmyra, Wisconsin, who has been here visiting relatives and friends the past four weeks, returned home last week. He states that this county is second to none for raising fruit.

On Saturday evening last we were very highly entertained by listening to a musical recital from Miss Grace Stafford's class which was held at her home. After program we were served to ice cream and cake in abundance. All went home feeling that they had been benefitted by the occasion. Miss Stafford is a musician of ability and proves it when she presides at the piano.

COUNTY NORMAL NOTES.

Work was begun in nature study and some of the caterpillars, which were brought to school, have started to spin their cocoons.

The class have organized two basket ball teams with Kathryn LaPeer and Florence Sheldon as captains. Tennis has also been started.

The class held a meeting and elected the following officers: Pres., Mildred Drescher; Vice Pres., Kathryn LaPeer; Sec. and Treas., Florence Sheldon.

Wednesday, September 23, nine of the students accompanied by Miss Himes went to the county fair at East Jordan. The trip was intended for the first observation lesson and each one was required to write a paper on the interesting things seen while there.

LARGE CROP OF BEANS

Will be Harvested in Michigan This Year.

A Constant Increase in Production—Acreage Increasing in Charlevoix.

The Michigan Bean Jobbers Association recently held their annual meeting at Grand Rapids. As the production of this profitable crop is on the increase in this county, the following extracts from addresses delivered at the meeting will be of interest:

J. A. Heath, of Lenox, president of the association in speaking of beans said: "There will be 80 per cent of a full crop of beans in this state. The crop when harvested will be something like 5,000,000 bushels. There is nearly a 21 per cent increase in acreage this year, though the season or a part of it, has not been favorable for the crop.

"Michigan leads in the raising of beans and her white pea is the best grown anywhere on this continent and commands the top price in the market."

"There is a constant increase in the consumption of beans in the United States and had it not been for the importation of 2,000,000 bushels of foreign grown beans, beans today would be $3 a bushel."

"$750,000 was spent last year by canners in advertising canned beans. This increased the demand a very large per cent and consequently the canning factories take an enormous quanity of beans early."

"There will not be over 15 per cent of the crop of Red Kidney beans harvested that was marketed in 1907."

Butdick Potter, of Fenton, read an interesting letter on "Bean Statistics." He led off with this statement which ought to set the farmers to thinking seriously on the subject of tariff revision.

"Were it not for the present high protective tariff on beans the Michigan farmers would soon be driven from the field by his foreign competitor. This was fully demonstrated during the past year when foreign beans to the amounts of 2,230,880 bushels were entered at the ports of New York and Boston or .017 per cent of the entire foreign crop and nearly half as much as was harvested in this state." Mr. Potter said European acreage had increased 23 per cent this year and owing to the cheap labor over there beans can be produced at a smaller cost than in Michigan or any other state in the union. Canada has an acreage this year of 5,000 with an estimated yield of 18 bushels per acre. Wisconsin from advices received will not raise enough to supply the demand of Milwaukee this year. New York will raise about the same amount as in 1907.

The Pacific coast state will harvest a big crop, but it is Michigan that is looked to for the banner bean crop.

The estimated acreage of the white pea is 358,500 or 13,000 acres less than a year ago. This is due to the cold, wet spring. From reports gathered at different points Mr. Potter said the yield would vary from 13 to 20 bushels per acre. At present the estimated condition of the crop was 70 per cent of normal. Speaking of the red kidney he said the acreage this year was small, compared with that of a year ago.

NOTICE FOR BIDS FOR CARPENTER DWELLING.

The Carpenter property on the corner of State and Clinton streets having been decided upon by the subscribers to the Carnegie Library fund, as the site for the Library building, the committee in charge is desirous of selling the dwelling house thereon. At a meeting of said committee, the undersigned was appointed to give notice through the local papers, of such wish. In accordance therewith, notice is hereby given, that sealed bids will be received by me, up to ten o'clock a. m., on Saturday, October 3, 1908, from those wishing to purchase said building. Purchaser will be required to remove the building from the lot within a reasonable time, and in such manner that the least possible damage be done to the trees. The committee reserves the right to reject any or all bids, is being understood that consummation of the sale is conditional on the Library project being carried through—of which however, there can be little doubt, as the promise of the money from Mr. Carnegie was definitely made over a year ago.

The Cause of Many Sudden Deaths

There is a disease prevailing in this country most dangerous because so deceptive. Many sudden deaths are caused by it—heart disease, pneumonia, heart failure or apoplexy are often the result of kidney disease. If kidney trouble is allowed to advance the kidney-poisoned blood will attack the vital organs or the kidneys themselves break down and waste away cell by cell.

Bladder troubles most always result from a derangement of the kidneys and a cure is obtained quickest by a proper treatment of the kidneys. If you are feeling badly you can make no mistake by taking Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney, liver and bladder remedy.

It corrects inability to hold urine and scalding pain in passing it, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often during the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and the extraordinary effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest for its wonderful cures of the most distressing cases.

Swamp-Root is pleasant to take and sold by all druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sized bottles. You may have a sample bottle of this wonderful new discovery and a book that tells all about it, both sent free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co. Binghamton, N. Y. When writing mention reading this generous offer in this paper.

THE LION AND THE MOUSE.

By CHARLES KLEIN.

A Story of American Life Novelized From the Play by ARTHUR HORNBLOW.

COPYRIGHT, 1906, BY C. W. DILLINGHAM COMPANY.

CHAPTER VIII—Continued.

"So you think your life is a good example to follow?" she asked, with a tinge of irony.

"Isn't it?" he demanded.

The girl looked him square in the face.

"Suppose," she said, "we all wanted to follow it; suppose we all wanted to be the richest, the most powerful personage in the world?"

"Well, what then?" he demanded.

"I think it would postpone the era of the brotherhood of man indefinitely, don't you?"

"I never thought of it from that point of view," admitted the billionaire. "Really," he added, "you're an extraordinary girl. Why, you can't be more than twenty or so."

"I'm twenty-four or so," smiled Shirley.

Ryder's face expanded in a broad smile. He admired this girl's pluck and ready wit. He grew more amiable and tried to gain her confidence. In a coaxing tone he said:

"Come, where did you get those details? Take me into your confidence."

"I have taken you into my confidence," laughed Shirley, poluting at her book. "It cost you $1.50." Turning over the papers he had put before her, she said presently, "I don't know about this."

"You don't think my life would make good reading?" he asked, with some asperity.

"It might," she replied slowly, as if unwilling to commit herself as to its commercial or literary value. Then she said frankly: "To tell you the honest truth, I don't consider mere genius in money making is sufficient provocation for rushing into print. You see, unless you come to a bad end, it would have no moral."

Ignoring the not very flattering insinuation contained in this last speech, the plutocrat continued to urge her:

"You can name your own price if you will do the work," he said. "Two, three or even five thousand dollars. It's only a few months' work."

"Five thousand dollars?" echoed Shirley. "That's a lot of money." Smiling, she added: "It appeals to my commercial sense. But I'm afraid the subject does not arouse my enthusiasm from an artistic standpoint."

Ryder seemed amused at the idea of any one hesitating to make $5,000. He knew that writers do not run across such opportunities every day.

"Upon my word," he said, "I don't know why I'm so anxious to get you to do the work. I suppose it's because you don't want to. You remind me of my son. Ah, he's a problem!"

Shirley started involuntarily when Ryder mentioned his son. But he did not notice it.

"Why, is he wild?" she asked, as if only mildly interested.

"Oh, no; I wish he were," said Ryder. "Fallen in love with the wrong woman, I suppose," she said.

"Something of the sort. How did you guess?" asked Ryder, surprised.

Shirley coughed to meet her embarrassment and replied indifferently:

"So many boys do that. Besides," she added, with a mischievous twinkle in her eyes, "I can hardly imagine that any woman would be the right one unless you selected her yourself."

Ryder made no answer. He folded his arms and gazed at her. Who was this woman who knew him so well, who could read his inmost thoughts, who never made a mistake? After a silence he said:

"Do you know you say the strangest things?"

"Truth is strange," replied Shirley carelessly. "I don't suppose you hear it very often."

"Not in that form," admitted Ryder.

Shirley had taken on to her lap some of the letters he had passed her and was perusing them one after another.

"All these letters from Washington consulting you on politics and finance—they won't interest the world."

"My secretary picked them out," explained Ryder. "Your artistic sense will tell you what to use."

"Does your son still love this girl? I mean the one you object to," inquired Shirley as she went on sorting the papers.

"Oh, no, he does not care for her any more," answered Ryder hastily.

"Yes, he does. He still loves her," said Shirley positively.

"How do you know?" asked Ryder, amazed.

"From the way you say he doesn't," retorted Shirley.

Ryder gave his caller a look in which admiration was mingled with astonishment.

"You are right again," he said. "The pilot does love the girl."

"Bless his heart!" said Shirley to herself. Aloud she said:

"I hope they'll both outwit you."

Ryder laughed in spite of himself. This young woman certainly interested him more than any other he had ever known.

"I don't think I ever met any one in my life quite like you," he said.

"What's the objection to the girl?" demanded Shirley.

"Every objection. I don't want her in my family."

"Anything against her character?"

To better conceal the keen interest she took in the personal turn the conversation had taken, Shirley pretended to be more busy than ever with the papers.

"Yes—that is, no—not that I know of," replied Ryder. "But because a woman has a good character, that doesn't necessarily make her a desirable match, does it?"

"It's a point in her favor, isn't it?"

"Yes, but"— He hesitated as if uncertain what to say.

"You know man well, don't you, Mr. Ryder?"

"I've met enough to know them pretty well," he replied.

"Why don't you study women for a change?" she asked. "That would enable you to understand a great many things that I don't think are quite clear to you now."

Ryder laughed good humoredly. It was decidedly a novel sensation to have some one lecturing him.

"I'm studying you," he said, "but I don't seem to make much headway. A woman like you whose mind isn't spoiled by the amusement habit has great possibilities—great possibilities. Do you know you're the first woman I ever took into my confidence—I mean at sight?" Again he fixed her with that keen glance which in his business life had taught him how to read men. He continued: "I'm acting on sentiment—something I rarely do, but I can't help it. I like you, upon my soul I do, and I'm going to introduce you to my wife—my son"—

He took the telephone from his desk as if he were going to use it.

"What a commander in chief you would have made—how natural it is for you to command!" exclaimed Shirley in a burst of admiration that was half real, half mocking. "I suppose you always tell people what they are to do and how they are to do it. You are a born general. You know I've often thought that Napoleon and Caesar and Alexander must have been great domestic leaders as well as imperial rulers. I'm sure of it now."

Ryder listened to her in amazement. He was not quite sure if she were making fun of him or not.

"Well, of all"— he began; then interrupting himself he said amiably, "Won't you do me the honor to meet my family?"

Shirley smiled sweetly and bowed.

"Thank you, Mr. Ryder, I will."

She rose from her seat and leaned over the manuscripts to conceal the satisfaction this promise of an introduction to the family circle gave her. She was quick to see that it meant more visits to the house and other and perhaps better opportunities to find the objects of her search. Ryder lifted the receiver of his telephone and talked to his secretary in another room, while Shirley, who was still standing, continued examining the papers and letters.

"Is that you, Bagley? What's that? General Dodge? Get rid of him. I can't see him today. Tell him to come tomorrow. What's that? My son wants to see me? Tell him to come to the phone."

At that instant Shirley gave a little cry, which in vain she tried to suppress. Ryder looked up.

"What's the matter?" he demanded, startled.

"Nothing, nothing!" she replied in a hoarse whisper. "I pricked myself with a pin. Don't mind me."

She had just come across her father's missing letters, which had got mixed up, evidently without Ryder's knowledge, in the mass of papers he had handed her. Prepared as she was to find the letters somewhere in the house, she never dreamed that fate would put them so easily and so quickly into her hands; the suddenness of their appearance and the sight of her father's familiar signature affected her almost like a shock. Now she had them, she must not let them go again; yet how could she keep them unobserved? Could she conceal them? Would he miss them? She tried to slip them in her bosom while Ryder was busy at the phone, but he suddenly glanced in her direction and caught her eye. She still held the letters in her hand, which shook from nervousness, but he noticed nothing and went on speaking through the phone:

"Hello, Jefferson, boy! You want to see me. Can you wait till I'm through? I've got a lady here. Going away? Nonsense! Determined, eh? Well, I can't keep you here if you've made up your mind. You want to say goodby. Come up in about five minutes, and I'll introduce you to a very interesting person."

He laughed and hung up the receiver. Shirley was all mistrung, trying to overcome the emotion which her discovery had caused her, and in a strangely altered voice, the result of the nervous strain she was under, she said:

"You want me to come here?"

She looked up from the letters she was reading across to Ryder, who was standing watching her, on the other side of the desk. He caught her glance and, leaning over to take some manuscript, he said:

"Yes, I don't want these papers to get"—

His eye suddenly rested on the letters she was holding. He stopped short, and reaching forward he tried to snatch them from her.

"What have you got there?" he exclaimed.

He took the letters, and she made no resistance. It would be folly to force the issue now, she thought. Another opportunity would present itself. Ryder locked the letters up very carefully in the drawer on the lefthand side of his desk, muttering to himself rather than speaking to Shirley:

"How on earth did they get among my other papers?"

"From Judge Rossmore, were they not?" said Shirley boldly.

"How did you know it was Judge Rossmore?" demanded Ryder suspiciously. "I didn't know that his name had been mentioned."

"I saw his signature," she said simply. Then she added, "He's the father of the girl you don't like, isn't he?"

"Yes, he's the"—

A cloud came over the financier's face. His eyes darkened, his jaws snapped, and he clinched his fist.

"How you must hate him!" said Shirley, who observed the change.

"Not at all," replied Ryder, recovering his self possession and suavity of manner. "I disagree with his politics and his methods, but—I know very little about him except that he is about to be removed from office."

"About to be?" echoed Shirley. "So her fate is decided even before he is tried?" The girl laughed bitterly. "Yes," she went on, "some of the newspapers are beginning to think he is innocent of the things of which he is accused."

"Do they?" said Ryder indifferently.

"Yes," she persisted, "most people are on his side."

She planted her elbows on the desk in front of her, and looking him squarely in the face she asked him point blank:

"Whose side are you on—really and truly?"

Ryder winced. What right had this woman, a stranger both to Judge Rossmore and himself, to come here and catechise him? He restrained his impatience with difficulty as he replied:

"Whose side am I on? Oh, I don't know that I am on any side. I don't know that I give it much thought, I"—

"Do you think this man deserves to be punished?" she demanded.

She had resumed her seat at the desk and partly regained her self possession.

"Why do you ask? What is your interest in this matter?"

"I don't know," she replied evasively. "His case interests me, that's all. It's rather romantic. Your son loves this man's daughter. He is in disgrace—many seem to think unjustly." Her voice trembled with emotion as she continued: "I have heard from one source or another—you know I am acquainted with a number of newspaper men—I have heard that life no longer has any interest for him, that he is not only disgraced but beggared, that he is pining away slowly, dying of a broken heart, that his wife and daughter are in despair. Tell me, do you think he deserves such a fate?"

"What have you got there?"

Ryder remained thoughtful a moment, and then he replied:

"No, I do not—no"—

Thinking that she had touched his sympathies, Shirley followed up her advantage:

"Oh, then, why not come to his rescue—you, who are so rich, so powerful; you, who can move the scales of justice at your will—save this man from humiliation and disgrace!"

Ryder shrugged his shoulders, and his face expressed weariness, as if the subject had begun to bore him.

"My dear girl, you don't understand. His removal is necessary."

Shirley's face became set and hard. There was a contemptuous ring to her words as she retorted:

"Yet you admit that he may be innocent!"

"Even if I knew it as a fact, I could not move."

"Do you mean to say that if you had positive proof?" She pointed to the drawer in the desk where he had placed the letters. "If you had absolute proof in that drawer, for instance, wouldn't you help him then?"

Ryder's face grew cold and inscrutable; he now wore his fighting mask.

"Not even if I had the absolute proof in that drawer!" he snapped viciously.

"Have you absolute proof in that drawer?" she demanded.

"I repeat that even if I had I could not expose the men who have been my friends. It's noblesse oblige in politics as well as in society, you know."

He smiled again at her, as if he had recovered his good humor after their sharp passages at arms.

"Oh, it's politics! That's what the papers said. And you believe him innocent. Well, you must have some grounds for your belief."

"Not necessarily."

"You said that even if you had the proofs you could not produce them without sacrificing your friends, showing that your friends are interested in having this man put off the bench"— She stopped, and burst into hysterical laughter. "Oh, I think you're having

Tailoring for Men

There are plenty of good tailors who lack the business acumen to conduct a shop upon a basis which would allow a fair charge for their efforts. They know all about cutting and fashioning, but chaos supplants system and method in the conduct of their business. They are compelled to ask prohibitive prices for their apparel to make debit and credit balance.

There is where we have the advantage. Our tailors are master craftsmen. They know every detail, every branch and every trick which adds individuality and character to a man's apparel. But the system is ours. There can be no time idled or material wasted. That is why we can provide a suit or coat to your measure for which we charge from $15.00 to $35.00.

It is that class of merchant tailoring in which the most critical and fastidious men find their ideas and tastes cleverly defined. May we convince you of this? The saving certainly warrants a fair trial.

Cleaning Satisfaction

A smile of satisfaction will come over your face if you let us do your work, for everything we do is done well. The green and faded look of those clothes is more apparent to observers than to owners themselves. Just look over your wardrobe and see if you do not find some that need to be cleaned or dyed. If so, send them to us or phone No. 204 2-r and we will call and tell you what the cost will be to make them look like new.

A trial will convince you of our ability to save you money in putting men, women and children's garments and household articles in comparatively new condition to do service for a long time. Promptitude is one of our virtues.

Don't you think it would be a good idea to bring the children's little savings to us where it would be safe and at the same time draw interest? There is no better way to lay the cornerstone of a successful business life for the little ones.

Small deposits are just as welcome here as the large ones, so bring in the children's savings and teach them the value of money.

THE exposures of Senator Foraker and Governor Haskell's relation with the Standard Oil Co. and their rapid fall from the high positions which they have held but emphasizes the fact that in the past few years there has been a great awakening of the public conscience in regard to civic affairs—a state of affairs which has largely been brought about by the aggressiveness of President Roosevelt. While some who are innocent may suffer the American people will no longer stand for the man who has the slightest taint of corporation influence, and they believe in Mr. Taft, a man who will continue the Roosevelt policies is presented to them for their suffrages. Not only has the people of the nation been aroused to the power which they hold in their hands, but the people of Michigan, who left their farm and factories to cast a vote for Fred M. Warner September 1, also cast a vote against boseism and in favor of a public official who was guided by the people's wishes, and stood forth as their champion, and woe be unto the man, or set of men who are endeavoring to set aside their verdict.

THE retirement of Alderman Fowler, while perhaps advisable owing to the unfortunate position in which he has been placed, through no fault of his own, takes from the service of the city a member of the council, who has given earnest faithful service and no matter how disagreeable the tasks assigned him has never hesitated but has performed them to the best of his ability.

THEATRICAL

Many people are braving the storms to see Bram's Musical Eccentrics this week at the Laf-a-Lot Theater, and that alone bespeaks the merit of their act. Two more versatile musicans have seldom been seen in Charlevoix and Mr. Bram has a line of talk that is right. Special features will be introduced the last three days of the week.

"Quincy Adams Sawyer" Coming.

There is scarcely anyone in this broad land who has not by this time either heard of or read that "best New England story ever written,—"Quincy Adams Sawyer," and observed the man driving down a country road to Mason's Corner in a one-horse chaise. These same people are familiar with the words which have appeared everywhere beneath that picture, whether in the big posters on the billboards, or in the book stores, or the columns of the newspapers—"The village gossips wondered who he was, what he was, what he came for, and how long he intended to stay." This announcement is to state that the "Quincy Adams Sawyer" is of play fame as well. That at least explains who he is and what he is. It is self-evident that what he comes for is to entertain the theatre goers who will doubtless pack the Charlevoix theater to see the dramatization of a novel that has reached the phenomenal sale of 200,000 in its first year. As to the length of the stay, it is limited to one performance, as follows Tuesday, Nov. 3, 1908.

Special pains have been taken in this dramatization to preserve that simple rural charm which has been so much admired by book lovers and it is promised that play-goers will find "Quincy Adams Sawyer" a rattling good homespun play of life in a Massachusetts village—bright, fresh and breezy, and filled with honest love. It presents unique phases of Yankee life, and has the real country atmosphere. The play is promised as one great big laugh from beginning to end, with the sweetest love story ever told. It is presented in four acts and five scenes, all specially built and painted for this production. This company is a carefully selected one of well known players representing the principal characters from the book who appear in the play.

The citizen's lecture course is entitled to special consideration in view of the superior attractions that have been secured by the committee. No better course can be found anywhere. Notice the advertisement in another column. Be sure to buy a course ticket. It is much cheaper than to depend upon single admission. Tickets will be on sale at the drug stores. It has been decided that the course ticket must be presented at the time that reserved seats are secured. Reserved seats will be sold for each entertainment for ten cents. Let our citizens remember that it is only through a lecture course that unusual attractions can be brought within the reach of such a town as Charlevoix.

A number of representatives were facetiously discussing the resources of the state of Missouri one afternoon when McCull of Massachusetts observed to Mr. Lloyd of the first named state:

WORLD-WIDE PENNY POSTAGE

Made Possible by Recent Robust, Constructive Republican Policy.

Convention Between America and England in Effect Oct. 1—Its Blessings to Foreign Born Citizens.

ORDER NO. 1667.

The Postal Administration of Great Britain having concurred therein:

It is hereby ordered, That, commencing on the 1st day of October, 1908, the postage rate applicable to letters mailed in United States, addressed for delivery at any place in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, shall be two (2) cents an ounce or fraction of an ounce.

Letters unpaid or short paid shall be dispatched to destination, but double the deficient postage, calculated at said rate, shall be collectible of the addressees upon the delivery of the unpaid or short paid letters.

G. V. L. MEYER,
Postmaster General.

Behind this simple statement is a vast amount of Republican constructive legislation which resulted in the significant accomplishment, set forth by the Postmaster General. It is eloquently prophetic of a world-wide penny postage, for which the credit will be due to a Republican administration.

Sixth Universal Postal Congress.

The Sixth Universal Postal Congress convened in the city of Rome, Italy, April 7 and continued until May 24, 1906. Sixty-five countries, including the United States, were represented. The assembly was for the purpose of discussing the postal systems of all nations and, if possible, agreeing upon measures for the improvement in all practical ways, of the regulations governing international intercourse through the mails. The first congress of this kind met in Berne, Switzerland, in 1874.

The United States Postoffice Department was represented in this World Postal Congress by two delegates—the Superintendent of Division of Foreign Mails, as in previous postal congresses, and the Hon. Edward Rosewater of the Omaha Bee, who had also served in the preceding postal congress.

Move for Universal Penny Postage.

At this Universal Postal Congress representatives of the United States proposed a universal two-cent postage to all nations. The Hon. J. Hendriks Henton, M. P., who is the father of the two-cent idea in England, speaking of America's action at the Rome convention, in standing out for a universal two-cent postal rate, said:

"The British members stood coldly by. They did not recognize that this was a great historic occasion, a worthy parallel of that solemn scene on July 4, 1776, when the Declaration of Independence was adopted; for if the Americans are willing to adopt a penny postage to all parts of the world, it follows that they are willing to establish it to the British Empire and form with us a 'Restrictive Postal Union.'"

The Hon. Whitelaw Reid, America's Republican minister to the Court of St. James, praised the work of the American delegation and solicited the friendly co-operation of the British government at a Fourth of July banquet speech in London in 1906. Mr. Reid said:

"The American people hoped for closer and cheaper communications with all other nations as the best means of promoting better acquaintance and perpetuating friendship. They were gratified to find that the British apostle of penny postage (Mr. Henton) at this moment focusing his efforts on what ought to be the easy task of persuading the authorities on both sides of the Atlantic, that it was as cheap to carry a letter from London to New York as from London to Calcutta; or from New York to Manila—and quite as useful."

America Republicans Lead the Way

So it has come to pass that the United States, under its Republican administration, has finally succeeded in entering into a convention with Great Britain whereby after the 1st of October this year, a two-cent postage rate will obtain between this country and England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales. We already have such an arrangement with Canada, Mexico, Cuba, Panama and our colonial possessions. This great accomplishment is universally recognized as the proper beginning which is to result in a universal two-cent postage rate around the world.

Important Things Accomplished.

Two other important things that the Republican administration accomplished at the Rome Universal Postal Congress through its representatives, must not be lost sight of. One was the adoption of a universal return coupon stamp, in exchange for which, upon its presentation at a postoffice in another country, the person presenting it shall receive a postage stamp of the value of 5 cents, good in any country of the world, thus enabling people here to prepay postage at regular rates upon reply letters.

The other significant concession was that in all World Postal Congresses to be held in the future, the United States is to be granted an additional vote in view of its island possessions; so that at all future congresses our country will be entitled to two votes, as against one vote each cast by every other nation in the world.

Practical Benefits to the People.

No doubt the Democrats may inquire as to what all this has to do with the welfare of American citizens. For their enlightenment and information it may be stated that, according to the United States census of 1900, the foreign born population in the United States at that time was 10,460,085. The population, born of foreign parentage (one or both parents having been born in foreign countries) was 20,198,939, or a total foreign population of 30,659,024. The report of the Immigration Commissioner by years since then shows that 6,368,853 have since come to America, thus eking out the total foreign population at the present time to 40,227,880. This does not take any note of increase since 1900 in American-born children, one or both of whose parents are of foreign blood. Estimating that only one-half of this number—21,063,840—write one letter to foreign countries every two weeks, or 26 weeks each year, we have 120,883,040 letters written annually, which, at the present rate of 5 cents postage each, amounts to an expenditure of $6,499,152 annually. Under the present postal law foreign correspondents may send letters to the United States "collect," but when they reach their destination the recipient must pay double postage. Figuring the double postage on the same basis, the foreign population of the United States pays during each year, for postage under the present system, $10,497,456.

Under the new and cheaper postal charges advocated by the Republican party, should the 2-cent rate become universal, the foreign population in the United States, to their direct correspondents, would only pay $3,249,576 annually for direct postage and $9,748,728, for letters sent to them from foreign countries "collect." In other words, this Republican measure will save the highly esteemed adopted citizens of our country, and those born here of foreign parentage $12,998,254 annually, in the necessary correspondence with their loved ones abroad. But perhaps the Democrats do not think this is worth while.

Some Glaring Inconsistencies.

At present an American can send a letter 5,000 miles by land—say from Mexico to Alaska—for 2 cents, but must pay 5 cents for a letter of half the weight sent 3,100 miles to England. An Englishman pays 5 cents on a letter crossing the Atlantic, 3,100 miles, and 2 cents on one crossing the Indian and South Pacific Oceans, 16,000 miles, to New Zealand. All this is to be remedied on October the first next, thanks to an enlightened Republican administration.

World is Ready for Reduction.

It will probably be but a short time after the convention between this country and England goes into effect, until the dream of a universal 2-cent letter postage, championed by the Republican party, will be realized. Australia, New Zealand and Egypt have already called for the 2-cent rate. The Emperor of Germany has said that if England establishes a 2-cent postage rate with the United States, he will have Germany do the same. France, Italy, South Africa, Japan, Belgium, Holland, Denmark and Sweden, would need little more than an invitation to follow suit.

A 2-cent postal rate would bind all the South American republics and the United States still more closely together into a peaceful, reciprocal, progressive, civilization, which would mean a more rapid development of both American continents and a new application of the Monroe doctrine. With these countries agreed, on the object desired, the continent of Europe alone would then be wholly outside this comprehensive postal union, and then the continental powers would not long stand aloof from it.

It has remained for the United States to take the initiative in a move to reap the great glory of being the pioneers of a world wide 2-cent postage. Millions of our citizens will feel almost as grateful for this beneficent act as millions of slaves did, when the Republican party broke the shackles that bound them to perpetual physical servitude.

"One important thing about these cigars," said Kloseman, after handing a weed to his friend, "is that they last so long."

"Do they really," asked the disgusted visitor, holding his at arm's length, "or does it merely seem long?"—Philadelphia.

There's a Reason

Why real estate is worth more at one time than another. The price is based upon its rental value.

Its rental value is based upon the demand for it by tenants.

The demand for it is caused by an increase in population.

The increase in population is caused by the advent of manufactories into the community.

A manufactory employing a hundred men suddenly injected into a small city will increase rents in that city 25 per cent. The man who is paying rent, if he is wise, will buy him a house and pay for it with the money that would go for rent.

One of the most important things to know about snake bites is that the poisonous snakes, such as the hamadryad, cobra, etc., leave on the individual only the two punctures of the poison fangs, while the less poisonous and harmless snakes leave besides the two punctures the marks of adventitious teeth. This is most important in prognosis, as, being called to see persons bitten who were showing great shock, it helps physician and patient materially to assure the patient that, while he may be very ill, he will not die.—Medical Journal.

W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

The following pronouncement prepared by a committee representing all the temperance societies of the state, when their great temperance meeting was held at Old Orchard August 28-30, was unanimously adopted and represents the sentiment that prevails throughout the state of Maine:

This conference of temperance organizations of Maine declares its unchanging belief in Constitutional Prohibition for the reasons:

Prohibition is the only righteous liquor law. License is partnership in the guilt as well as the profits of the liquor traffic.

Prohibition is the only honest liquor law. The restrictive features of license laws are commonly a dead letter, not taken seriously by the officials in license communities.

Prohibition is the only successful liquor law. It reduces greatly the evils of intemperance. It is the best protection of the home as against the saloon.

Prohibition is more easily enforced, and is today better enforced in Maine, than licence laws in license states. Its repeal is sought by those elements that have always worked for its nullification. They are the same elements that in license states nullify the license laws, oppose no license, under local option and violate no-license, when that is voted.

We rejoice in the rapid progress of total abstinence and prohibition. We salute with pride and gratitude the states which, during the last year, have followed Maine's example in adopting state-wide prohibition, and we believe one state after another will adopt the same righteous policy and thus hasten the coming of National Prohibition. We commend and thank Governor Cobb for his steadfast adherence to his campaign pledges for law enforcement.

The enrollment of new students at the M. A. C. passed the four hundred and seventy-five mark last week. This year's matriculating class exceeds last year's record breaking class by sixty-three students. Altogether there are over one thousand students.

Assistant postmasters of the first and second class offices of Michigan to the number of fifty met in Jackson last week and organized the Michigan State Association of Assistant Postmasters. The delegates listened to addresses by Postmaster Richardson, Congressman Townsend and Guy T. Gould, of Washington, representing the salary and allowance division of department. The idea of the association is improvement of the service by the interchange of ideas. Frank S. Knowles, of Jackson, was elected president; C. H. Hall, Grand Rapids, first vice president; I. S. Fink, Alma, second vice president; W. S. Munn, Eaton Rapids, secretary; C. J. Weller, Muskegon, financial secretary; F. B. Watson, Three Rivers, treasurer.

Mrs. Margaret Kelley, aged forty-four, either committed suicide or accidently strangled herself at the Northern Michigan asylum for the insane. The coroner's verdict was accidental death.

The woman was sent there from Cadillac and was a very troublesome patient, as she insisted on undressing herself and it was necessary for the attendant to constantly hold her or for restraint to be used. The presence of the attendant irritated her so that she was loosely tied to a chair with a piece of blue denim cloth, the restraint leaving her arms and feet free. It is thought that she tried to free herself, or deliberately got the cloth about her neck as when found she was hanging from the chair dead.

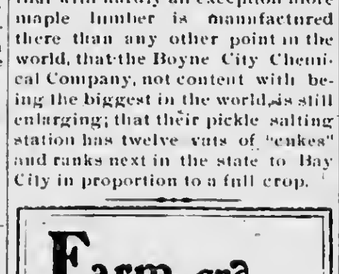
MODERN GRANARY.

A Practical and Economical Building For Storing Corn, Wheat and Oats.

Some writers tell us that the average farmer annually loses one-twentieth of his entire crops from the lack of proper buildings in which to store them and hold them for profitable prices.

While the writer cannot vouch for the above statement, he does know that an improvement in the usual storehouse for grain, etc., on the average farm is not only desirable, but very necessary if the farmer would save to himself the profits on his products that now go into the pockets of the grain speculator.



FRONT OF GRANARY.

The illustration shows a plan of a granary for corn, wheat, oats and other grain built along practical lines, and wherever built it has proved entirely satisfactory. The main feature of this house is the lower floor. The outer walls are boarded or sided up tight, contrary to the usual manner of building a cornerib. The house sits about three feet above the ground on oak or cement posts, as the builder may desire. The floor of the crib is built of 1 by 4 inch or 6 inch slats placed one and a half inches apart. The interior wall is built in the same way. This allows a free circulation of air at all times, but keeps out all rain and snow. This, with the elevated floor, makes it entirely rat and weather proof. The driveway walls are boarded solid from the floor down to the ground. This allows the hogs and poultry to pick up any corn that may fall through. It is said that corn held in such a crib not only brings a better price, but that it does not lose in weight the same as corn held in the usual manner.

The crib is 28 by 40 feet on the ground and twelve feet to the eaves. The upper floor will hold several hundred bushels of small grain, and the two coneribs 8 by 40 feet will hold a large amount of corn.

Sliding doors are provided at either end, and a large ventilating window in the opposite gable ventilates the entire building. The driveway is used a part of the season for farm implements.—Farm and Ranch.

THE PUBLIC BENEFITED

Charlevoix People Greatly Interested in the Generous Offer of A. B. Fleischer, Proprietor Ivy Drug Store.

The people have already demonstrated that they would rather trust a man who is naturally honest, than one was honest only because he had to be.

A. B. Fleischer, proprietor of the Ivy Drug Store has a firmly established reputation for square dealing and sterling honesty. When he told the people that Rexall Remedies are the purest and most dependable remedies that it is possible for modern science to produce, and that he would tell the public exactly what each one of these 300 remedies contained, and that he sold Rexall Remedies on his own personal guarantee that they would give entire satisfaction or the medicine would not cost the user a single cent, he was believed.

Ever since this announcement the store of A. B. Fleischer, proprietor of the Ivy Drug Store, has been crowded by people buying Rexall Remedies; all of which proves that A. B. Fleischer, proprietor of the Ivy Drug Store, has the confidence of the people that honesty is the best policy.

There is no "cure-all" among the Rexall Remedies, there are 300 different and separate medicines; one for each human ill, and each unquestionably the best of its kind.

Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets are particularly recommended for the positive cure of stomach irritation, indigestion and dyspepsia. They are rich in Bismuth, Subnitrate Pepsin and Carminatives, and are prepared by a special process which perfects and enhances the great curative value of these well-known medicinal agents. This remedy sells for 25c a package. Everyone suffering from stomach disorder should try Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets, inasmuch as they cost nothing if they do not satisfy.

A. B. Fleischer, proprietor of the Ivy Drug Store, is certainly fortunate in securing control of the sale of these remedies, and we urge everyone in need of medicine to investigate and take advantage of this frank and generous offer.

BOUTELL ON BRYAN.

Is His "Shall the People Rule?" Simply "a Local Issue?"

Congressman Henry Sherman Boutell of Chicago, commenting on Mr. Bryan's speech in Iowa, says:

Mr. Bryan's question, "Shall the people rule?" implies that somewhere in this country the people do not rule. The only States where the people do not rule are the States that are expected to give overwhelming majorities for the Democratic ticket. Perhaps Mr. Bryan thinks that his question is purely "a local issue." If he is sincere, I challenge him to make a speech in Vicksburg, Miss., on "Government by the People." Let him repeat some of his famous anti-imperialist speeches, simply changing three words, substituting "Mississippi" for "Philippines" and "black brothers" for "brown brothers." Let him suggest that we have as chairman of his meeting John Sharp Williams, leader of the Democrats in Congress, and as vice-chairmen the other members of the Congressional delegation from Mississippi.

And after he has made his speech in Vicksburg, if he shall have escaped the rule of the people in that community, I dare Mr. Bryan to repeat his oration on popular government in Charleston, S. C., with Senator Tillman as chairman of his meeting. Mr. Bryan's sentiments have a purely geographical sincerity. His epigrams and startling conundrums are especially designed to meet local demands. Of this nature are all his views on tariff and taxation.

Mr. Bryan's proposition that every time a trust is formed a tariff schedule should be repealed, and every time a trust is dissolved a new duty should be added, is too funny even for comic opera.

If on March 4 next Mr. Bryan should become President, with a Democratic Congress in both houses, and should actually place upon the statute books the financial and economic vagaries delivered by him in his speech of last Friday, it would plunge the nation into bankruptcy and bring on industrial chaos. If he should begin by repealing the duty on sugar to punish the sugar trust, he would upset the national finances by losing $53,000,000 a year in revenues, and would stir up a revolution in Louisiana, Utah, Colorado and Michigan. Then, if he should repeal the duty on cotton goods, because some hustling manufacturers of New England or the Carolinas were dumping goods in China in rivalry with England and Germany, he would divert other millions from the treasury and invite still further industrial ruin.

But, of course, Mr. Bryan would do none of these things, any more than he will invade the solid South and summon the cohorts of Democracy to the defense of the Constitution with the battle cry "Shall the People Rule?" Mr. Bryan simply does not mean what he says. What he utters with Chautauquan unction in the North he repudiates with Pecksniffian duplicity in the South.

CALLING SPADES SPADES.

Wrongdoing Should Be Named In Good Old Anglo-Saxon.

The Rev. A. Howard of Los Angeles had this to say of modern social oppression in a recent sermon:

"The old conceptions of the devil which furnished him with the hoofs, horns and forked tail may fit one of the lesser and rougher members of the Independent order of Imps, but as a description of the modern devil it is misleading. The horns are hidden in a silk hat, the hoofs neatly encased in patent leather shoes and the tail run down a creased trousers leg.

"We do not see that boodling is treason, that blackmail is piracy, that embezzlement is theft, that tax dodging is larceny, that railroad discrimination is treachery, that factory labor of children is slavery and that deleterious adulterations is murder.

"It has not come home to us that the fraudulent promoter devours widows' homes, that the monopolist 'grinds the faces of the poor,' that mercenary editors and spellbinders 'put bitter for sweet and sweet for bitter.' The cloven hoof hides in patent leather, and today, as in Hosea's time, 'the people are destroyed for lack of knowledge.'

"The mob lynches the red handed murderer when it ought to keep a gallows Haman high for the venal mine inspector, the seller of infected milk, the maintainer of fire traps. The child beater is forever blasted in reprobation, but the exploiter of infant toil or the concocter of a soothing strup for the drugging of babies stands a pillar of society.

"We have been wonderfully tender toward social sins. We must come back to good old Anglo-Saxon terms in our treatment of wrongdoing. We have had a delicate bathed phraseology with which we have tried to whitewash modern methods that are grossly and abnormally wicked. We have ceased to call a spade a spade and have called it an implement utilized in excavation. We have replaced the old fashioned blunt expressions that have force and vigor in them and have invented a lot of cushioned framed, soft absorbing terms to eliminate the jolts of our awkward but definite English. It is only the crude, unlettered man who steals. Your modern man of affairs embezzles. He promotes rather than defrauds. He is a 'broker who deals in futures.' If we want to clean up the social skirts we must recognize social sin even when it wears kid gloves and a silk hat and stop this everlasting nonsense about 'prevaricators' and 'speculators' and 'operators in high finance' and talk about liars, thieves and swindlers."

FOOLISH QUESTIONS.

Apt Answers Teach an Ignoramus a Few Truths.

Q. Don't you think the average workingman is lazy and dishonest?

A. Yes, of course. People will learn, you know, by copying their betters.

Q. Don't the Socialists believe in dividing up?

A. Yes, indeed. We believe in dividing up the work.

Q. Won't Socialism break up the home?

A. Certainly. The home for the friendless, the orphan, the insane, the criminal and the harlot are in great danger from the Socialist movement.

Q. Why don't the Socialists shut up and go to work?

A. That's it. Why don't they? And also why don't the capitalists open up their shops and let 'em?

Q. Aren't Socialists anarchists?

A. Yes. They have to live; therefore they preach Socialism while forced to practice capitalism.

Q. Aren't the Socialists a lot of dreamers?

Q. Yes; we dream we're living, whereas we're working ourselves to death.

Q. Isn't the country all right?

A. Of course it is or the trusts wouldn't own it.

Q. Aren't you fellows stirring up discontent and class hatred?

A. Yes, that's so, but the capitalists haven't got scared yet and offered to get off our backs.

Q. Shouldn't labor and capital work together in harmony?

A. They should, but capital won't work. He leaves that detail to labor.

Q. You Socialists ought to be in jail.

A. That's so. We'd have time then to post up some, so we could answer some more foolish questions.—Robin Dunbar.

A Gem From Debs.

It does not matter that the Creator has sown with stars the fields of ether and decked the earth with countless beauties for man's enjoyment. It does not matter that air and ocean teem with the wonders of innumerable forms of life to challenge man's admiration and investigation. It does not matter that nature spreads forth all her scenes of beauty and gladness and pours forth the melodies of her myriad tongued voices for man's delectation. If liberty is ostracized and exiled, man is a slave and the world rolls in space and whirls around the sun a gilded prison, a domed dungeon, and, though painted in all the enchanting hues that infinite art could command, it must stand forth a blotch amid the singing spheres of the sidereal heavens, and those who cull from the vocabularies of nations, living or dead, their flashing phrases with which to apostrophize liberty, are engaged in perpetuating the most stupendous delusion the ages have known. Strike down liberty, no matter by what subtle and infernal art the deed is done, the spinal cord of humanity is severed, and the world is paralyzed by the indescribable crime.—Eugene V. Debs.

THE LION AND THE MOUSE.

By CHARLES KLEIN.

A Story of American Life Novelized From the Play by ARTHUR HORNBLOW.

Copyright, 1906, by G. W. Dillingham Company.

n Jove at my expense," she went on. "Just to see how far you can lead me. I daresay Judge Rossmore deserves all he gets. Oh, yes, I'd sure he deserves it." She rose and walked to the other side of the room to conceal her emotion.

Ryder watched her curiously.

"My dear young lady, how you take this matter to heart!"

"Please forgive me," laughed Shirley and averting her face to conceal the fact that her eyes were filled with tears. "It's my artistic temperament, I suppose. It's always getting me into trouble. It appealed so strongly to my sympathies, this story of hopeless love between two young people, with the father of the girl hounded by corrupt politicians and unscrupulous financiers. It was too much for me. Ah, ah, I forgot where I was!"

She leaned against a chair, sick and faint from nervousness, her whole body trembling. At that moment there was a knock at the library door, and Jefferson Ryder appeared. Not seeing Shirley, whose back was toward him, he advanced to greet his father.

"You told me to come up in five minutes," he said. "I just wanted to say"—

"Miss Greeo," said Ryder senior, addressing Shirley and ignoring whatever it was that the young man wanted to say, "this is my son Jefferson. Jeff, this is Miss Green."

Jefferson looked in the direction indicated and stood as if rooted to the floor. He was so surprised that he was struck dumb. Finally, recovering himself, he exclaimed:

"Shirley!"

"Yes, Shirley Green, the author," explained Ryder senior, not noticing the note of familiar recognition in his exclamation.

Shirley advanced and, holding out her hand to Jefferson, said demurely:

"I am very pleased to meet you, Mr. Ryder." Then quickly in an undertone she added: "Be careful! Don't betray me."

Jefferson was so astounded that he did not see the outstretched hand. All he could do was to stand and stare first at her and then at his father.

"Why don't you shake hands with her?" said Ryder senior. "She won't bite you." Then he added: "Miss Green is going to do some literary work for me, so we shall see a great deal of her. It's too bad you're going away." He chuckled at his own pleasantry.

"Father," blurted out Jefferson, "I came to say that I've changed my mind. You did not want me to go, and I feel I ought to do something to please you."

"Good boy," said Ryder, pleased. "Now you're talking common sense." He turned to Shirley, who was getting ready to make her departure: "Well, Miss Green, we may consider the matter settled. You undertake the work at the price I named and finish it as soon as you can. Of course you will have to consult me a good deal as you go along, so I think it would be better for you to come and stay here while the work is progressing. Mrs. Ryder can give you a suit of rooms to yourself, where you will be undisturbed, and you will have all your material close at hand. What do you say?"

Shirley was silent for a moment. She looked first at Ryder and then at his son, and from them her glance went to the little drawer on the left hand side of the desk. Then she said quietly:

"As you think best, Mr. Ryder. I am quite willing to do the work here."

Ryder senior escorted her to the top of the landing and watched her as she passed down the grand staircase, ushered by the gorgeously uniformed flunkies, to the front door and the street.

CHAPTER XIII.

SHIRLEY entered upon her new duties in the Ryder household two days later. She had returned to her rooms the evening of her meeting with the financier in a state bordering upon hysteria. The day's events had been so extraordinary that it seemed to her they could not be real and that she must be in a dream. The car ride to Seventy-fourth street, the interview in the library, the discovery of her father's letters, the offer to write the biography and, what to her was still more important, the invitation to go and live in the Ryder home—all these incidents were so remarkable and unusual that it was only with difficulty that the girl persuaded herself that they were not figments of a disordered brain.

But it was all true enough. The next morning's mail brought a letter from Mrs. Ryder, who wrote to the effect that Mr. Ryder would like the work to begin at once and adding that a suit of rooms would be ready for her the following afternoon. Shirley did not hesitate. Everything was to be gained by making the Ryder residence her headquarters, her father's very life depending upon the successful outcome of her present mission, and this unhoped for opportunity practically insured success. She immediately wrote to Massapequa. One letter was to her mother, saying that she was extending her visit beyond the time originally planned. The other letter was to Stott. She told him all about the interview with Ryder, informed him of the discovery of the letters and after explaining the nature of the work offered to her said that her address for the next few weeks would be in care of John Burkett Ryder. All was going better than she had dared to hope. Everything seemed to favor their plan. Her first step, of course, while in the Ryder home would be to secure possession of her father's letters, and these she would dispatch at once to Massapequa, so they could be laid before the senate without delay.

So, after settling accounts with her landlady and packing up her few belongings, Shirley lost no time in transferring herself to the more luxurious quarters provided for her in the $10,000,000 mansion uptown.

At the Ryder house she was received cordially and with every mark of consideration. The housekeeper came down to the main hall to greet her when she arrived and escorted her to the suit of rooms, comprising a small working library, a bedroom simply but daintily furnished in pink and white and a private bathroom which had been specially prepared for her convenience and comfort, and here presently she was joined by Mrs. Ryder.

"Dear me," exclaimed the financier's wife, staring curiously at Shirley, "what a young girl you are to have made such a stir with a book! How did you do it? I'm sure I couldn't. It's as much as I can do to write a letter, and half the time that's not legible."

"Oh, it wasn't so hard!" laughed Shirley. "It was the subject that appealed rather than any special skill of mine. The trusts and their misdeeds are the favorite topics of the hour. The whole country is talking about nothing else. My book came at the right time, that's all."

Although "The American Octopus" was a direct attack on her own husband, Mrs. Ryder secretly admired this young woman who had dared to speak a few blunt truths. It was a courage which, alas, she had always lacked herself, but there was a certain satisfaction in knowing there were women in the world not entirely cowed by the tyrant man.

"I have always wanted a daughter," went on Mrs. Ryder, becoming confidential, while Shirley removed her things and made herself at home. "Girls of your age are so companionable." Then abruptly she asked, "Do your parents live in New York?"

Shirley's face flushed, and she stooped over her trunk to hide her embarrassment.

"No—not at present," she answered evasively. "My mother and father are in the country."

She was afraid that more questions of a personal nature would follow, but

"What a young girl you are to have made such a stir!"

apparently Mrs. Ryder was not in an inquisitive mood, for she asked nothing further. She only said:

"I have a son, but I don't see much of him. You must meet my Jefferson. He is such a nice boy."

Shirley tried to look unconcerned as she replied:

"I met him yesterday. Mr. Ryder introduced him to me."

"Poor lad! He has his troubles, too," went on Mrs. Ryder. "He's in love with a girl, but his father wants him to marry some one else. They're quarreling over it all the time."

"Parents shouldn't interfere in matters of the heart," said Shirley decisively. "What is more serious than the choosing of a life companion, and who are better entitled to make a free selection than they who are going to spend the rest of their days together? Of course it is a father's duty to give his son the benefit of his riper experience, but to insist on a marriage based only on business interests is little less than a crime. There are considerations more important if the union is to be a happy or a lasting one. The chief thing is that the man should feel real attachment for the woman he marries. Two people who are to live together as man and wife must be compatible in tastes and temper. You cannot mix oil and water. It is these selfish marriages which keep our divorce courts busy. Money alone won't buy happiness in marriage."

"No," sighed Mrs. Ryder. "No one knows that better than I."

CONTINUED NEXT WEEK.

An angler returned at eventide laden with a single piscatorial burden of a size and weight which ought to have instantly commanded the admiration and respect of his wife.

But she looked upon it with a cold and unenthusiastic eye when her husband slammed it weightily down upon the table with a triumphant:

"There, Maria, what do you think of that for a catch? And the terrific struggle before I landed it you'd hardly believe!"

"Oh, yes, I would," said Maria icily. "I witnessed the disgraceful haggling and bargaining which went on for half an hour outside the fishmonger's before he and you came to terms!"—London Scraps.

AS TO FISH.

Some Rules to Guide the Buyer of Sea Food.

The market price of fish is not always a true indication of its economic value in the family dietary, says an authority. Supply and demand, nearness to its market, season and many other exigencies regulate its price. The amount of waste involved in dressing the fish and the amount of nutrition that it contains measure its value. For example, cod usually costs about half as much as salmon, but it contains little more than a third as much nutrition. Besides, the waste in dressing the salmon is very little, while the waste from the cod is relatively large. The result is that in the end, all things considered, salmon is less expensive than cod. The waste in skin and bone is great in most fish—in cod 6 per cent, in haddock 35 per cent. If the same price were paid for a salmon and cod 52 per cent of nutrition would be obtained from the salmon and 19 from the cod.

There is a large percentage of water in the composition of fish—from 50 to 75 per cent on the average. Salt cod contains 67 per cent of water, haddock 46 per cent, oysters 77 per cent. Compared with meat, fish contains much more gelatin and fewer extractives. That is, boiling is the most expensive and the least attractive way of cooking fish, the loss in nutrition and flavor in boiling being great.

Lean fish, dietitians say, is more easy of digestion than fat fish. Long fibered fish, like cod and lobster, are harder to digest than the short fibered fish. While flesh fish is far easier of digestion than dark flesh, although that with dark flesh has more nutrition. This explains why some persons find bluefish unwholesome.

Fish that has white flesh requires about ten minutes to the pound in boiling and fifteen minutes in baking.

The old idea that fish is a brain food was long since proved to be without foundation. But it has not yet been proved that an overdiet of fish does not lead to skin troubles.

Never buy a fish that has dull eyes, while gills or soft, spongy flesh. When a fish is fresh the eyes are bright, the gills red and the flesh firm and odorless. Lobsters and crabs, if alive, should be lively, or, if boiled, the lobster's tail should be tight against the body, not hanging limp.

The proper cooking of fish is not a simple matter. If it is underdone it is uneatable, while overdone fish is tough and tasteless. The cooking of a fish depends upon the size, kind, the nature of the water from which it was taken, its character and the character of the water in which it is cooked.

Courier Grange Column

The coming session of the State grange, to which delegates will be elected next week, will be one of the most important in the history of the order.

A full list of state officers are to be chosen and all indications point to a practically new officialist. For master, the names of brothers A. E. Palmer and N. P. Hull are mentioned and both will probably be candidates.

In addition to the election of officers, much other important business will come up, not only in regard to the affairs of the Order, but in the line of legislation as undoubtedly the next legislature will be more responsive to the people's wishes than its predecessors. Every patron who is honored by being chosen to represent the farmers of Charlevoix county at Saginaw next winter, should study these questions as they may act in an intelligent manner.

Norwood Grange No. 1291.

Norwood grange held their regular meeting Tuesday, September 22, with the Worthy Master in the chair. Under the regular order of business, a communication was read from the state grange, notifying us to elect four delegates to the county convention, to be held October 8. The following were elected: Brother Ed. Cook and wife and Brother John Bugtee and wife. There being no further business the grange adjourned to the dining room for refreshments.

Wilson Grange No. 719

Wilson grange met in regular session Saturday evening, September 26, and was opened in regular form with twenty-five members present. H. Batterbee was elected unanimously to fill vacancy in the office of assistant steward.

The following delegates were elected to the district convention: George Todd, Millard Warden, William Saunders, H. Batterbee, alternates, Sam Nowlin, J. M. Warden, O. S. Bills, E. S. Brintnall. The secretary announced that a non-granger wished to purchase staples of us, and a warm discussion as to what price should be charged non-grangers immediately rose. Brothers J. M. Warden, George Todd and E. S. Nowlin contended they should be charged the market price as an inducement to join the grange would other-wise be removed and a motion to that effect finally carried without opposition.

Two candidates were balloted on and will be initated next meeting October 10.

The Woman's Work committee announced that a box social would be held at the hall Saturday evening, October 2.

Lecturer had a very good program of eight selections, readings, songs and recitations.

The following resolutions were adopted:

Whereas: Death, the relentless reaper has once more passed through our midst and in passing, released from it's earthly bondage the spirit of one of the fairest flowers of our Order, Agnes, beloved daughter of our Worthy Master, Robert Shepard and

Whereas: Our hearts are full of sorrow because of the great loss of our grange and our community, and of sympathy for those who knew her best and loved her most, the bereaved father and family, and

Whereas: It is befitting that we pay a last token of love and respect to her whose sweet personality will ever remain fresh in our memory be it

Resolved: That as a token of our sorrow, our charter shall be draped for a period of thirty days and as a token our sympathy for her family, a copy of this, our last tribute to her beloved memory be sent to each member thereof, and be it further

Resolved: That a copy of these resolutions be sent to all local newspapers for publication.

POSTAL SAVINGS BANKS

Machinery of Congress Already Started for Postal Savings Bank Law.

A Safe and Sane Plan for the Convenience of the People and the Encouragement of Thrift.

"We favor the establishment of a postal savings bank system for the convenience of the people and the encouragement of thrift."

This is the declaration of the Republican national platform, and postal savings banks will without doubt be authorized by law and established as a part of our financial system by the action of Congress at its coming session, which will be convened in December. Indeed, much has already been accomplished towards the enactment of this law. At the last session of Congress a bill was carefully prepared which met with the approval of the Postmaster General, and was reported upon favorably by the Senate Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads. This bill is now on the Senate calendar and can be acted upon as soon as Congress is convened.

The scope of the proposed law is set forth in the committee report, which is in part as follows:

Committee Report.

The purpose of this bill is to place at the disposal of people of small means the machinery of the Postoffice Department to aid and encourage them to save their earnings. The subject of postal savings banks or depositories is not new in this country and it may be truly said to be quite familiar to the people of Europe and the British colonies. The propriety of establishing postal savings banks became the subject of discussion in England as early as 1807. Every objection to such use of the postoffice facilities urged in this country was vigorously pressed in the long-continued discussion of the subject in England.

For over fifty years private savings institutions waged bitter opposition to the growing sentiment in favor of postal savings banks, but notwithstanding such opposition in 1861 an act of Parliament was passed entitled "An act to grant additional facilities for depositing small savings with the security of the government for the due repayment thereof." That the alarm of private institutions was ill founded is amply proven by the recorded fact that the private savings banks increased their capital by more than ten millions of dollars in the first fifteen years following the establishment of postal savings institutions.

That the postal savings institutions proved successful is satisfactorily attested by the fact that no backward step has ever been taken in England on this subject and by the further fact that in rapid succession the lead of England was taken by other countries.

The primary purpose of these institutions is to encourage thrift and a saving disposition among the people of small means by placing at their disposal in every part of the country ready facilities for the depositing of small sums, with absolute assurance of repayment on demand with a low rate of interest on a limited aggregate amount.

Postal Savings Banks Needed.

In certain parts of our country savings institutions are sufficiently numerous to accommodate the people, but such areas are quite limited, being confined to New England and New York. It is alleged that by reason of the number and location of savings banks there is one savings account to every two of the population of New England, whereas in all the country outside New England and New York the average is only one savings account to every 157 of the population. Taking such figures to be approximately correct and recognizing the fact that the people of all sections of this country are pretty much the same in habits, inclinations, and purposes, it must be obvious to the most casual observer that the people of the South, the Middle West, and the West do not save their earnings as do those of New England from the mere want of secure places in which deposits may be made.

To those who feel inclined to believe that the establishment of postal savings depositories will involve an element of paternalism it seems quite sufficient to suggest that the machinery of the Postoffice Department is now in existence and will continue to exist with out diminution of expense whether such depositories are created or not and that the establishment of these depositories for the benefit of the people will not involve one farthing of loss to the Post-Office Department, but will probably, on the contrary, prove more than self-sustaining. Very slight computation will clearly demonstrate that the postal savings depositors can not burden the Post-Office Department with any additional deficiency.

If I am elected President, I shall urge upon Congress, with every hope of success, that a law be passed requiring a filing in a Federal office of a statement of the contributions received by committees and candidates in elections for members of Congress and in such other elections as are constitutionally within the control of Congress. —From Hon. Wm. H. Taft's speech accepting Presidential nomination.

BRYAN'S POLICIES DESTRUCTIVE.

Mr. Taft Compares Republican and Democratic Platforms.

(From Mr. Taft's Speech of Acceptance.)

The chief difference between the Republican and the Democratic platforms is the difference which has heretofore been seen between the policies of Mr. Roosevelt and those which have been advocated by the Democratic candidate, Mr. Bryan. Mr. Roosevelt's policies have been progressive and regulative; Mr. Bryan's destructive. Mr. Roosevelt has favored regulation of the business in which evils have grown up so as to stamp out the evils and permit the business to continue. The tendency of Mr. Bryan's proposals has generally been destructive of the business with respect to which he is demanding reform. Mr. Roosevelt would compel the trusts to conduct their business in a lawful manner and secure the benefits of their operation and the maintenance of the prosperity of the country of which they are an important part; while Mr. Bryan would extirpate and destroy the entire business in order to stamp out the evils which they have practiced.

The highest claim of William McKinley for the gratitude of his countrymen is that, in spite of the abuse and contumely that was heaped upon his head for this policy, he placed our country in the forefront of nations as a civilizer and uplifter of unfortunate peoples.—Hon. Wm. H. Taft, at Cleveland, Ohio.

John T. Winship of Saginaw, was re-elected chairman of the state central committee.

This represents the work of the Democratic State convention held at Saginaw last week. Lawton T. Hemans the candidate for Governor was named at the primaries.

The platform in part follows:

"First—We hereby cheerfully and earnestly endorse the Democratic national platform adopted at Denver and fully believing in the wisdom, honesty and integrity of purpose of our standard bearers, William J. Bryan and John W. Kern, we pledge to them our allegiance.

"Second—We favor the nomination and election of United States senators and state, county, city and township officers by direct vote of the people.

"Third—We pledge ourselves to adopt those principles of pure democracy, "the initiative and referendum."

"Fourth—We favor the adoption of such legislation or constitutional amendment as shall provide for the election of railroad and tax commissioners by direct vote of the people.

"Fifth—We favor home rule.

"Sixth—We denounce the present primary election law as a sham and a fraud and a violation of the pledges of the Republican party and pledge ourselves to enact a primary election law simple and easily understood and which can be used with little expense, that will not in its operations defeat the will of the people or enable, candidates for office to use it as an engine for fraud and corruption.

"Seventh—We are in favor of legislation under which the state banks shall be required under an equitable system to establish a guarantee fund for the prompt payment of the depositors of any state bank which may become insolvent after the passage of such law.

"Eighth—We believe the labor in penal institutions of this state should be so employed that it would compete in the smallest possible degree with free labor.

"Ninth—We condemn the practice of appointment and keeping in office of useless and unnecessary boards, officers and clerks. We pledge the people that the Democratic party, in case of victory at the polls, will conduct a house-cleaning at Lansing and will turn out the useless officers.

"Tenth—We believe that the re-adoption of the principles of the tax law of 1891, so far as it applies to mortgages, would be of great saving to parties in debt in this state and a vast saving to the taxpayers, and we pledge ourselves to use every endeavor to reenact such principles.

"Eleventh—We are constrained to believe that the governor of this state and the late state treasurer, for private gain and in violation of the rights of the people, permitted the money of the state, in violation of the law, to be farmed out to pet banks without proper security, by which large sums of money have been lost to the people. We condemn this conduct, and we demand that this matter be probed and the guilty parties brought to justice.

"Twelth—We commend to the voters of this state our able, honest, patriotic candidate for governor, Lawton T. Hemans."

RECEPTION TO REV. YOST.

Norwood Residents Welcome Home Their Pastor.

A reception was given Rev. R. E. Yost, pastor of the M. E. church at Norwood circuit, Friday evening at the parsonage. About seventy-five members of his charge being present.

A very instructive program was listened to which highly entertained all. Words of appreciation and welcome were listened to by the pastor.

After singing "Blest be the tie that binds our hearts in Christian love," the ladies served luncheon and all went home feeling that it was that kind of surprise which will not soon be forgotten.

DEATH CALLS THREE.

Mrs. Mary Taylor an old Resident of This City.

Miss Mary Lyman of Charlevoix, and John Boyle formerly of St. James.

Mrs. Mary Taylor died at the home of her daughter, Mrs. R. W. Elston, Friday, October 2, after a short illness.

Mrs. Taylor was born in Essex, England, and was seventy-eight years of age. She had been a resident of Charlevoix since 1882, and leaves four sons Fred of Detroit, Alfred of Coner de Alene, Idaho, and Harry and Will of Charlevoix, one daughter, Mrs. R. W. Elston of this city.

The funeral was held at the residence of Mrs. Elston, Sunday, Rev. H. A. Putnam officiating.

MISS MARY LYMAN.

Miss Mary Lyman died at the home of her mother, Mrs. Martin Lyman on Mason street, Friday night, at the age of thirty one.

Miss Lyman was born in Antrim county, but was brought up in Ohio, receiving her education at Hiram College. For the past eight years she has made her home with her mother in this city.

She leaves besides her mother two brothers, Finley M. Lyman of Grand Rapids, Harry Lyman of Montana, and one sister, Mrs. Walsh of Youngstown, Ohio.

The funeral was held at the house Monday, Rev. Dr. Wright officiating.

JOHN BOYLE.

John Boyle, a former well known resident of St. James, died at Sault Ste. Marie last week. Mr. Boyle was thirty-eight years of age and leaves a brother and five sisters. W. W. Boyle, Mrs. W. J. Gallagher, Mrs. Fred Sanderbergh, Mrs. Ed Pratt, of St. James, Mrs. Charles McCauley of Escanaba, Mrs. Jerome Heath of Charlevoix.

The funeral was held at the church of the Holy Cross, Beaver Islands, Sunday.

DANIEL S. PAYTON

Notice the monthly report of the County Treasurer in another column. That's D. S. Payton's way of doing business, always give the people, whose servant you are, all the information you can.

During his two terms as county treasurer, he has so systemized the work in the office, that no county in Michigan has its financial records in better shape. Charlevoix county is fortunate in having a chance to continue him in its service by his acceptance of the nomination for county clerk.

HON. FRANCIS H. DODDS of Mt. Pleasant, Republican Candidate for Representative in Congress from Eleventh Congressional District.

Hon. Francis H. Dodds of Mt. Pleasant, Republican candidate for congress from this district, is a man whose high standing, where he is best known, was demonstrated by the large vote he received in his home county at the primary. Wherever he went during his primary campaign he made a strong impression on the voters, whose universal verdict was—Dodds is a man we can trust.

This week on page 8 we advertise the sale of Mrs. E. J. Clover, three and one-half miles south of Charlevoix, on the State road, Thursday, October 15, commencing at 10 a. m. E. B. Ward, auctioneer, F. A. Butler, clerk.

Frank McWain will have a sale in Wilson township, October 10, Saturday, October 17, a street sale will be held at East Jordan. Tuesday, October 20, an Auction and Traders Exchange will be held at Charlevoix. Anybody having goods to sell see either E. B. Ward or F. A. Butler.

CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENT

To be Voted at the General Election to be Held in November.

An amendment to the constitution is to be submitted to the qualified electors on the third day of November, 1908.

The following statement sets forth the purport, nature and effect of the proposed amendment:

Section 10 of Article 14 of the constitution, as it now reads, refers only to the assessment of the property of corporations. The object of the proposed amendment is to authorize the assessment of not only the property of corporations, but also the property of partnerships, associations and individual engaged in the business of transporting passengers and freight, transporting property by express, operating any union station or depot, transmitting messages by telephone or telegraph, loaning cars, operating refrigerator cars, fast freight lines or other car lines or operating or running cars in any manner upon railroads, or engaged in any other similar business.

The amendment, if adopted, places all corporations, associations, associations, partnerships and individuals, engaged in a public service business above mentioned upon the same basis as to the assessment of their property by the state board of assessors.

A STRONG TICKET.

Was That Nominated at Republican Convention

All are Men who Have had Experience in Public Life and Made Good Records.

The Republican state convention did its work well, and completed the ticket which is headed by Governor Warner, with men whose past records show that they deserve the confidence of the people.

Flavius L. Brooke, nominee for supreme justice, is 50 years old and has lived in Detroit 24 years. He began law practice with the law firm of Col. Atkinson and ex-Chief Justice Marston. Later the firm was reorganized and he became the junior member, the other two being Col. Atkinson and Justice Carpenter. The latter becoming first a circuit judge and then a supreme court justice. Judge Brooke succeeded him on the circuit bench, where he now is serving.

Fred C. Martindale, nominee for secretary of state, is a Detroit lawyer, being a member of the law firm of Henderson & Martindale, the former the well known democratic leader. He is 43 and lived in Wayne county 41 years, having grown up on a farm in Greenfield township. Before studying law he was for 3 years in charge of the Delray public schools. He was elected to the house in 1901 and to the senate in 1903 and again in 1907. He and Supt. W. C. Martindale of the Detroit public schools, are brothers.

Albert E. Sleeper, the state treasurer nominee, is 46 and a Vermonter by birth. He came to Michigan 24 years ago and has lived at Lexington since. He is president of the State Savings bank of Lexington, and is also part owner of several other banks in the Huron-Sanitac district, besides having considerable other commercial interests. He was elected a state senator in 1901 and re-elected in 1903.

John E. Bird, who gets a third term nomination for attorney general, is 46 and was graduated at Adrian college. He was prosecuting attorney of Lenawee county from 1896 to 1899, and in 1903 succeeded Charles A. Blair as attorney general, when the latter was elected to the supreme bench. Two years ago, when re-elected, he received more votes than any other candidate on the republican state ticket.

Orramel B. Fuller, the auditor general nominee, lives at Ford River, a town of 200 in Delta county, seven miles from Escanaba, where his main business is lumbering, although he is an officer of a bank

KILLED IN AUTO ACCIDENT

William Allard of Charlevoix, The Victim

SATURDAY AT KENOSHA, WISCONSIN

Was a Member of the Modern Maccabees

Leaves a Wife and Seven Children and other Relatives here—Funeral Held today.

Charlevoix residents were shocked Saturday night when word came that William Allard, a well known resident of this city had been killed in an auto accident, at Kenosha, Wis., that afternoon.

The car was driven by William S. Howard, a prominent business man of the Wisconsin city and member of the board of education. Howard had as passengers seventeen children, the guests of the Elks lodge and was taking part in the annual auto ride which is given to the children of the city. Allard and brother were passing along a street when Allard told his brother to wait for him at the street corner where he would join him in five minutes. As Howard came along Allard stepped behind a passing wagon and Howard stopped his car to let the wagon pass. Just as the car was started again Allard stepped directly in front of the machine. His skull was fractured and his chest crushed. Howard cried like a child when he heard that the man was dead, and at once offered to surrender himself to the officials. He has not been arrested, as it was an unavoidable accident.

Mr. Allard was taken to the hospital where he regained consciousness enough to ask for the priest, and the last rites of the church were administered to him. Mr. Allard was 38 years of age and was a member of the K. O. T. M. M.

He leaves a wife and seven children in this city, besides his father and three brothers, Charles of this city Oliver of Petoskey, and Lewis of Kenosha, and three sisters, Mrs. Jessie Shaberley of Charlevoix, Mrs. Ellen Posing of Leland, and Miss Jennie of Chicago.

The body was brought here Tuesday and the funeral was held at the Catholic church today.

Teachers' Examination.

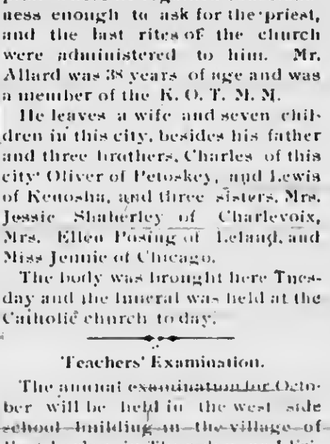
The annual examination for October will be held in the west side school building in the village of East Jordan on Thursday and Friday, October 15-16, being at 8:30 a.m. standard time.

The questions in reading will be based on "The Raven"—Poe.

Only second and third grade certificates will be issued from this examination.

Paper will be furnished applicants. Those desiring their papers transferred to other counties will write with pen, others may write with pencil.

Leave orders for engraved cards at this office.



RICHARD LEWIS

Richard Lewis for county treasurer has the right ring. Is there any other man in Charlevoix county that you would rather trust as guardian of the county funds than Dick Lewis.

His record shows that he has always been faithful to every trust reposed in him, and all his official acts are done right and he could always be found at the post of duty. If you believe that a faithful public servant should be kept cast your vote for Richard Lewis.

President Hawks, of the Detroit & Mackinac railway, says that the company is planning to operate a continuous farm along its right of way next season. It is proposed to cultivate the land each side of the tracks, planting a diversity of crops.

There is a twofold purpose in this plan One is to show travelers on the road and intending settlers what can be done with the soil, and another to avoid the numerous fires which are started along the railway by sparks from locomotives when weeds and dry grass are allowed to accumulate each season. The company will also operated a 40acre model farm at Emory Junction.

Because he served beer with the lunch at the surprise party given to his daughter, recently, William Peterson,retired saloonist,was convicted in the Cadillac circuit court of violating the local option law. After hearing the testimony Judge Chittenden stopped the trial and directed the jury to bring in the verdict of guilty. Peterson on the stand admitted that he had served beer, and the judge held that he was guilty of breaking that section of the law which forbids the selling or giving away of intoxicating liquor.

The complaint against Peterson was made by Charles Swanson, one of the guests at the party. Two days afterwards he and Petersen had an altercation, as a result of which Peterson attempted to get a warrant for assault and battery. In revenge Swanson swore out a complaint charging his ex-while host with breaking the local option law.

If Michigan university does not enroll another student this coming year the total number of students to be listed in the next catalague would be 5,510, the largest in the history of the institution. But, while the general enrollment of students was much heavier this year on account of the fine regulation; there will be quite a number enroll later in the month and the second semester will bring a large number. This makes it seem probable that Michigans enrollment will surpass that of Harvard's, now the only university having a higher attendance mark in the United States. While the present enrollment shows an increase of 283 over a corresponding time last year the decided increase in the 1908 summer school brings the figures well beyond those of last year, 5,010.

SOCIETY OF EQUITY

Held Convention at Traverse City Last Week.

The Michigan Union American Society of Equity, at its convention held at Traverse City last week elected the following officers: President, Walter E. Grellick, Traverse City; vice-president, James Howey, East Jordan; secretary, Charles Emerson, Traverse City; treasurer, L. E. Heffer, Sherwood; organizer, George Soper, Stanwood; delegates to national convention, President Greilick and M. M. Drake, Trufant; directors, W. H. Beeman, Empire; C. A. Maston, Sherwood, and M. M. Drake, Trufant.

The Michigan Union of the Ladies of the American Society of Equity held its first meeting since the union's organization, and elected these officers: President, Mrs. James Howey East Jordan; vice-president, Mrs. M. M. Drake, Trufant; secretary, Mrs. Bertha Hammond, Traverse City; treasurer, Mrs. Ella Johnson, East Jordan; directors, Mrs. Frank Kidder, East Jordan; Mrs. Martha Meyers, Evart; Mrs. Sadie Crall, East Jordan; Mrs. Alice Shepherd, East Jordan, and Mrs. U. S. Holdridge, Hersey.

Considerable bussiness was transacted, the discussion mainly concerning the prices of produce, especially potatoes.

The Michigan society cut loose from the national order last year and has since been going it alone. The principal part of the last day's session was devoted to adiscussion whether to come back into the fold or remain independent, both sides advancing many lengthy arguments. Those in favor of coming back finally won out and the election of delegates was the result.

CHAPTER XIII—Continued.

The financier's wife was already most favorably impressed with her guest, and she chatted on as if she had known Shirley for years. It was rarely that she had heard so young a woman express such common sense views, and the more she talked with her the less surprised she was that she was the author of a much discussed book. Finally, thinking that Shirley might prefer to be alone, she rose to go, bidding her make herself thoroughly at home and to ring for anything she might wish. A maid had been assigned to look exclusively after her wants, and she could have her meals served in her room or else have them with the family, as she liked. But Shirley, not caring to encounter Mr. Ryder's cold, searching stare more often than necessary, said she would prefer to take her meals alone.

Left to herself, Shirley settled down to work in earnest. Mr. Ryder had sent to her room all the material for the biography, and soon she was completely absorbed in the task of sorting and arranging letters, making extracts from records, compiling data, etc., laying the foundations for the important book she was to write. She wondered what they would call it, and she smiled as a peculiarly appropriate title flashed through her mind—"The History of a Crime." Yet she thought they could hardly intrigue on Victor Hugo. Perhaps the best title was the simplest—"The History of the Empire Trading Company." Every one would understand that it told the story of John Burkett Ryder's remarkable career from his earliest beginnings to the present time. She worked feverishly all that evening getting the material into shape, and the following day found her early at her desk. No one disturbed her, and she wrote steadily on until noon, Mrs. Ryder only once putting her head in the door to wish her good morning.

After luncheon Shirley decided that the weather was too glorious to remain indoors. Her health must not be jeopardized even to advance the interests of the Colossus, so she put on her hat and left the house to go for a walk. The air smelled sweet to her after being confined so long indoors, and she walked with a more elastic and buoyant step than she had since her return home. Turning down Fifth avenue, she entered the park at Seventy-second street, following the pathway until she came to the bend in the driveway opposite the Casino. The park was almost deserted at that hour, and there was a delightful sense of solitude and a sweet scent of new mown hay from the freshly cut lawns. She found an empty bench, well shaded by an overspreading tree, and sat down, grateful for the rest and quiet.

She wondered what Jefferson thought of her action in coming to his father's house practically in disguise and under an assumed name. She must see him at once, for in him lay her hope of obtaining possession of the letters. Certainly she felt no delicacy or compunction in asking Jefferson to do her this service. The letters belonged to her father, and they were being wrongfully withheld with the deliberate purpose of doing him an injury. She had a moral if not a legal right to recover the letters in any way that she could.

She was so deeply engrossed in her thoughts that she had not noticed a hansom cab which suddenly drew up with a jerk at the curb opposite her bench. A man jumped out. It was Jefferson.

"Hello, Shirley," he cried gayly. "Who would have expected to find you rusticating on a bench here? I pictured you grinding away at home doing literary stunts for the governor." He grinned and then added: "Come for a drive. I want to talk to you."

Shirley demurred. No; she could not spare the time. Yet, she thought to herself, why was not this a good opportunity to explain to Jefferson how he came to find her in his father's library masquerading under another name and also to ask him to secure the letters for her? While she pondered Jefferson insisted, and a few minutes later she found herself sitting beside him in the cab. They started off at a brisk pace, Shirley sitting with her head back, enjoying the strong breeze caused by the rapid motion.

"Now tell me," he said, "what does it all mean? I was so startled at seeing you in the library the other day that I almost betrayed you. How did you come to call on father?"

Briefly Shirley explained everything. She told him how Mr. Ryder had written to her asking her to call and see him and how she had eagerly seized at this last straw in the hope of helping her father. She told him about the letters, explaining how necessary they were for her father's defense and how she had discovered them. Mr. Ryder, she said, had seemed to take a fancy to her and had asked her to remain in the house as his guest while she was compiling his biography, and she had accepted the offer not so much for the amount of money involved as for the splendid opportunity it afforded her to gain possession of the letters.

"So that is the mysterious work you spoke of, to get those letters?" said Jefferson.

"Yes; that is my mission. It was a secret. I couldn't tell you. I couldn't tell any one. Only Judge Stott knows. He is aware I have found them and is hourly expecting to receive them from me. And now," she said, "I want your help."

His only answer was to grasp lighter the hand she had laid in his. She knew that she would not have to explain the nature of the service she wanted. He understood.

"Where are the letters?" he demanded.

"In the left hand drawer of your father's desk," she answered.

He was silent for a few moments, and then he said simply:

"I will get them."

The cab by this time had got as far as Claremont, and from the hill summit they had a splendid view of the broad sweep of the majestic Hudson and the towering walls of the blue palisades. The day was so beautiful and the air so invigorating that Jefferson suggested a ramble along the banks of the river. They could leave the cab at Claremont and drive back to the city later. Shirley was too grateful to him for his promise of cooperation to make any further opposition, and soon they were far away from beaten highways, down on the banks of the historic stream, picking flowers and laughing merrily like two truant children bent on a self made holiday. The place they had reached was just outside the northern boundaries of Harlem, a sylvan spot still unspoiled by the rude invasion of the flat house builder. The land, thickly wooded, sloped down sharply to the water, and the perfect quiet was broken only by the washing of the tiny surf against the river bank and the shrill notes of the birds in the trees.

Although it was late in October, the day was warm, and Shirley soon tired of climbing over bramble entangled verdure. The rich grass underfoot looked cool and inviting, and the natural slope of the ground affording an ideal resting place she sat there, with Jefferson stretched out at her feet, both watching idly the dancing waters of the broad Hudson, spangled with gleams of light, as they swept swiftly by on their journey to the sea.

"Shirley," said Jefferson suddenly, "I suppose you saw that ridiculous story about my alleged engagement to Miss Roberts. I hope you understood that it was done without my consent."

"If I did not guess it, Jeff," she answered, "your assurance would be sufficient. Besides," she added, "what right have I to object?"

"But I want you to have the right," he replied earnestly. "I'm going to stop this Roberts nonsense in a way my father hardly anticipates. I'm just waiting a chance to talk to him. I'll show him the absurdity of announcing me engaged to a girl who is about to elope with his private secretary!"

"Elope with the secretary!" exclaimed Shirley.

Jefferson told all about the letter he had found on the staircase and the Hon. Fitzroy Bagley's plans for a runaway marriage with the senator's wealthy daughter.

"It's a godsend to me," he said gleefully. "Their plan is to get married next Wednesday. I'll see my father on Tuesday. I'll put the evidence in his hands, and I don't think," he added grimly, "he'll bother me any more about Miss Roberts."

"So you're not going away now?" said Shirley, smiling down at him.

He sat up and leaned over toward her.

"I can't, Shirley, I simply can't," he replied, his voice trembling. "You are more to me than I dreamed a woman could ever be. I realize it more foolishly every day. There is no use fighting against it. Without you my work, my life, means nothing."

Shirley shook her head and averted her eyes.

"Don't let us speak of that, Jeff," she pleaded gently. "I told you I did not belong to myself while my father was in peril."

"But I must speak of it," he interrupted. "Shirley, you do yourself an injustice as well as me. You are not indifferent to me—I feel that. Then why raise this barrier between us?"

A soft light stole into the girl's eyes. Ah, it was good to feel there was some one to whom she was everything in the world!

"Don't ask me to betray my trust, Jeff," she faltered. "You know I am not indifferent to you—far from it. But I"—

He came closer until his face nearly touched hers.

"I love you—I want you," he murmured feverishly. "Give me the right to claim you before all the world as my future wife!"

Every note of his rich, manly voice, vibrating with impetuous passion, sounded in Shirley's ear like a soft caress. She closed her eyes. A strange feeling of hunger was stealing over her; a mysterious thrill passed through her whole body. The eternal, inevitable sex instinct was disturbing for the first time—a woman whose life had been singularly free from such influences, putting to flight all the calculations and resolves her cooler judgment had made. The sensuous chaird of the place—the distant splash of the water, the singing of the birds, the fragrance of the trees and grass all these symbols of the joy of life conspired to arouse the love hunger of the woman. Why, after all, should she not know happiness like other woman? She had a sacred duty to perform. It was true, but would it be less well done because she declined to stifle the natural leanings of her womanhood? Both her soul and her body called out, "Let this man love you; give yourself to him; he is worthy of your love."

Half unconsciously she listened to his ardent wooing, her eyes shut, as he spoke quickly, passionately, his breath warm upon her cheek:

"Shirley, I offer you all the devotion a man can give a woman. Say the one word that will make me the happiest or the most wretched of men. Yes or no! Only think well before you wreck

"Say you will be my wife!"

my life. I love you—I love you! I will wait for you if need be until the crack of doom. Say—say you will be my wife!"

She opened her eyes. His face was bent close over hers. Their lips almost touched.

"Yes, Jefferson," she murmured, "I do love you!"

His lips met hers in a long, passionate kiss. Her eyes closed, and an ecstatic thrill seemed to convulse her entire being. The birds in the trees overhead sang in more joyful chorus in celebration of the betrothal.

CHAPTER XIV.

It was nearly 7 o'clock when Shirley got back to Seventy-fourth street. No one saw her come in, and she went direct to her room and after a hasty dinner worked until late into the night on her book to make up for lost time. The events of the afternoon caused her considerable uneasiness. She reproached herself for her weakness and for having yielded so readily to the impulse of the moment. She had said only what was the truth when she admitted she loved Jefferson, but what right had she to dispose of her future while her father's fate was still uncertain? Her conscience troubled her, and when she came to reason it out calmly the more impossible seemed their union from every point of view. How could she become the daughter-in-law of the man who had ruined her own father? The idea was preposterous, and hard as the sacrifice would be Jefferson must be made to see it in that light. Their engagement was the greatest folly. It bound each of them when nothing but unhappiness could possibly come of it. She was sure now that she loved Jefferson. It would be hard to give him up, but there are times and circumstances when duty and principle must prevail over all other considerations, and this she felt was one of them.

The following morning she received a letter from Stott. He was delighted to hear the good news regarding her important discovery, and he urged her to lose no time in securing the letters and forwarding them to Massapequa, when he would immediately go to Washington and lay them before the senate. Documentary evidence of that conclusive nature, he went on to say, would prove of the very highest value in clearing her father's name. He added that the judge and her mother were as well as circumstances would permit and that they were not in the least worried about her protracted absence. Her Aunt Milly had already returned to Europe, and Eudoxia was still threatening to leave daily.

Shirley needed no urging. She quite realized the importance of acting quickly, but it was not easy to get at the letters. The library was usually kept locked when the great man was away, and on the few occasions when access to it was possible the lynx-eyed Mr. Bagley was always on guard. Short as had been her stay in the Ryder household Shirley already shared Jefferson's antipathy to the English secretary, whose manner grew more supercilious and overbearing as he drew nearer the date when he expected to run off with one of the richest catches of the season. He had not sought the acquaintance of his employer's idographer since her arrival and, with the exception of a rude stare, had not deigned to notice her, which attitude of haughty indifference was all the more remarkable in view of the fact that the Hon. Fitzroy usually left nothing untorned to cultivate a flirtatious intimacy with every attractive female he met. The truth was that what with Mr. Ryder's demands upon his services and his own preparations for his coming matrimonial venture, in which he had so much at stake, he had neither time nor inclination to indulge his customary amorous diversions.

Miss Roberts had called at the house several times, ostensibly to see Mrs. Ryder, and when introduced to Shirley she had condescended to give the latter a supercilious nod. Her conversation was generally of the silly, vacuous sort, concerning chiefly new dresses or bonnets, and Shirley at once read her character—frivolous, amusement loving, empty headed, irresponsible—just the kind of girl to do something foolish without weighing the conse-

THE Democratic county committees have begun the publication of a circular headed The Charlevoix County Democrat which, we understand, will be issued from now until the close of the campaign.

The Republicans of this county welcome the publication of any honest criticism of the official records of its candidates. Without saying anything against the gentlemen on the other side, who probably are as good a bunch as could be induced to make the run, the Republicans of Charlevoix county have a just feeling of pride in the personnel of their ticket.

Without an exception every man has been tried out and not found wanting and all the benefit of their experience is offered to the taxpayers of this county.

What they ask of the opposition is that if you have any fault to find or any reason to advance why your man is the superior, do so now when the people have time to investigate for themselves and not wait until your last issue as there is a strong suspicion will be done.

It is up to the voters of Charlevoix county to decide if they would rather have inexperienced servants or experienced ones.

That is the question in this county.

at Escanaba and interested in one or two other commercial enterprises in that city. His home has been in the upper peninsula since 1884. For three terms beginning in 1903 he was a member of the lower house of the legislature, and then for 3 terms was a state senator. He was speaker pro tem. of the house in 1897, and president pro tem. of the senate in 1907. Although always showing a large measure of independence of the U. P. influence that often dictate to their legislators he is very well liked by them all.

Huntley Russell, for land commissioner, has for the past four years represented the second district of Kent county in the state senate. He is 50 and grew up in Connecticut, where he was graduated at Trinity college, Hartford Before coming to Grand Rapids 22 years ago he was a civil engineer with the N. Y. & E. railroad. The late congressman C. C. Comstock of Grand Rapids, was his father-in-law. He lives in a mansion just outside the Grand Rapids corporation limits, in the direction of the Soldiers' Home, where he has large real estate interests. Also he is a director in the Commercial Savings bank of Grand Rapids and in the West Michigan fair association.

Luther L. Wright, renominated for superintendent of public instruction, is a graduate of Ripon college, Wisconsin, 52 years old, and has been superintendent of schools at Ironwood for 18 years. Gov. Bliss appointed him a member of the state board of education to fill a vacancy, and then he was elected for a full term. He was re-elected in 1901 and 1906, with four years of his term remaining, he was unanimously nominated at the state convention for superintendent public instruction and elected.

Wm. J. McKone is 42 and a graduate of the Ypsilanti Normal. For the past ten years he has been superintendent of schools at Albion. Two years ago he was elected member of the state board of education. He is a frequent contributor to educational journals, and has written a popular text book, "Michigan State and Local Government."

LABOR LEGISLATION

Republican States Have Been Liberal in Legislation for Labor.

Democratic States Have Done Little to Make Labor Conditions Better Within Their Bounds.

It is a fact that every important step for the benefit of American labor has been taken either by a Republican Congress and administration, or by the Legislature of a Republican State, of course with the consent, and sometimes by the advice, of the State executive. Democratic Congresses have been notably negligent in this respect, and Democratic States have either done nothing to make labor conditions better within their bounds, or have slowly and reluctantly followed at a distance in the trail of Republican reforms.

State Legislation.

The States have control of labor legislation within their respective bounds, federal authority being confined, so far as labor is concerned, to the District of Columbia and the territories, federal reservations and federal public works. The story of labor legislation shows that nearly all labor reforms originated in Republican States, and at the present day the Republicans are far ahead of the Democrats in the enactment and enforcement of laws for the welfare of men and women and children who work for a living. Twenty-six out of thirty Republican States have labor bureaus, and only seven out of sixteen Democratic States have similar bureaus, without which labor laws are often dead letters. Twenty-three Republican States have factory inspectors to see to the enforcement of the factory laws. Only six Democratic States have factory inspection services. Fifteen States—thirteen Republican and two Democratic—have free employment agencies. Eighteen States have laws on their statute books prohibiting labor on government works or public contracts for more than eight hours a day. Of these States sixteen are Republican and two Democratic. Four Republican States and one Democratic State have laws declaring eight hours to be a legal working day in the absence of a contract. Twenty-seven States prohibit the employment of children under fourteen years of age in factories. Of these twenty-three are Republican and four are Democratic States. Laws limiting the hours of the employment of children in factories or stores have been enacted in twenty-four Republican and thirteen Democratic States. Eighteen Republican and ten Democratic States prohibit night work by children. Twelve Republican and three Democratic States prohibit the employment of children in operating dangerous machinery or cleaning machinery in motion. Fifteen Republican and six Democratic States limit the hours of labor of women. It should be noted that twelve of the Republican States which limit women's hours of labor have factory inspectors to see that the law is obeyed, while only three of the Democratic States make such provision. In twenty-three Republican and ten Democratic States employers are required by law to provide seats for female workers.

Twelve States have enacted legislation intended to effect the extinction of the sweatshop system, with its degrading and revolting accessories. Of these twelve States ten are Republican and two Democratic. Seventeen Republican and five Democratic States have laws requiring the payment of wages weekly or fortnightly, or, in some instances, prohibiting a longer period than one month between pay days.

Trade Union Labels.

Fourteen Republican States and only one Democratic State—Nevada—have laws in force prohibiting employers from discharging persons on account of membership in labor organizations, or from compelling persons to agree not to become members of labor organizations as a condition of securing employment or continuing in their employ. Forty States have passed laws allowing trade unions to adopt labels or trade-marks to be used to designate products of the labor of their members, and prohibiting the counterfeiting of the use of such labels or trade-marks by unauthorized persons. Of these States twenty-eight are Republican and twelve are Democratic.

The foregoing presents for consideration by intelligent, patriotic labor substantial facts and figures taken from the statute books of the several States. No platitude can upset them. They prove the records of the Republican party and of the Democracy on the labor issue, and they must convince every reasonable reader that the Republican party has not only brought American labor up to its present honorable standard, but that labor can look only to the Republican party for assurance of protection and prosperity in the future.

Business Men Honest.

The business men of our community as a whole are honest and their methods are sound. The President has never said otherwise. Indeed, it is chiefly in the interest of the great body of honest business men that he has made his fight for lawful business methods.—Hon. Wm. H. Taft, to Merchants and Manufacturers' Association, Boston, Mass.

ARE MICROBES IN YOUR SCALP

Many Explanations of Baldness Have Been Advanced—The Most Correct is That of Microbes.

The term "microbe" refers to a parasitic plant or fungi also called bacteria. A microbe is so small that it can only be detected by the aid of a microscope. Some microbes are harmless, while others produce various diseases, and derive their titles through the form of their growth or because of the disease they create, which diseases are in infections or contagions.

Prof. Unna, of Hamburg, Germany, and Dr. Sabonrand, the leading dermatologist of France, discovered that a microbe caused baldness, and their theory has time and again been amply verified through research experiments caused on through the observation of eminent scientists. This microbe lodges in the Sebum, which is the natural hair oil, and if permitted to flourish, it destroys the hair follicles, and in time the pores entirely close and the scalp gradually takes a shiny appearance. When this happens there is no hope of the hair growth being revived.

Dandruff is a contagions disease which a microbe causes, and later produces itching scalp, falling hair and baldness. Dandruff is caused by the microbe disensing the sebaceous matter, which dries up and scales off. Sometimes the cuticle surrounding the hair allows the natural oil of the hair to force its way between the flakes of scarf skin direct to the hair, and the microbe being between the flakes force them apart and they scale off as dandruff.

We have a remedy which positively will remove dandruff, exterminate the microbe, promote good circulation in the the scalp, tighten and revitalize the hair roots, grow hair and cure baldness. We back up this statement on our own personal guarantee that this remedy, which is called Rexall "93" Hair Tonic, will be supplied free of all cost to the user if it fails to do as we promise. It will also restore gray and faded hair to its original rich, glossy color, if loss of color has been caused by disease, yet it is in no sense a dye. Rexall "93" Hair Tonic accomplishes these results by making every hair root, follicle and pigment gland strong and active, and by stimulating a natural flow of coloring pigment into the hair cells.

Rexall "93" Hair Tonic is entirely free from grease or sediment, is exceedingly pleasant to use, and will not grout the hair or soil the clothing or pillows.

We want everyone troubled with hair or scalp ailments, even though they are bald in spots, to try Rexall "93" Hair Tonic on our guarantee. We exact no obligations or promises, and simply ask you to give it a thorough trial, and if not satisfied, tell us, and we will refund the money paid us. A. B. Fleischer, proprietor Ivy Drug Store.

THE LION AND THE MOUSE.

By CHARLES KLEIN.

A Story of American Life Novelized From the Play by ARTHUR HORNBLOW.

quences. After chatting a few moments with Mrs. Ryder she would usually vanish, and one day after one of these mysterious disappearances Shirley happened to pass the library and caught sight of her and Mr. Bagley conversing in subdued and eager tones. It was very evident that the elopement scheme was fast maturing. If the scandal was to be prevented, Jefferson ought to see his father and acquaint him with the facts without delay. It was probable that at the same time he would make an effort to secure the letters. Meantime she must be patient. Too much hurry might spoil everything.

So the days passed. Shirley devoting almost all her time to the history she had undertaken. She saw nothing of Ryder senior, but a good deal of his wife, to whom she soon became much attached. She found her an amiable, good natured woman, entirely free from that offensive arrogance and patronizing condescension which usually mark the parvenu as distinct from the thoroughbred. Mrs. Ryder had no claims to distinguished lineage; on the contrary, she was the daughter of a country grocer when the then rising oil man married her, and of educational advantages she had had little or none. It was purely by accident that she was the wife of the richest man in the world, and, while she enjoyed the prestige her husband's prominence gave her, she never allowed it to turn her head. She gave away large sums for charitable purposes and, strange to say, when the gift came direct from her the money was never returned on the plea that it was "tainted." She shared her husband's dislike for entertaining and led practically the life of a recluse. The advent of Shirley, therefore, into her quiet and uneventful existence was as welcome as sunshine when it breaks through the clouds after days of gloom. Quite a friendship sprang up between the two women, and when tired of writing Shirley would go into Mrs. Ryder's room and chat until the financier's wife began to look forward to these little impromptu visits, so much she enjoyed them.

Nothing more had been said concerning Jefferson and Miss Roberts. The young man had not yet seen his father, but his mother knew he was only waiting an opportunity to demand an explanation of the engagement announcements. Her husband, on the other hand, desired the match more than ever, owing to the continued importunities of Senator Roberts. As usual, Mrs. Ryder confided these little domestic troubles to Shirley.

"Jefferson," she said, "is very angry. He is determined not to marry the girl, and when he and his father do meet there'll be another scene."

"What objection has your son to Miss Roberts?" inquired Shirley innocently.

"Oh, the usual reason," sighed the mother, "and I've no doubt he knows best. He's in love with another girl—a Miss Rossmore."

"Oh, yes," answered Shirley simply. "Mr. Ryder spoke of her."

Mrs. Ryder was silent, and presently she left the girl alone with her work.

The next afternoon Shirley was in her room busy writing when there came a tap at her door. Thinking it was another visit from Mrs. Ryder, she did not look up, but cried out pleasantly:

"Come in!"

John Ryder entered. He smiled cordially and, as if apologizing for the intrusion, said amiably:

"I thought I'd run up to see how you were getting along."

His coming was so unexpected that for a moment Shirley was startled, but she quickly regained her composure and asked him to take a seat. He seemed pleased to find her making such good progress, and he stopped to answer a number of questions she put to him. Shirley tried to be cordial, but when she looked well at him and noted the keen, hawk-like eyes, the cruel, vindictive lines about the mouth, the square set, relentless jaw—Wall street had gone wrong with the colossus that day, and he was still wearing his war paint—she recalled the wrong this man had done her father, and she felt how bitterly she hated him. The more her mind dwelt upon it the more exasperated she was to think she should be there, a guest under his roof, and it was only with the greatest difficulty that she remained civil.

"What is the moral of your life?" she demanded bluntly.

He was quick to note the contemptuous tone in her voice, and he gave her a keen, searching look as if he were trying to read her thoughts and fathom the reason for her very evident hostility toward him.

"What do you mean?" he asked.

"I mean what can you show as your life work? Most men whose lives are big enough in call for biographies have done something useful. They have been famous statesmen, eminent scientists, celebrated authors, great inventors. What have you done?"

The question appeared to stagger him. The audacity of any one putting such a question to a man in his own house was incredible. He squared his jaws, and his clinched fist descended heavily on the table.

"What have I done?" he cried. "I have built up the greatest fortune ever accumulated by one man. My fabulous wealth has caused my name to spread to the four corners of the earth. Is that not an achievement to relate to future generations?"

Shirley gave a little shrug of her shoulders.

"Future generations will take no interest in you or your millions," she said calmly. "Our civilization will have made such progress by that time that people will merely wonder why we, in our day, tolerated men of your class so long. Now it is different. The world is money mad. You are a person of importance in the eyes of the unthinking multitude, but it only envies you your fortune; it does not admire you personally. When you die, people will count your millions, not your good deeds."

He laughed cynically and drew up a chair near her desk. As a general thing, John Ryder never wasted words on women. He had but a poor opinion of their mentality and considered it beneath the dignity of any man to enter into serious argument with a woman. In fact, it was seldom he condescended to argue with any one. He gave orders and talked to people; he had no patience to be talked to. Yet he found himself listening with interest to this young woman who expressed herself so frankly. It was a decided novelty for him to hear the truth.

"What do I care what the world says when I'm dead?" he asked with a forced laugh.

"You do care," replied Shirley gravely. "You may school yourself to believe that you are indifferent to the good opinion of your fellow man, but right down in your heart you do care—every man does, whether he be multimillionaire or a sneak thief."

"You class the two together, I notice," he said bitterly.

"It is often a distinction without a difference," she rejoined promptly.

He remained silent for a moment or two toying nervously with a paper knife. Then, arrogantly, and as if anxious to impress her with his importance, he said:

"Most men would be satisfied if they had accomplished what I have. Do you realize that my wealth is so vast that I scarcely know myself what I am worth? What my fortune will be in another fifty years staggers the imagination. Yet I started with nothing. I made it all myself. Surely I should get credit for that."

"How did you make it?" retorted Shirley.

"In America we don't ask how a man makes his money. We ask if he has got any."

"You are mistaken," replied Shirley earnestly. "America is waking up. The conscience of the nation is being aroused. We are coming to realize that the scandals of the last few years were only the fruit of public indifference to sharp business practice. The people will soon ask the dishonest rich man where he got it, and there will have to be an accounting. What account will you be able to give?"

He bit his lip and looked at her for a moment without replying. Then, with a faint suspicion of a sneer, he said:

"You are a socialist—perhaps an anarchist!"

"Only the ignorant commit the blunder of confounding the two," she retorted. "Anarchy is a disease. Socialism is a science."

"Indeed!" he exclaimed mockingly. "I thought the terms were synonymous. The world regards them both as insane."

Herself an enthusiastic convert to the new political faith that was rising like a flood all over the world, the contemptuous tone in which this plutocrat spoke of the coming reorganization of society which was destined to destroy him and his kind spurred her on to renewed argument.

CONTINUED NEXT WEEK.

C. H. S. NOTES.

Miss Carley, of the C. H. S., is going to start a class in Physical Culture, for any of the girls who wish to take it up. The work will begin with the second semester.

Starting Tuesday, the 29th the hours of the C. H. S. were changed. The present program begins at 8:30, and the noon hour begins at 11:55. The afternoon session starts at 1:15, and closes at 3:30.

The students of the C. H. S. are pleased to learn that the Citizen's Lecture Association has made arrangements for the ensuing year. The lectures for last year were entertaining as well as instructive, and the coming course is highly recommended. The first number is the Hungarian Orchestra.

Plans are being made for a reading room in the High School building, and before long we expect to have the room nicely furnished, and ready for use. The senior girls have kindly taken charge of the reading table and books. This establishment will occupy the former English room, the English department is now down in the music room.

COUNTY NORMAL NOTES.

Clare Finucan took charge of the fifth grade room Monday morning until the East Jordon boat arrived.

Florence Sheldan spent Sunday at her home in East Jordan.

The class of '08 saved some money which they gave to Miss Hines to buy a picture for the Normal room. The picture selected was "The Bridge of Sighs." Miss Reed gave an interesting talk about the picture. She visited this scene while in Europe this summer.

Jessie Durance was appointed house-keeper for the ensuing week, with the privilege of calling on any member to assist her.

Letters have been received from Maggie Zeitler and Lula Crites.

What Happened to a Girl Alone in New York.

What happened to 17 year old Lucy Green last winter when she arrived in New York seeking work, without friends or money, is the real story of a real girl, told by the girl herself in October Woman's Home Companion.

The first day she was directed to the Margaret Louisa Home, conducted by the Young Women's Christian Association. After many waits and delays she was passed on to the chaplain of the institution. This is what took place with the chaplain:

"As gently as possible she broke the news that the Margaret Louisa Home was not the boarding place for which I was seeking. The rates were to high for any one save a girl who was already fixed in business. A single room would cost me sixty cents a day, breakfast and luncheon twenty-five cents each and dinner thirty-five cents. I was probably looking for a working girls home. I looking for a working girls home. I apologized for my mistake, saying that I had read much of the Margaret Louisa Home and supposed it was a home for working girls. And then as gently as before she explained that it was a transient hotel for self supporting women, not for—er—working girls. I saw the distinction.

"She then gave me the addresses of real homes for working girls—Mrs. Huntington's, at 140 east 40th street and 'the Co-operato' 411 west 23d street.

"'Can you suggest where I had best look for work?' I enquired hastily.

"'Work? Well this is a very bad time of the year to get into the stores. They are letting girls out. Governesses too have all been engaged.'

"By this time she was standing up. She hoped I would enroll with the association. It cost only one dollar a year, and I would enjoy the library. The Tuesday night lecture for members was especially interesting. She said good-bye, without offering to shake hands—and my relations with the Young Women's Christian Association were closed.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

THEATRICAL

The course presented to the people of Charlevoix this season is one of extraordinary merit. Experts in the Lecture Bureau business regard the Charlevoix course as the best selected that has been sold this year. The first attraction is a musical number of the very finest quality, Schildkrets Hungarian Orchestra. This is regarded as the best organization exploited in this country since the tour of the famous Hungarian Gypsy band 25 years ago. The orchestra was brought to this country during the World's Fair and was engaged in concert work in Chicago by Mrs. Potter Palmer. Later the leader, Mr. Schildkret was summoned to Washington to play at the wedding of Alice Roosevelt. The company includes excellent soloists, Mr. Schildkret himself being one of the greatest flute soloists in the world. This attraction will appear on the Lecture course at Charlevoix theatre, Friday evening, Oct. 16th. The reserved seat sale will open at the Ivy drug store Wednesday evening Oct. 14th, at 7:30 standard time. Course tickets are now on sale at all the drug stores. Do not expect anyone to call on you to sell you a ticket but purchase a ticket this week where they are on sale. The committee does not intend to make a canvass as was done last year, as it is believed that those who know a good thing when they see it need not be asked and urged to take advantage of it. It will be necessary to present your ticket when applying for a reserved seat. Course tickets $1.50. Single admission 75 cents. Reserved seats will cost 10 cents for each entertainment, whether you have a season or a single admission ticket. The committee wishes to have it very clearly understood that in no case does the admission ticket include reserved seat privilege.

The greatest pleasure one has in life is When they can say a good word for their friends. Gratiot county will present to the next state Grange the name of their Pmmona Master, C. A. VanDerventer, as a candidate for Overseer.

The editor of this paper knows Brother VanDerventer well and no better patron exists in Michigan, and the high position occupied by Gratiot as a grange county is in a large measure due to his efforts.

Marion Center Grange No. 956.

Marion Center grange No. 956 met in regular session Sept. 30, and was opened in regular form in the fourth degree. Officers were all present but master, lecturer and organist.

Three candidates were instructed in the first and second degrees.

The lecturer pro tem then furnished a good program. The attendance was good for so unfavorable an evening.

Thh grange received first premium at the county fair on canned fruit and grain and second on canned fruit.

Ironton Grange No. 707.

Ironton Grange was called to order at last meeting with twenty members present.

Three applications for membership were presented by Brother Neil Kemp.

Lecturer's hour consisted of roll call and song by the grange and reading by the worthy lecturer.

Under good of the order the secretary suggested that each member bring something to read or recite during the lecturer's hour at the next meeting.

Grange closed in regular form to meet again Oct. 20.

IMPORTANT REAL ESTATE DEAL.

Dr. J. B. Thielen Buys the Chaloupka block.

One of the most important deals in real estate in this city was consummated the present week. The Chalonpka Block was sold by J. Milo Eaton, the pioneer real estate man, to Dr. J. B. Thielen nf this city. The Chalonpka block is a handsome snlid brick block, located on Bridge strect nearly opposite the post office and was built a few years ago by August G. Chalonpka, better known as "Gus," and is only sold because the owner has other interests elsewhere which required his attention.

The Dr. is to be congratulated on acquiring so valuable a piece of real estate in the heart of the city, at a time when all things indicate a rise in values in the near future.

The consideration we understand was $7000.

CARE OF THE NECK.

Women More Liable to Sore Throat Than Men.

Women are more liable to sore throat and bronchial trouble than men. Why? Because they subject their throats to changes of temperature such as would kill any man.

A man wears his stiff linen collar from rising to bedtime, except when he sheds it on hot summer days when he gets into a negligee shirt.

A woman in the course of the day may have on a surplice necked nainsook, a turnover of linen, a fur boa, an unlined bit of lace and a low necked gown. What wonder she is subject to throat troubles!

We should not treat our necks to sudden changes from hot to cold, and we should clothe them so movement is free and ventilation good.

Equally important is it that there is no undue pressure, particularly for full blooded or apoplectic persons. Remember that the great blood vessel of the neck, the windpipe and the organs of speech are all shut up in the throat and must be treated with consideration.

A high, tight collar not only makes swallowing difficult, but also impedes the circulation of blood in the brain and therefore is dangerous.

Mr. Robinson—What a singular girl you are, Miss Jones!

Miss Jones (coyly)—Well, that can be altered, you know.

HIGHEST TYPE OF CHRISTIAN GENTLEMAN

Churchmen Who Know Judge Taft Render Him This Sincere Tribute.

The Attitude of the Republican Candidate Towards Religion and a Life Which Shows Adherance to the Best Ethics and Morals.

"Because he is the highest type of the Christian gentleman."

This is the way in which I heard the pastor of a Methodist church in southern Illinois end an argument with a layman on the train coming to Cincinnati from St. Louis, writes a staff correspondent of the St. Louis Globe-Democrat. The layman, paying due respect to the cloth of his opponent, was trying to convince him that he should not support Mr. Taft for the presidency, and instead should vote for his Democratic opponent. The churchman defended the principles of the Republican party, and, as indicated, defended the man for whom he said he expected to vote, from his personal standpoint of a churchman, "because he is the highest type of a Christian gentleman."

Bishop J. T. Hartzell of the Methodist Episcopal Church, discussing the religious beliefs of Bryan and Taft, after calling on the latter, said:

"Which of these men I shall vote for will not be decided by their religious beliefs, but what they are as men, and by the principles and policies they stand for in the administration of the government. I believe that in acting upon this view, as an American citizen, I am in harmony with the spirit and purpose of the founders of our republic, who put into the constitution that there should be 'no religious test as to qualifications to any office or public trust under the United States.' My conviction is that the future safety of the nation depends very largely upon our people heeding that constitutional prohibition. Our nation owes much in moral character, statesmanship, literature, art, and religion to those who have not been in strict harmony with some of the dogmas of the church. The days of the inquisition are past."

Remembering that Mrs. Taft is a Presbyterian, but that Miss Helen Taft was confirmed in the Episcopal Church in Washington last winter at the same time that Miss Ethel Roosevelt, daughter of the President, was confirmed, I wondered as to Mr. Taft's church association. When I made the inquiry here I was answered through the columns of the Northwestern Christian Advocate, the great Methodist publication, just as it had given answer to hundreds of inquiries from its Methodist subscribers. It said:

Man of Broad Sympathies.

"Mrs. Taft and children are Episcopalians, and the Secretary frequently accompanies them to St. John's Church, where, also, he has a pew. While Mr. Roosevelt goes to the German Reformed Church, his wife and family, who are Episcopalians, attend historic St. John's Church, where they sit only one or two pews removed from Mrs. Taft and her children. Secretary Taft spends his vacation at Murray Bay, Canada, where there is a Union Church, attended by the summer colonists of all denominations. The Secretary of War is one of the trustees of this summer colony church, where people of many faiths gather for worship."

This Methodist testimony indicated to me the broad and liberal view of Mr. Taft in religious matters. In looking through the file of this same publication—the Western Christian Advocate—I found a discussion of both nominees, in the course of which it was asserted:

"The sympathies of both Mr. Taft and Mr. Bryan are very broad, and they worship easily and naturally with any Christian denomination. Whichever man is elected, the country will have, therefore, a President of clean life, lofty principles and Christian convictions."

Opinion of Negro Clergyman.

On the same afternoon, when Bishop Hartzell called, Rev. James H. Robinson, pastor of the Baker Street African Methodist Church of Dayton, Ohio, called at the headquarters in company with W. H. Jones, one of the leading colored lawyers of the same city. Mr. Jones was proud of the fact that he is president of the Colored Taft Club, the first one to be incorporated in the United States, and Rev. Mr. Robinson admitted that he is president of the Board of Directors of the same club. As he left Mr. Taft's office I asked him for his view of the candidate, both from his standpoint as a churchman and as a leader of his race.

"I believe," he said, "Judge Taft will be elected by a safe and comfortable majority, not simply because he is a Republican, nor am I speaking because I am a Republican. But Judge Taft represents all of the ideals of the true Christian statesman."

As to the attitude of his own race, Rev. Mr. Robinson said: "We can not afford to line up with the Democratic party, which has been antagonistic to our interests always, and against the party headed by such wise and Christian statesmen as is Judge Taft. He is a man whom we know in Ohio is desirous that all men, without regard to color, be treated fairly before the courts."

Bishop Fallows' Tribute.

In introducing Mr. Taft at Toledo, Ohio, Bishop Samuel Fallows indorsed him unreservedly, and in the course of his remarks said:

"I can aver, without fear of successful contradiction, that no man ever came before the American people for the highest honor in their gift so thoroughly prepared to meet its weighty responsibilities as Mr. Taft. He is ripe in the knowledge of jurisprudence and clear and firm in judicial decisions. He has won, as an executive officer in our Oriental possessions, the plaudits of his countrymen and of admiring nations. He has satisfactorily settled in those islands of the sea some of the most delicate and difficult subjects, involving deep-seated racial and religious questions, ever brought up for adjudication. * * * He is deeply religious without a trace of bigotry, fearing God and working righteousness, as did the two Adamses and Abraham Lincoln."

Taft's Idea of Character.

In my effort to discover the qualities which led one to describe Mr. Taft as "the highest type of Christian gentleman" I learn that the candidate himself, within a month, has defined just what importance he attached to Christian character in the building of a successful career. The question had been put to him to develop his personal views, and writing in response the Republican candidate said:

"Your question suggests two others which must be answered in answering this: First, what is a Christian character, and, second, what is a successful career? First, I consider a Christian character that of one who holds as his ideal a compliance with the two commandments given by Jesus Christ, and who earnestly strives to live up to that ideal. Second, I should define a successful career to be that career which brings more real happiness to those who happen to be within the operation of the influence of the person whose character is in question.

"Coming now to answer your inquiry, I should say that a Christian character in the building of a successful career is its most important part. The longer one lives the more convinced he must become that every other incident and element of a career loses importance in comparison, and that when a man's life work is done this is what stands out, and whether the career is one of profession, business or politics, the same thing is true."

What an Old Friend Says.

Mr. Aaron A. Ferris, a prominent Cincinnati lawyer, who has known Judge Taft for thirty years, said:

"I have never had occasion to ask Judge Taft what his creed was in matters religious. I know that, when in Cincinnati, he has been quite regular in attendance at Christ Episcopal church, of which members of his family are communicants, and of which I am a vestryman. I know very well that no one in trouble or distress ever appealed to him without receiving a patient hearing and prompt and material aid, when in his power to give it. If a man's character is to be gauged by what he does, and not by mere profession; if leading a clean and upright life is to be a guide, and doing righteous deeds is to be counted, then I am confident that his neighbors and fellow-citizens who have lived with him and know him well, without regard to creed, color or party association, would say that Taft has lived and acted in every station as a Christian gentleman."

SAYS WEALTH IS DISTRIBUTED.

Chief Statistician of Census Bureau Writes on "The Assets of the United States."

The nation's wealth is not in the hands of a few, according to L. G. Powers, chief statistician of the census bureau at Washington.

Writing on "The Assets of the United States" in the September number of the American Journal of Sociology, issued recently from the University of Chicago press, Mr. Powers has the following to say of the concentration of wealth in America:

"If we start with the value of farms and other homes which are known to be owned by men of small possessions, the savings bank deposits and other known possessions of those of moderate means, and then add the lowest popular estimates of the possessions of our millionaires, we have an aggregate far in excess of the census appraisal of national wealth, and the conclusion under such circumstances is irresistible either that the census estimates are ridiculously small or the popular estimates of the wealth of our millionaires are greatly exaggerated.

"The writer does not find any evidence that would justify either the statement that our national wealth is grossly understated or that our millionaires own so large a share of that wealth as to leave the great majority without property."

Sugar Beet and Potato Land

WHERE ALFALFA GROWS

I have 15,000 acres of sugar beet and potato land in the Big Horn Valley of Wyoming, for sale on easy terms at prices ranging from $15.00 to $60.00 per acre. The terms are $8.00 per acre cash and the balance in nine equal annual installments. Raw land produces an average of fifteen tons of sugar beets per acre, irrigated an average of eighteen and one-half per cent. sugar. It is a desert country, thoroughly irrigated by completed ditches, and the farmer has absolute control of his moisture. Alfalfa land will produce an average of twenty-five tons of sugar beets to the acre when properly irrigated. Worland is the principal town on the Hanover Canal Company's land. Not an acre of this land is over three miles from the railroad, and every acre of it is within five miles of a side track or a shipping point. The sugar factory at Billings, Montana, is paying $4.50 per ton net for sugar beets delivered at Worland. The sugar company pays the freight. We are promised a factory when we have 6,000 acres in beets and the people to feed them. COME OUT AND SEE THE LAND.

This valley is also a fine potato country and produces big potatoes that are solid. The average crop is from 300 to 400 bushels per acre. The biggest crop I have ever seen in the valley was 808 bushels per acre. I have a pamphlet which I would like to send you. It has been carefully prepared and describes the country and its products accurately. Send for it and I will mail it to you promptly. Cheap rates will be made on the 8th and 20th of October, and on the 3rd and 17th of November. 41-13 J. L. LEWIS, Liggett Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

CHARLEVOIX AS A FRUIT REGION

An Industry Which has Made Good Advancement

ARTICLE IN THE CHICAGO PACKER.

State Supervision is Needed In This Section

Many Good Orchards in this Locality—Spraying is Neglected—Some of our Fruit Growers.

The Chicago Packer in a recent number had an account of the fruit industry of this county, which is of interest as the growing of fruit is becoming one of the leading sources of revenue to our farmers.

This place is one of the many resorts of northern Michigan and a very successful season they have had here, estimating over 7000 visitors this summer. Charlevoix is somewhat of a headquarters or center, the Chicago boats coming in direct and there is water connection with Boyne City, Petoskey, East Jordan and numerous other places of lesser note.

In season this is one of the greatest fruit consuming places for its size in the country and large quantities of peaches, pears, grapes and plums are shipped in.

The fruit raising business does not have proper protection because where one grower will take care of his orchard some neighbors are so careless that it is almost criminal and makes the man that wants to have good returns extra work.

The state department has some good regulations but expects that each county will see that spraying is done. Past history of the state of Michigan in the dairy line should show what can be done. This state ranked prior to 1900, nearly at the bottom of the list as a dairy state, when a dairy commission was appointed and got competent inspectors and they made the farmers adopt clean, approved methods and as a consequence this state ranks up to the best in the dairy industry. The Michigan fruit industry is a great deal more valuable to the state than any other in point of dollars and has a larger future to it by a long way. This section is more in need of state supervision than any other place The Packer man has yet visited. The state sends its institute speakers here every year. They should save that money and send inspectors and do more lasting good by going right out into the district and explain and inspect and demonstrate to the grower what should be done and than he should have the power to make him do what is required, the same as they have done in the dairy business.

The orchard of Wm. Smith at Horton's Bay, a man who has the reputation of looking after his orchard and one of the very few who sprays, had a good crop last year and has a good one this year. Yet this was a dry year and as well as some call on off year, but Mr. Smith only grows fruit, he does no farming.

There were 45,000 barrels of apples shipped from Charlevoix last year. This year they will hardly bring $15,000, is that much, and buyers have been paying $1.50 per barrel for all kinds of apples. Nearly 100 cars of potatoes were shipped last year. The long dry spell has affected the potatoes here quite seriously and while there is an increased acreage, over last year dealers expect to ship only about 60 to 75 cars this season. The buyers have been paying 45 to 50c a bushel and do not even care to buy at those prices.

Bert Wilbur is in business here, having bought out that branch of the business from L. S. See. Last year was his first and he handled over $15,000 worth of apples. He has had several cars of peaches this year and sold them well to local merchants.

Orlowski & Son also ship apples and potatoes in large lots. Most of the following have small or growing orchards and all have potatoes in fair quantities and are near here on R. F. D.: Frank Suethaus, Fred Suethaus, H. H. Smith, Wm. McNally, Loran Hamilin, W. C. Arnold, Henry Hamilin, Leroy Hamilton, Titus Yettaws, Wm. P. Sears, Oscar Tillottson sr., Dean Scroggie, Morris Chew, A. B. Chew, Louis Scott, Mark Donlay, John Stoneham and George Bauks.

Frank and Peter Kane have nice cherry orchards coming on. Mrs. Hilton has apples only. Wm. Withers has besides apples and potatoes large dairy interests on his farm. Henry Newman has been fairly successful with grapes. Henry Wagner, near Norwood, is an earnest fruit grower and is having some success. Mr. Price has an orchard near Boyne City. Con Snider, near Horton's Bay, has a good orchard.

Richard S. Shapton has been very successful as a market gardner here. Over towards Norwood the following have potatoes and orchards: Henry and Alfred Van Dusen, Frank Brown, Wm. Sutton, Henry Porter, Geo. Dennis, Albert and Arthur Beattie, Joe Clark, Wm. Monty, H. Grinnell, Jas. Willis, Ed Clover, Wm. Gregory, Wm. Graham, George Yeager, L. Bollhouse, Peter Block.

Unless there is more spraying done around here than has been done there will be very little fruit next year as the orchards are in very poor shape and the owners have no right to expect anything else.

KNIGHTS OF PYTHIAS

Held State Convention at Kalamazoo Last Week.

W. E. Hampton Re-elected G. K. R. S.—Next Year at Lansing.

The thirty-fifth annual convention of the Knights of Pythias was held at Kalamazoo, last week, 250 delegates being in attendance.

Charles D. Neahr, grand master of the exchequer, presented the following report:

Receipts—Balance, July 1, $5370.94; receipts from W. E. Hampton, grand keeper of records and seals, $11,800; interest on deposits, $138.49; total $17,309. 43.

Disbursements—Pay roll session, Bay City, $3,058.04; general expenses for the year, $8,878.36; total expenses $11,936.40.

Cash balance on hand June 30, 1908, $5,373.03.

The only contest in the election of officers was over the position of outer guard. The nominations were William Hooper, Ishpeming; E. E. Vandewalker, Lansing; Ira E. Randall, Houghton, and Charles D. Moses of Houghton. Vandewalker won out after a spirited contest.

S. G. Carlton of Sault Ste. Marie, became past grand chancellor and officers elected were: Grand Chancellor, Ira G. Curry, Owosso; grand vice chancellor, Fred A. Wetmore, Cadillac; prelate, Franz C. Kuhn, Mt. Clemens; grand keeper of records and seals, Will E. Hampton, Charlevoix; grand master of the exchequer, Charles Neahr, Grand Rapids; grand master at arms, Victor E. Hawkins, Jonesville; grand inner guard, Charles W. Nichols, Lansing; grand outer guard, H. E. Vandewalker, Lansing; grand trustee, Charles W. Smith, Lapeer.

Lansing won out over Detroit for the next meeting of the grand lodge.

ROOSEVELT HOT SHOT.

On Haskell.

Governor Haskell's utter unfitness for any public position of trust or for association with any man anxious to make an appeal on a moral issue to the American people has been abundantly shown.

As an American citizen who prizes his Americanism and citizenship far above any question of partisanship, I regard it as a scandal and disgrace that Governor Haskell should be connected with the management of a national campaign.

To Bryan.

In my judgment the measures you advocate would be wholly ineffective in curing an evil, and so far as they had any effect at all would merely throw the entire business of the country into hopeless and utter confusion.

I put Mr. Taft's deeds against your words. I ask that Mr. Taft be judged by all his deeds, for he wishes none of them forgotten. I ask that you be judged both by the words you wish remembered and by the words that seemingly you and your party now desire to have forgotten.

AGRICULTURAL COLLEGE

Courier Correspondent Writes us of Fall Contests

Grand Rush, Foot-ball Contest, Canvas Pull, Tug-of-war and Banner Guarding.

The rush here which is similar to the spring contests at the University of Michigan consists of one grand rush which is over as soon as the flag is captured, or rather, when it is torn down from its position on a pole. In the spring are held several contests between the the classes such as a tug of war, relay race, push ball contest and bag fight. Here the fall rush is divided up into several events instead of terminating at the capture of the flag or banner.

The first event on the program was a foot-ball contest with all the members of both classes as participants. Four foot-balls were held by upper classmen in the middle of the field with the classes lined up five yards on either side. At a given signal the balls were thrown up in the air and both classes rushed for them. The object was to advance the balls as far on each others territory as possible. Three trials of two minutes each were allowed and during that time both classes were mixed in a wriggling, struggling mass, neither side gaining a great deal until a sophomore succeeded in getting away from the bunch made a sprint for the Freshmans goal carrying one of the balls. He was downed about five yards from the goal-line, where the ball remained for the rest of the play. The other three balls remained in the middle of the crowds formed around them and were pushed a short distance upon the sophomore territory but at the closing of the last trial, on account of the last ball which was so far advanced toward the freshmen's goal the average gain was in favor of the sophomores.

The second event was a canvas pull. A piece of canvas about five feet long and about six inches wide was rolled up like a rope. Fifteen heavy men of each class were chose and five of each of the fifteen were given a place to hold on to the canvas with both hands. The other ten chosen members stood five yards from the canvas on either side. The object of the contest was to see which class would have the most hands on the canvas in two minutes after the contest started. The signal was given and in jumped the ten men of each side who were held in reserve. In a second thirty men were all tangled up so it was impossible to tell one from the other. Those who had a hold on the canvas tried to keep their hold while those who did not tried to tear those of the other side, who did have hold away that they might take their place. This contest took place twice, the freshmen winning both times.

The third contest was a tug of war between twenty-five members of each class. The contestants stood on opposite sides of Cedar River so of course the object was to pull each other in the river. There was a slight advantage of the sides on which to pull and the Sophomores got the best side. Whether it was that or their superiority I will not attempt to say but the fact is the freshmen went into the river.

The last contest was the guarding of a banner tied to a tree about eight feet from the ground, by the freshmen while the sophomores were given ten minutes in which to capture the banner. The tree used was a tall elm around which at varying distances from it stood several other trees of large proportions and of various kinds. From a heavy leafed maple which stood about sixty feet from the elm a large wire was seen attached but for what reason no one seemed to know. The signal for the contest was given and about two minutes fruitless struggle on the part of the sophomores to gain the banner had passed when, to the surprise of everyone, a sophomore shot from the top-most branches, the large maple and by the aid of a pulley arrangement attached to the wire, he sailed through the air and landed on the elm. He then slid down the tree to the banner and although he did not succeed in getting it he drew so much attention and effort to prevent him from succeeding that the other members of his class found it an easy matter to break through the freshmen ranks and lower the coveted banner.

This ends or is supposed to end class contests of all kind until some time next spring.

Every voter will be required to re-register the Saturday previous to election in order to vote at the November term.

GRANGE PLOWING MATCH

Will be Held on the Farm of James Cook, October 22.

The fourteenth annual grange plowing match will be held on the farm of James Cook, north of Marion Grange Hall, Thursday, October 22. Prizes are offered for the different classes the same as in previous years.

Charlevoix business men and the politicians have contributed liberally and over $133 in merchandise and money is offered. The event will be called off under the auspices of Marion Center Grange and will conclude with a dance in the evening.

Mr. Eagleton left for the scene of the accident Sunday night and at last reports while he was in a very serious conditions he was improving.

BAD FIRE AT BOYNE

The W. H. White Company's Big Mill Destroyed

Loss over One Hundred Thousand—Insurance about Half.

One of the most disastrous fires in the history of Boyne City broke out about 2:30 o'clock Friday afternoon, at the W. H. White Co.'s mill No. 1. The origin of the fire was a friction pulley, and so fast did it spread that the employes had to flee for their lives.

A general alarm was immediately turned in and the city department, assisted by the different industrial departments about the city, went to work heroically to check the progress of the flames. The fire started on the ground floor of the saw mill near the gang saw, and in five minutes the building was a mass of flames and falling in.

The big saw mill had recently undergone extensive repairs, a new gang saw, costing in the neighborhood of $8000, is a tangled mass of ruins. The entire machinery is a total loss, including the three stationary engines, which are ruined. The loss will exceed $100,000. The plant was insured for $50,000.

FRIDAY, OCTOBER 16

Occurs the First Number of the Citizens' Lecture Association.

The Committee Have Worked Hard to Secure the Best Talent Obtainable.

Next Friday night will occur the first number of the lecture course for the season of 1908-9, the opening number being the Schildkret Hungarian Orchestra, which must not be confused with the Royal Hungarians who opened the course last year.

Schildkret's Orchestra came to this country during the World's Fair year and have been in great demand ever since where musical talent of the highest order was called for, such as the entertainment of Prince Henry of Germany and the wedding of Alice Roosevelt.

The citizen's committee having the securing of the course this winter, have been untiring in their efforts to give to the citizens of Charlevoix the very best entertainments that could be obtained and all pronounce it the very best that could be secured.

If you appreciate their efforts to bring to this city a high class series of entertainments, secure a season ticket now.

PIANO INSTRUCTION

After October 1st, I shall be at home to any one desiring piano instruction. I am a graduate of the Muskegon St. Mary's school of music and also studied with Prof. York, of Detroit, all last winter.

INCREASE IN WHEAT YIELD

According to State Crop Report for October.

WHEAT.

The final estimated yield of wheat in the state, southern and central counties is 18 and in the northern counties 16 bushels per acre. The quality is excellent and owing to favorable weather during harvest the crop was secured in good condition. The estimated total yield for the state is approximately 12,000,000 bushels, which is 1,500,000 more than the estimate for 1907. The per cent of acreage sown this fall compared with the average for past five years in the southern counties is 87, in the central counties 70, in the northern counties 83 and in the State 84.

The average date of sowing wheat in the state is September 13th, and in the northern counties the 16th.

RYE.

The per cent of acreage sown this fall compared with the average for the past five years in the state and southern counties is 85, and in the northern counties 88. The estimated acreage of rye harvested is 351,500 and estimated yield 5,272,500 bushels.

BARLEY.

The estimated average yield per acre in bushels, in the state, southern and northern counties is 22. The estimated acreage harvested is 74,995 and estimated yield 1,592,894 bushels.

OATS.

The estimated average yield per acre in bushels, in the State and southern counties is 29 and in the northern counties 27. The estimated acreage harvested is 1,302,152 and estimated yield 40,586,850 bushels.

CORN.

The estimated average yield per acre in bushels, in the State and southern counties is 30, in the northern counties 29. The estimated acreage harvested is 1,658,850 and estimated yield 49,765,500 bushels.

W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Conducted by the local W. C. T. U.

Woman's Triumph in Prohibition.

Harper's Bazaar closes an editorial citing recent prohibition victories with the following:

Back of every effect lies its cause. No explanation has yet been given of this series of prohibition victories that does not bear out the French saying, "Look out for the women." The Nashville Tennessean cartoon of the prohibition wave advancing sky high, with the W. C. T. U. ruling on its top and the saloon keeper fleeing for his life before it, represents the truth pretty well. In 1873 the woman's crusade against against liquor saloons began in Ohio. In 1874, at Cleveland, the W. C. T. U. was organized. It commenced to work on the education of public sentiment, and it has never stopped since. Thirty years is the period of the passing of one generation. The children educated by these earnest women pioneers, mothers in the home, teachers in the schools and Sunday schools, have grown up, and grown up rooted and grounded in the faith. The literature that the women have distributed for temperance has done its work. The weekly meeting, the state gatherings, the affiliation with the clergy and with prominent reformers, the ceaseless pressure on the schools through temperance text books, have all born fruit. The story of the prohibition victory in Georgia traces back step by step, to the door of its women, who fought, prayed, organized, worked and won. They began by a day of fasting and prayer that waked up the state. They had prayer meetings at six in the morning before the legislature began its sessions. Like all public sentiment, this new temperance impulse does not always recognize its own beginnings. It is not the W. C. T. U. as an organization or the Prohibition party as a political entity that is in the mind of the voter nowadays. Railroads and great employers are not thinking of feminine ideas when they post notices that only total abstainers shall work for them. The great fraternal societies are not turning liquor sellers out of their membership to consciously please our women. Yet that these things are being done, that metropolitan newspapers are urging local option that economics have joined forces with morals in the industrial world, means, after all, that those whose business it is, in the home and community, to create public sentiment, have created it, and left it to work out in its own way. The editor of the Georgian who wrote to his mother, the day the prohibition bill passed—"Mother it was you who won today!" went to the heart of the matter, through economics, politics, and all.

Can't Disinfect the Farmers.

The failure of Bryan's desperate attempts to curry favor with the farmers is illustrated by the manner in which he was received at Crookston, Minn. According to Congressman Halvor Steenson the event went off as follows:

"Bryan's speech at Crookston was a great disappointment. He actually lost ground there for Democracy. Thousands of people were there to hear him, and waited till ten o'clock in the evening before he appeared. The address was a narrow appeal to farmers, a harangue, trying to prejudice them against Republicanism. It didn't take at all. Only once was there the slightest symptom of applause. He spoke to a silent, disappointed audience."

Campaign of Education.

In the great battle of 1896 the Republican party again stood for the maintenance of the integrity of the nation. The fight was against odds produced by a great industrial depression, and against the most sophistical arguments. The Republican party maintained a campaign of education among the wage-earners and the farmers, which ultimately led to the complete defeat of this second financial heresy which has threatened the integrity of our business structure.—Hon. Wm. H. Taft, at Kansas City, Mo.

CHAPTER XIV—Continued.

"I imagine," she said sarcastically, "that you would hardly approve any social reform which threatened to interfere with your own business methods. But, no matter how you disapprove of socialism on general principles, as a leader of the capitalist class you should understand what socialism is and not confuse one of the most important movements in modern world history with the crazy theories of irresponsible cranks. The anarchists are the natural enemies of the entire human family and would destroy it were their dangerous doctrines permitted to prevail. The socialists, on the contrary, are seeking to save mankind from the degradation, the crime and the folly into which such men as you have driven it."

She spoke impetuously, with the inspired exaltation of a prophet delivering a message to the people. Ryder listened, concealing his impatience with uneasy little coughs.

"Yes," she went on, "I am a socialist, and I am proud of it. The whole world is slowly drifting toward socialism as the only remedy for the actual intolerable conditions. It may not come in our time, but it will come as surely as the sun will rise and set tomorrow. Has not the flag of socialism waved recently from the White House? Has not a president of the United States declared that the state must eventually curb the great fortunes? What is that but socialism?"

"True," retorted Ryder grimly, "and that little speech intended for the benefit of the gallery will cost him the nomination at the next presidential election. We don't want in the White House a president who stirs up class hatred. Our rich men have a right to what is their own. That is guaranteed them by the constitution."

"Is it their own?" interrupted Shirley.

Ryder ignored the insinuation and proceeded:

"What of our boasted free institutions if a man is to be restricted in what he may and may not do? If I am clever enough to accumulate millions, who can stop me?"

"The people will stop you," said Shirley calmly. "It is only a question of time. Their patience is almost exhausted. Put your ear to the ground and listen to the distant rumbling of the tempest which, sooner or later, will be unchained in this land, provoked by the iniquitous practices of organized capital. The people have had enough of the extortions of the trusts. One day they will rise in their wrath and seize by the throat this knavish plutocracy which, confident in the power of its wealth to prolong long immunity and reckless of its danger, persists in robbing the public daily. But retribution is at hand. The growing discontent of the proletariat, the ever-increasing strikes and labor disputes of all kinds, the clamor against the railroads and the trusts, the evidence of collusion between both—all this is the writing on the wall. The capitalistic system is doomed; socialism will succeed it."

"What is socialism?" he demanded scornfully. "What will it give the public that it has not got already?"

Shirley, who never neglected an opportunity to make a convert, no matter how hardened he might be, picked up a little pamphlet printed for propaganda purposes which she had that morning received by mail.

"Here," she said, "is one of the best and clearest definitions of socialism I have ever read:

"Socialism is common ownership of natural resources and public utilities and the common operation of all industries for the general good. Socialism is opposed to monopoly, that is, to private ownership of land and the instruments of labor, which is indirect ownership of men; to the wages system, by which labor is legally robbed of a large part of the product of labor; to competition with its enormous waste of effort and its opportunities for the spoliation of the weak by the strong. Socialism is industrial democracy. It is the government of the people, by the people and for the people, not in the present restricted sense, but as regards all the common interests of men. Socialism is opposed to oligarchy and monarchy, and therefore to the tyrannies of business cliques and money kings. Socialism is for freedom, not only from the fear of force, but from the fear of want. Socialism proposes real liberty, not merely the right to vote, but the liberty to live for something more than meat and drink.

"Socialism is righteousness in the relations of men. It is based on the fundamentals of religion, the Fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of men. It seeks through association and equality to realize fraternity. Socialism will destroy the motives which make for cheap manufacturers, poor workmanship and adulterations; it will secure the real utility of things. Use, not exchange, will be the object of labor. Things will be made to serve, not to sell. Socialism will banish war, for private ownership is back of strife between men. Socialism will purify politics, for private capitalism is the great source of political corruption. Socialism will make for education, invention and discovery; it will stimulate the moral development of men. Crime will have lost most of its motive, and pauperism will have no excuse. That," said Shirley as she concluded, "is socialism!"

Ryder shrugged his shoulders and rose to go.

"Delightful," he said ironically, "but in my judgment wholly utopian and impracticable. It's nothing but a gigantic pipe dream. It won't come in this generation, nor in ten generations, if, indeed, it is ever taken seriously by a majority big enough to put its theories to the test. Socialism does not take into account two great factors that move the world—men's passions and human ambition. If you eliminate ambition you remove the strongest incentive to individual effort. From your own account a socialistic world would be a dreadfully tame place to live in—everybody depressingly good, without any of the feverish turmoil of life as we know it. Such a world would not appeal to me at all. I love the fray, the daily battle of gain and loss, the excitement of making or losing millions. That is my life!"

"Yet what good is your money to you?" insisted Shirley. "You are able to spend only an infinitesimal part of it. You cannot even give it away, for nobody will have any of it."

"Money!" he hissed rather than spoke. "I hate money. It means nothing to me. I have so much that I have lost all idea of its value. I go on accumulating it for only one purpose. It buys power. I love power—that is my passion, my ambition, to rule the world with my gold. Do you know," he went on, leaning over the desk in a dramatic attitude, "that if I chose I could start a panic in Wall street tomorrow that would shake to their foundations every financial institution in the country? Do you know that I practically control the congress of the United States and that no legislative measure becomes law unless it has my approval?"

"The public has long suspected as much," replied Shirley. "That is why you are looked upon as a menace to the stability and honesty of our political and commercial life."

An angry answer rose to his lips, when the door opened and Mrs. Ryder entered.

"I've been looking for you, John," she said peevishly. "Mr. Bagley told me you were somewhere in the house. Senator Roberts is downstairs."

"He's come about Jefferson and his daughter, I suppose," muttered Ryder. "Well, I'll see him. Where is he?"

"In the library. Kate came with him. She's in my room."

They left Shirley to her writing, and when he had closed the door the financier turned to his wife and said impatiently:

"Now, what are we going to do about Jefferson and Kate? The senator insists on the matter of their marriage being settled one way or another. Where is Jefferson?"

"He came in about half an hour ago. He was upstairs to see me, and I thought he was looking for you," answered the wife.

"Well," replied Ryder determinedly, "he and I have got to understand each other. This can't go on. It shan't."

Mrs. Ryder put her hand on his arm and said pleadingly:

"Don't be impatient with the boy, John. Remember he is all we have. He is so unhappy. He wants to please us, but"—

"But he insists on pleasing himself," said Ryder completing the sentence.

"I'm afraid, John, that his liking for that Miss Rossmore is more serious than you realize"—

The financier stamped his foot and replied angrily:

"Rossmore! That name seems to confront me at every turn—for years the father, now the daughter! I'm sorry, my dear," he went on more calmly, "that you seem inclined to listen to Jefferson. It only encourages him in his attitude toward me. Kate would make him an excellent wife, while what do we know about the other woman? Are you willing to sacrifice your son's future to a mere boyish whim?"

Mrs. Ryder sighed.

"It's very hard," she said, "for a mother to know what to advise. Miss Green says"—

"What!" exclaimed her husband, "you have consulted Miss Green on the subject?"

"Yes," answered his wife. "I don't know how I came to tell her, but I did. I seem to tell her everything. I find her such a comfort, John. I haven't had an attack of nerves since that girl has been in the house."

"She is certainly a superior woman," admitted Ryder. "I wish she'd ward that Rossmore girl off. I wish she"—He stopped abruptly as if not venturing to give expression to his thoughts, even to his wife. Then he said: "If she were Kate Roberts she wouldn't let Jeff slip through her fingers."

"I have often wished," went on Mrs. Ryder, "that Kate were more like Shirley Green. I don't think we would have any difficulty with Jeff then."

"Kate is the daughter of Senator Roberts, and if this marriage is broken off in any way without the senator's consent, he is in a position to injure my interests materially. If you see Jefferson, send him to me in the library. I'll go and keep Roberts in good humor until he comes."

He went downstairs, and Mrs. Ryder proceeded to her apartments, where she found Jefferson chatting with Kate. She at once delivered Ryder senior's message.

"Jeff, your father wants to see you in the library."

"Yes; I want to see him," answered the young man grimly, and after a few moments' more badinage with Kate he left the room.

It was not a mere coincidence that had brought Senator Roberts and his daughter and the financier's son all together under the Ryder roof at the same time. It was part of Jefferson's well prepared plan to expose the rascality of his father's secretary and at the same time rid himself of the embarrassing entanglement with Kate Roberts. If the senator were confronted, publicly with the fact that his daughter, while keeping up the fiction of being engaged to Ryder junior, was really preparing to run off with the Hon. Fitzroy Bagley, he would have no alternative but to retire gracefully under fire and relinquish all idea of a marriage alliance with the house of Ryder. The critical moment had arrived. Tomorrow, Wednesday, was the day fixed for the elopement. The secretary's little game had gone far enough. The time had come for action. So Jefferson had written to Senator Roberts, who was in Washington, asking him if it would be convenient for him to come at once to New York and meet himself and his father on a matter of importance. The senator naturally jumped to the conclusion that Jefferson and Ryder had reached an amicable understanding, and he immediately hurried to New York and, with his daughter, came round to Seventy-fourth street.

When Ryder senior entered the library, Senator Roberts was striding nervously up and down the room. This, he felt, was an important day. The ambition of his life seemed on the point of being attained.

"Hello, Roberts," was Ryder's cheerful greeting. "What's brought you from Washington at a critical time like this? The Rossmore impeachment needs every friend we have."

"Just as if you didn't know," smiled the senator uneasily, "that I am here by appointment to meet you and your son!"

"To meet me and my son?" echoed Ryder, astonished.

The senator, perplexed and beginning to feel real alarm, showed the financier Jefferson's letter. Ryder read it, and he looked pleased.

"That's all right," he said, "if the lad asked you to meet us here it can mean only one thing—that at last he has made up his mind to this marriage."

"That's what I thought," replied the senator, breathing more freely. "I was sorry to leave Washington at such a time, but I'm a father, and Kate is more to me than the Rossmore impeachment. Besides, to see her married to your son Jefferson is one of the dearest wishes of my life."

"You can rest easy," said Ryder. "That is practically settled. Jefferson's sending for you proves that he is now ready to meet my wishes. He'll be here any minute. How is the Rossmore case progressing?"

"Not so well as it might," growled the senator. "There's a lot of maudlin sympathy for the judge. He's a pretty sick man by all accounts, and the newspapers seem to be taking his part. One or two of the western senators are talking corporate influence and trust legislation, but when it comes to a vote the matter will be settled on party lines."

"That means that Judge Rossmore will be removed?" demanded Ryder sternly.

"Yes, with five votes to spare," answered the senator.

"That's not enough," insisted Ryder. "There must be at least twenty. Let there be no blunders, Roberts. The man is a menace to all the big commercial interests. This thing must go through."

The door opened, and Jefferson appeared. On seeing the senator talking with his father, he hesitated on the threshold.

"Come in, Jeff," said his father pleasantly. "You expected to see Senator Roberts, didn't you?"

"Yes, sir. How do you do, senator?" said the young man, advancing into the room.

"I got your letter, my boy, and here I am," said the senator, smiling affably. "I suppose we can guess what the business is, eh?"

"That he's going to marry Kate, of course," chimed in Ryder senior. "Jeff, my lad, I'm glad you are beginning to see my way of looking at things. You're doing more to please me lately, and I appreciate it. You stayed at home when I asked you to, and now you've made up your mind regarding this marriage."

Jefferson let his father finish his speech, and then he said calmly:

"I think there must be some misapprehension as to the reason for my summoning Senator Roberts to New York. It had nothing to do with my marrying Miss Roberts, but to prevent her marriage with some one else."

"What!" exclaimed Ryder senior.

"Marriage with some one else?" echoed the senator. He thought he had not heard aright, yet at the same time he had grave misgivings. "What do you mean, sir?"

Taking from his pocket a copy of the letter he had picked up on the staircase, Jefferson held it out to the girl's father.

"Your daughter is preparing to run away with my father's secretary. Tomorrow would have been too late. That is why I summoned you. Read this."

The senator took the letter and as he read his face grew ashen and his hand trembled violently. At one blow all his ambitious projects for his daughter had been swept away. The inconsiderate act of a silly, thoughtless girl had spoiled the carefully laid plans of a lifetime. The only consolation which

WHERE ALFALFA GROWS

I have 30,000 acres of sugar beet and potato land in the Big Horn Valley of Wyoming, for sale on easy terms at prices ranging from $15.00 to $65.00 per acre. The terms are $4.00 per acre cash and the balance in three equal annual installments. Raw land produces an average of fifteen tons of sugar beets per acre, carrying an average of eighteen and one-half per cent sugar. It is a desert county, thoroughly irrigated by completed ditches, and the farmer has absolute control of his moisture. Alfalfa land will produce an average of twenty-five tons of sugar beets to the acre when properly irrigated. Worland is the principal town on the Hanover Canal Company's land. Not an acre of this land is over three miles from the railroad, and every acre of it is within five miles of a siding or a shipping point. The sugar factory at Billings, Montana, is paying $4.50 per ton net for sugar beets delivered at Worland. The sugar company pays the freight. We are promised a factory where we have 6,000 acres in beets and the people to feed them. "HOME BUILT AND SEE THE CAN."

This valley is also a fine potato country and produces big potatoes that are solid. The average crop is from 300 to 400 bushels per acre. The biggest crop I have ever seen in this valley was 800 bushels to the acre. I have a pamphlet which I would like to send you. It has been carefully prepared and describes the country and its products accurately. Send for it and I will mail it to you promptly. Cheap rates will be made on the 8th and 20th of October, and on the 3rd and 17th of November. 4t-3 J. L. LEWIS, Liggett Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

"THE republicans of the state have decided the matter and I will accept their decision and do all I can to assist in the election of their choice." This was the statement made by Fred M. Warner when he thought that another than himself had been elected as the republican candidate for governor. He was disappointed then, but he did not fail to keep in mind what was due from him as a republican and as one who had been honored by his party, and there are thousands of republicans all over Michigan who did not favor Fred Warner at the primaries who will loyally support him for governor because of his prompt and manly acceptance of what seemed to him defeat and disappointment. It is not hard to do the right thing and to say the right thing when all one's purposes are favored, but the acceptance of defeat in a generous way requires a different sort of material. Nothing that could have been done or said by Governor Warner would have so recommended him to the republicans of Michigan as his statement of good will and favor for his competitor when he thought that competitor and not himself would be the republican candidate for governor.

IN connection with the recount that has been in progress at Lansing during the past two or three weeks one fact at least will be noted with satisfaction by republicans everywhere, and that is that there was no evidence of intentional fraud presented. Carelessness on the part of election inspectors was made manifest, and loss of votes to candidates was occasioned through failure to observe the technical requirements of the primary election law, but not a single ballot suggested effort on the part of any election official to prevent the purpose of the voter from having its full force. No cloud rests on the title of a single candidate on the republican state ticket. The selections were fairly and squarely made, and whatever divisions before existed the present duty of all republicans to stand by the result reached through participation of over 200,000 members of their party is plain and unquestioned. Not a thing has been disclosed through the election investigation which does not add to reasons why cordial and complete support should be given to their state ticket by the republicans of Michigan.

TWO of the candidates on the Republican ticket are candidates for a second term—Register Emery and Sheriff McWain. Both have been faithful and efficient public servants, and according to all precedents and rules of fairness and justice are entitled to and will be given a re-election, not only because they should have it, but because the best interests of the county demand that the taxpayers should have the benefit of their two years experience.

COUNTY NORMAL NOTES.

Susie Sheldon spent Sunday at her home in East Jordan.

Cecil Barkley has been appointed housekeeper for this week.

The class is planning to give a reception Monday evening, to the supervisors, teachers and school board.

Thursday afternoon some of the class, with the help of pupils from the training room, weeded the school garden.

Grace Meggison, a member of last years class, visited the normal Monday afternoon. She is teaching near Central Lake but at present is having a vacation of two weeks.

During the week Miss Hines received interesting letters from former normal students, Alma Frances who is attending the Chicago Kindergarten college, Mayme Scroggie who is teaching at Bay Shore, and Julia Bancroft who is teaching near Vanderbilt. All are enjoying their work. She also had a short talk with Pleasant Geiken who is teaching at Advance. Altho Miss Geiken's work is quite different from last year she likes it and has given the normal class a very cordial invitation to visit her.

A FAMOUS BEAUTY SPECIALIST

Gives Advice to Women Lacking in Energy and Vitality.

Thousands of women are using toilet preparations unsuccessfully. Cosmetics fail to improve their thick, muddy complexions or to banish the pimples, blackheads and crow's feet.

No wonder. Their trouble lies far deeper than the skin. They have bad blood, and bad blood in 90 per cent of the cases arises from inflamation of the mucous membrane. Their blood is filled with poison which is certain to break to break out in unsightly humors and blotches—while pale, drawn faces, deep circled eyes, stooping shoulders and weak backs complete the story of suffering and dispair.

Inflamation of the mucous membrane is catarrh. Banish catarrh and complexions will clear as if by magic, pain vanish, eyes will brighten, faces become plump and shoulders erect. Perfect beauty goes only with perfect health, and perfect health for women can only be obtained through Rexall Muco-tone the one positive and permanent and permanent cure for catarrh.

Mme. Swift, 44 W. 26th st., New York city, the most famous beauty specialist in the world and an accepted authority on all relating thereto, has this to say of Muco-Tone:

"I can strongly endorse the claims made for Rexall Muco-tone as a cure for systemic catarrh. Its tonic effects are remarkable. It builds up the strength and restores vitality. If women who are tired and run down, lacking in energy and vitality, will use Muco-tone, they will praise it as I do for its strengthening and healing qualities."

Rexall Muco-tone works through the blood, and acting directly on the muco-cells—the congestion and inflamation of which are the sole cause of catarrh—causes them to expel the poison and to resume their natural functions. Thus the membranes are cleansed the blood purified and revitalized.

We know that Rexall Muco-tone will cure every form of catarrh, no matter where located, of how long standing, or by what other names it is known. We guarantee to refund your money if you are not satisfied with the vigorous health and clear complexion it brings you.

EASY TO MIX RECIPE

Mix It at Home by Shaking Ingredients in Bottle

Hundreds of People in Vicinity here will Welcome this Advice, says Local Druggist.

What will appear very interesting to many people here is the article taken from a New York daily paper, giving a simple prescription, which is said to be a positive remedy for backache or kidney or bladder derangement, if taken before the stage of Bright's disease.

Fluid extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces. Shake well in a bottle and take in tea-spoonful doses after each meal and again at bedtime.

A well-known druggist here at home, when asked regarding this prescription, stated that the ingredients are all harmless and can be obtained at a small cost from any good prescription pharmacy, or the mixture would be put up if asked to do so. He further stated that while this prescription is often prescribed in rheumatic afflictions with splendid results, he could see no reason why it would not be a splendid remedy for kidney and urinary troubles and backache, as it has a peculiar action upon the kidney structure, cleansing these most important organs and helping them to sift and filter from the blood the foul acids and waste matter which cause sickness and suffering. Those of our readers who suffer can make no mistake in giving it a trial.

THEATRICAL

Quincy Adams Sawyer.

Like the crisp and refreshing autumn breeze, straight from the hills of New England, bringing with it the sweet aroma of the woods and the homely music of the farm-yard, "Quincy Adams Sawyer" will come to the Charlevoix Theatre, November 3.

"Quincy Adams Sawyer" is entirely unlike any of the several great rural dramas that have found their way to the hearts of the people in the past decade. It has a quaintness and unobtrusive sentiment peculiarly its own. Its chief charm is its naturalness. It is never theatrical, never dramatic, but always natural. The characters are drawn so near to life that it requires an effort to become convinced that it is not real. Though the story is simple and very homely it appeals in a mighty way to all kinds of play-goers. Nearly everyone of the country plays on the stage today make it a point to caricature rural life and rural characters, but "Quincy Adams Sawyer," depicts life as it really is in a quiet Massachusetts farming town.

The husking bee scene in the third act has created more talk among those who have seen it than any one incident in a play for a long time in this country. We will have here the same caste and scenic effects used in the New York, Philadelphia and Boston runs.

Neighborhood Notes

"Forestry today means business" said Prof. Roth at the first meeting of the year of the Forestry club of the University of Michigan. "It requires tact, energy, perseverance. It means hard work in school and still harder work out of it. Five years ago when this school was started there were two of us in the class. Today I enrolled the forty-fourth new man. We have 40 men out working in the fields and there are a hundred men in our club at the present time.

"When this school was opened here the government had 50,000,000 acres of forestry preserves from which foresters were excluded. Many states had the title of state forester, and forestry lands, but the titles and the land never got together. At present the government has 100,000,000 acres of land in forest preserves in control of foresters, an enormous increase in five years."

The Hearst independent party in convention assembled at Lansing nominated T. E. Niles of Antrim county, for land commissioner on its state ticket.

Mr. Niles informs the Herald that he received a communication a few days before the above convention asking him to be one of the state presidential electors on the ticket, but he replied he had seen no reason for deserting the republican party and declined the favor with thanks. Then the convention named him for land commissioner and he has since written a letter to the independent party managers positively refusing to have anything to do whatever with the new party.—Manceloua Herald.

The construction of good roads in Michigan has been something of an experiment it develops and next year will see changes in the manner of building macadam roads, especially in sections where automobilists are in the habit of hitting the grit at 40 or 50 miles an hour, for it is said at this gait they burn up the road as fast as they do the gasoline.

The trouble is that at the fast clip the machine pulls the filler apart and the soft tread tires suck it up and the wind distributes the particles over adjacent property. As a result road builders are searching for a preparation which will bind down the surface of the road and wear well in hot and cold weather.

Of a number of gold mines that have been opened along the south shore of Lake Superior during the past half century, only one is now on the active list, and, strangely, this one—the Michigan—is not being run chiefly for the recovery of the yellow metal that the quartz contains, but for the silica of which the rock is largely composed.

There is a ready demand for the silica at prices which, it is said, are sufficient to yield a very good profit, and with a mill installed especially for the preparation of the material for the market, the company plans to put out a considerable product. The chief consumers of silica are the manufacturers of toilet powders. The Michigan is located in the serpentine rock country to the north of Ishpeming. Years ago the property produced gold the like of which was never seen in any camp, it being in small masses like very rich copper.

Mr. Steiner, living a short distance southwest of Bellaire, the latter part of last week purchased an empty whiskey barrel in town and took it home. In the evening one of his boys knocked in one of the heads and with a lantern was exploring the interior when the alcoholic gas within ignited with explosive force and the young man was scorched and pretty well shaken up.—Independent.

Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. TAFT'S INJUNCTIONS.

I ask that every responsible and fair-minded labor leader, every responsible and fair-minded member of a labor organization, read these (Taft's) injunctions for himself. If he will do so, instead of condemning them he will heartily approve of them and will recognize this further astonishing fact that the principles laid down by Judge Taft in these very injunctions, which laboring people are asked to condemn, are themselves the very principles which are now embodied in the laws or practices of every responsible labor organization. The principles which he therein so wisely and fearlessly laid down serve as a charter of liberty for all of us, for wage workers, for employers, or the general public; for they rest on the principles of fair dealing for all, of even-handed justice for all. They mark the judge who rendered them as standing for the rights of the whole people; as far as daylight is from darkness, so far is such a judge from the time-server, the truckler to the mob, or the cringling tool of great, corrupt and corrupting corporations.—President Roosevelt.

remained was that the calamity might have been still more serious. This timely warning had saved his family from perhaps an even greater scandal. He passed the letter in silence to Ryder senior.

The financier was a man of few words when the situation called for prompt action. After he had read the letter through there was an ominous silence. Then he rang a bell. The butler appeared.

"Tell Mr. Bagley I want him."

The man bowed and disappeared.

"Who the devil is this Bagley?" demanded the senator.

"English—blue blood—no money," was Ryder's laconic answer.

"That's the only kind we seem to get over here," growled the senator. "We furnish the money; they furnish the blood. Hang his blue blood! I don't want any in mine." Turning to Jefferson, he said: "Jefferson, whatever the motives that actuated you, I can only thank you for this warning. I think it would have broken my heart if my girl had gone away with that scoundrel. Of course, under the circumstances I must abandon all idea of your becoming my son-in-law. I release you from all obligations you may have felt yourself bound by."

Jefferson bowed and remained silent.

Ryder senior eyed his son closely, an amused expression lowering on his face. After all, it was not so much he who had desired this match as Roberts, and as long as the senator was willing to withdraw he could make no objection. He wondered what part, if any, his son had played in bringing about this sensational denouement, to a match which had been so distasteful to him, and it gratified his paternal vanity to think that Jefferson after all might be smarter than he had given him credit for.

"You never proposed to run away with my daughter?"

At this juncture Mr. Bagley entered the room. He was a little taken aback on seeing the senator; but, like most men of his class, his self conceit made him confident of his ability to handle any emergency which might arise, and he had no reason to suspect that this hasty summons to the library had anything to do with his matrimonial plans.

"Did you ask for me, sir?" he demanded, addressing his employer.

"Yes, Mr. Bagley," replied Ryder, fixing the secretary with a look that filled the latter with misgivings. "What steamers leave tomorrow for England?"

"Tomorrow?" echoed Mr. Bagley.

"I said tomorrow," repeated Ryder, slightly raising his voice.

"Let me see," stammered the secretary. "There is the White Star, the North German Lloyd, the Atlantic Transport"—

"Have you any preference?" inquired the financier.

"No, sir, none at all."

"Then you'll go on board one of the ships tonight," said Ryder. "Your things will be packed and sent to you before the steamer sails tomorrow."

The Hon. Fitzroy Bagley, third son of a British peer, did not understand even yet that he was discharged as one dismisses a housemaid caught kissing the policeman. He could not think what Mr. Ryder wanted him to go abroad for unless it were on some matter of business, and it was decidedly inconvenient for him to sail at this time.

"But, sir," he stammered, "I'm afraid—I'm afraid"—

"Yes," rejoined Ryder promptly, "I notice that—your hand is shaking."

"I mean that I"—

"You mean that you have other engagements?" said Ryder sternly.

"Oh, no—no, but"—

"No engagement at 11 o'clock tomorrow morning?" insisted Ryder.

"With my daughter?" chimed in the senator.

Mr. Bagley now understood. He broke out in a cold perspiration, and he paled visibly. In the hope that the full extent of his plans were not known, he attempted to brazen it out.

"No, certainly not," under no circumstances," he said.

Ryder senior rang a bell.

"Perhaps she has an engagement with you. We'll ask her." To the butler, who entered, he said, "Tell Miss Roberts that her father would like to see her here."

The man disappeared, and the senator took a hand in cross examining the now thoroughly uncomfortable secretary.

"So you thought my daughter looked pale and that a little excursion to Buffalo would be a good thing for her? Well, it won't be a good thing for you, young man, I can assure you of that!"

The English aristocrat began to wilt. His assurance of manner quite deserted him, and he stammered painfully as he floundered about in excuses.

"Not with she—oh, dear, no," he said.

"You never proposed to run away with my daughter?" cried the irate father.

"Run away with her?" stammered Bagley.

"And marry her?" shouted the senator, shaking his fist at him.

"Oh, say, this is hardly fair, three against one, really, I'm awfully sorry, eh, what?"

The door opened, and Kate Roberts bounced in. She was smiling and full of animal spirits, but on seeing the stern face of her father and the pitiable picture presented by her faithful Fitz she was intelligent enough to immediately scent danger.

"Did you want to see me, father?" she inquired boldly.

"Yes, Kate," answered the senator gravely, "we have just been having a talk with Mr. Bagley, in which you were one of the subjects of conversation. Can you guess what it was?"

The girl looked from her father to Bagley and from him to the Ryders. Her aristocratic lover made a movement forward as if to exculpate himself, but he caught Ryder's eye and remained where he was.

"Well?" she said, with a nervous laugh.

"Is it true?" asked the senator, "that you were about to marry this man secretly?"

She cast down her eyes and answered:

"I suppose you know everything."

"Have you anything to add?" asked her father sternly.

"No," said Kate, shaking her head. "It's true. We intended to run away, didn't we, Fitz?"

"Never mind about Mr. Bagley," thundered her father. "Haven't you a word of shame for this disgrace you have brought upon me?"

"Oh, papa, don't be so cross. Jefferson did not care for me. I couldn't be an old dumb. Mr. Bagley has a lovely castle in England, and one day he'll sit in the house of lords. He'll explain everything to you."

"He'll explain nothing," rejoined the senator grimly. "Mr. Bagley returns to England tonight. He won't have time to explain anything."

"Returns to England?" echoed Kate, dismayed.

"Yes, and you go with me to Washington at once."

The senator turned to Ryder.

"Goodby, Ryder. The little domestic comedy is ended. I'm grateful it didn't turn out a drama. The next time I pick out a son-in-law I hope I'll have better luck."

He shook hands with Jefferson and left the room, followed by his crestfallen daughter.

Ryder, who had gone to write something at his desk, strode over to where Mr. Bagley was standing and handed him a check.

"There, sir. This settles everything to date. Good day."

"But I—I"—stammered the secretary helplessly.

"Good day, sir."

Ryder turned his back on him and conversed with his son, while Mr. Bagley slowly and as if regretfully made his exit.

"A STATESMAN WITH A CONSCIENCE."

Description of the Republican Presidential Candidate by Senator Borah of Idaho.

(From Senator Borah's Boston Speech.)

"Now, it seems to be conceded by friend and foe that few men have been nominated for the presidency whose experience, whose training and whose sound and wholesome fashion of grasping and dealing with public questions were equal to those of William H. Taft.

"He is not a crusader, he is a statesman with conscience. He has won his present position through a cheerful, unhesitating and undeviating devotion to duty, through actually achieving things on the open field of action, through an intelligent conception of the strength and worth of our great government with its checks and balances; and the strength and capacity of our citizenship with its loyalty and its patriotism.

"No man ever had a deeper regard for the fundamental principles and precepts upon which this government is founded, and no one ever had a firmer conviction that the constitution is a sufficient chart by which to measure all rights and obligations and to gauge all the demands and all the aspirations and restrain and control all the recklessness of this indomitable race of ours. Trained in the law, eleven years on the bench, he explored well the sources of jurisprudence and carried away from his work an everlasting devotion to order and justice.

"Under all circumstances and under all emergencies, he has proved himself a brave, clean-minded, self-poised and courageous statesman. No man can put his finger upon a little or cowardly act, an incompetent or questionable piece of public service—no stain upon his private life, no shadow upon his public career. And standing now in the full fierce light which beats upon a throne, with eager eyes scrutinizing every act of a long and arduous public career, no doubt arises as to his experience and ability, no challenge comes to his fine sense of duty or his patriotism."

C. H. S. NOTES.

Clyde Coulter of the class of 1906, has entered the University of Chicago to take a course in Commercial service.

The results of examination week for the first month of the year are reported by the teachers to be very unfavorable. If that is actually the state of affairs, it behooves us to work more and play less.

Earl Young of the 1908 left here intending to take a one year course in the Ann Arbor High school but he was advised to attend the University this year because of his "A" diploma.

Mr. King, Professor of the University, visited the high school Friday to determine whether we should remain on the approved list as our time has expired. We have not yet learned the out come of his visit.

The rule is now if anyone is late for school once he will have to remain twenty minutes after school and if late twice in one day to remain just twice as long. If the average standing in deportment falls below eighty per cent the pupil is to remain one-half hour longer just as the teacher in charge thinks best.

In the foot-ball game Saturday between Charlevoix and Boyne City the Charlevoix boys won with a score of 17 to 6. In the first half the Boyne City team was ahead 6 to 5. In the second half Charlevoix scored with two touch downs. The Athletic Association cleared about $12 on the excursion on the Minnie S.

Would Restrain Unlawful Trusts.

Mr. Bryan asks me what I would do with the trusts. I answer that I would restrain unlawful trusts with all the efficiency of injunctive process and would punish with all the severity of criminal prosecution every attempt on the part of aggregated capital to suppress competition.—Hon. Wm. H. Taft, at Columbus, Ohio.

WHAT TAFT WILL DO.

Here is a positive declaration by William H. Taft which should reassure the friends of President Roosevelt:

"If elected I propose to devote all the ability that is in me to the constructive work of suggesting to Congress the means by which the Roosevelt policies shall be clinched."

NEW OFFICERS ARE ELECTED

Veterans and Sons Conclude Meeting at Flint.

The annual convention of the National League of Veterans and Sons and the Ladies' National League came to a close Friday afternoon after having been in session at Flint two days. George Raab of Flint, was elected lieutenant-general of the Veterans and Sons, making that city headquarters of that branch of the organization for the ensuing year. B. F. Shellberg of Detroit, was elected brigadier-general and E. J. Rest of Detroit, officer of the guard. Mrs. Julia Kingsley of Detroit, was elected president of the Ladies' National league, and Mrs. Millie Stuck of Detroit, national secretary. The constitution was amended so as to permit the organization to seek members in states other than Michigan. The convention next year will be held in Bay City.

CUTTING TREES.

Economy Dictates That Saplings Should Not Be Felled.

It is worth while for farmers to pay a little more attention to their farm timber lots. Any one who has had to buy lumber lately knows that its price is almost prohibitory.

In fact, building operations on the farm as well as elsewhere have been greatly kept back by the high prices asked for all kinds of lumber.

Take a trip about the country, and you will see some things that will make your heart ache if you care anything for trees. In the mill yards of the east and middle west, where hemlock and pine grow, you will find little trees, hardly as large around as a stovepipe, waiting to be sawed.

Some of these will hardly make a 2 by 4 scantling.

If those saplings could have been permitted to stand a few years longer they would have been worth many times more than they are now. But the spirit seems to be to cut the trees down now and let them go for what they will bring. This is quite in line with much we do in other directions at the present time. The dollar we can get now is the dollar we must have. Tomorrow may look out for itself.

The farmer has it in his power to put a check to this waste. How? By cutting only such trees as are dead or beginning to die. The best farmers do this themselves, and if they rent their lands they insist that their tenants shall do the same. And then they may set out more trees.

If they are compelled to cut any live trees for building purposes, they may also set out other smaller trees to take their place. They may also fight fire, the worst enemy we have in our forests. They may work for better timber laws. And they may educate their boys to love the woods and try to keep them growing.

CUCUMBERS.

They Need Plenty of Heat, Light and Moisture.

To grow cucumbers to perfection plenty of heat, light and moisture are required. They will thrive in any good soil not too heavy or sandy. Seed may be sown as soon as the danger of frost is past. Six or eight seeds should be planted in each hill, the hills being about six feet apart each way.

In the early spring seed may be sown in hills which are protected by glass covered frames. When the plants have grown to about four inches in height and there seems to be little danger of them being injured by insects or other causes they should be thinned out to about three plants in a hill.

Frequent cultivating is needed until the vines begin to run freely. As cucumbers are subject to several diseases, the old vines should be destroyed or cleared away in the autumn, and the crop should not be planted two years in succession on the same land. The worst feature of cucumber culture is the insect pests, but these may be controlled by dusting with dry insecticides or even with lime dust.

Cucumbers—for pickling should be gathered when quite small. They may be successfully preserved in brine, from which they are taken as needed, soaked in fresh water and placed in vinegar. There are many varieties, each good for a purpose.

HON. WILLIAM HARRIS IS DEAD

Was One of the Best Known Men in the County

THREE TIMES REPRESENTATIVE

Organized Marion and Norwood Townships

Served as Member of the Board of Supervisors Twenty-Three Years, Ten Years as Chairman.

Like an electric shock from a clear sky came the news Monday that Hon. William Harris had suddenly died, of heart failure, at his home in Norwood, as only a few days before he had been greeting his hosts of friends in this city.

Probably there was no other man better known in Charlevoix county or in all this section of the state or who had taken a more active part in the development of this region than Hon. William Harris.

Mr. Harris was born in Saratoga, New York, June 7, 1832, his father being Rev. John Harris, who came with his family to Michigan in 1830 and organized the first Baptist churches in Calhoun county.

The subject of this sketch was married in 1850 to Miss Marion Angell and came to Charlevoix county in 1866, where he started a boarding house at Norwood, afterward engaging in farming. Before leaving Calhoun county, Mr. Harris had served two terms as supervisor of Battle Creek township, and on coming to this county immediately took an active part in public affairs organizing and serving both Marion and Norwood townships, as their first supervisor. He was elected a second time supervisor of Norwood townskip in 1880, and served it continuously for a period of twenty-three years, ten years as chairman of the board.

In 1889 Mr. Harris was chosen as representative in the state legislature from this district, and again in 1895 was called upon to serve the people, being re-elected two years later. Mr. Harris took an active part in shaping legislation and will go down in history as the author of the resolution designating the apple blossom as the Michigan state flower.

Mr. Harris has also occupied many other public positions of trust, and at the time of his death, was postmaster at Norwood, a position which he had occupied for many years.

Mr. Harris voted for John C. Fremont, in 1856 and was a life long republican. He was a member of the Masonic order, belonging to Charlevoix lodge No. 282. He leaves two children, Bertha of Norwood, and Ernest of Ellsworth, the present Republican candidate for Judge of Probate of Antrim county.

Tuesday the Board of Supervisors adopted the following resolutions.

Whereas, the attention of this board has been called to the fact that the Hon. William Harris, late of Norwood township, departed this life at his home on the 19th day of October A. D. 1908, and

Whereas, the deceased is a pioneer of the Grand Traverse region and participated as a supervisor in the organization of this county and served his township and the county as supervisor continuously from then until the year 1902, with marked ability, and

Whereas, the deceased filled many public positions for the county and state, being a member of the first board of school examiners, and took an active interest in the public school work; he served the state for five terms, as a member of the legislature and earned a reputation for quiet dignity, eminent ability and a thorough master of the public questions occupying the attention of the legislation during his membership, and

Whereas, his personal character was such as to draw to him many friends who were loyal to him all ways and both his supporters and his opponents in his political work all recognized and respected his personal integrity and his high ability, and his neighbors and his friends in his township and about his home will long remember his many acts of christian charity and neighborly kindnesses.

Now therefore, be it resolved by this board of supervisors assembled in regular session, that we testify as representatives of the people of Charlevoix county, our respect and esteem for the deceased and express, as such representatives, in this formal way, the respect and esteem and appreciation of the public for his eminent character and public service extending from the earliest pioneer days to the day of his death.

Resolved further, that we extend to the deceased relatives, and particularly to his surviving son and daughter, the sympathy of the people of Charlevoix county for them in this great affliction.

And resolved further, that this board adjourn during the funeral services of deceased out of respect to his memory, and

Resolved further, that these resolutions be spread at large upon the records of this board and that the clerk be instructed to transmit a copy of these resolutions to the surviving son and daughter.

Short funeral services were held at the home today under charge of Rev. F. H. Bayles, after which the body was taken to Battle Creek for burial.

WERE GIVEN RECEPTION

Board of Supervisnrs by County Normal Class

An Evening Which Will Always Remain a Pleasant Memory

Monday evening occurred the annual reception to the supervisors given by the county normal class, and, as is always the case, the members of the board went home enthusiastic in favor of the work being done for our rural schools by the normal.

The board and a few other friends met at the Court House and made their way to the central school building, in a body, where they were welcomed by Superintendent Woodley, Miss Hines and members of the class, after which each guest was given a leaf and piece of paper, with instructions to tear the paper in the shape of the leaf and write their names on the leaf which they constructed and for awhile the county lawmakers were busy.

Afterward a name was pinned on the back of each guest with instructions to guess, by conversation, who they were supposed to represent. For instance, "Bowery Bill" was Peck's Bad Boy and "Billy Pearson, Carrie Nation. Afterward the class gave a short program, consisting of music and each member explaining some feature of the work of the Normal. Miss Margaret Ryan also gave a couple of recitations. On behalf of the guests, Supervisor Correll and Judge Harris spoke a few words, as did Commissioner Milford in appreciation of the work being done to improve our educational system.

Afterward the members of the class served refreshments to demonstrate their proficiency in the art of domestic science and in that, as in all things else, superiority was shown. The meeting closed with the singing of "Michigan, My Michigan."

Destructive Forest Fires.

The whole northern part of the state is on fire in many cases there being great loss of life.

In Charlevoix county the farm home, some stock and buildings of John Oldham of Marion, was totally destroyed at a loss of $1500 partially insured.

The Charlevoix Lumber Co. are the losers of a large amount of wood and skidways of logs.

Reports from the eastern part of the county are that the fires are raging with terrible fury.

WELL MERITED PROMOTION

F. H. Hubbard Elected General Manager of St Louis Sugar Co.

We have just learned that Mr. F. H. Hubbard has been elected General manager of the St. Louis Sugar Co. of St. Louis, Michigan. Mr. Hubbard was formerly assistant manager and secretary of that company which position he resigned to take charge of the Charlevoix factory. At that time this factory was a defunct concern, but through his influence sufficient capital was secured to rehabilitate and put in operation.

Owing to a succession of unfavorable seasons and consequent small beet corps the result has not been all that could be wished for, but much credit is due to him for what success has been attained in overcoming the difficulties incident to the unfavorable conditions.

Mr. Hubbard has the universal respect and confidence of the people of the town and farmers in particular all of whom regret that he is to leave Charlevoix.

We understand that he will not take charge at St. Louis until next spring, but will in the mean time occupy the position of sugar salesman and assistant manager.

For the present Mrs. Hubbard and the children will remain with us and we are pleased to know that they expect to spend their summer vacations in Charlevoix the Beautiful.

Mr. Hubbard and his estimable wife and two beautiful daughters will leave a host of warm friends all of whom wish them success and happiness.

MICHIGAN TO CALIFORNIA

Interesting Description of a Long Journey

Written to the Courier Readers by Mrs. Anna Howe.

Tulare, Cal., September 28, 1908.

EDITOR OF COURIER:

I promised to write you of my trip from Charlevoix the Beautiful to the Golden West, the Land of Sunshine and Flowers.

I boarded the resort flyer at Charlevoix at 6:40 p.m. reaching Chicago in the early morning of the next day. After fourteen hours of tedious waiting in the Santa Fe department, I finally boarded a Santa Fe train, bound for Los Angles. Leaving the city at night I was not able to see much of the country; only now and then the lights of some town or dwelling. After my berth in the sleeper was ready for occupancy, I soon took possession and fell to sleep in short order, awaking at daybreak quite rested and ready to view my new surroundings. I soon found we were traveling through Missouri, having passed over a portion of Illinois and Iowa during the night. A short run across Missouri and I found myself in Kansas. Every thing so far looked thrifty and prosperous, counting as high as thirty good sized stacks of hay in the fields of Kansas with worlds of cattle, horses and sheep to eat it. Missouri is not so fortunate as they had floods in summer destroying the corn and other crops, which they replanted, but was taken later by heavy frosts. Kansas City, Mo., is the place where they do business. Mills and factories too numerous to mention and seemingly plenty of people to run them. Topeka, Kan., is a very picturesque city, the capital buildings are fine structures. We took dinner at Kansas City and supper at Hutchinson, Kan. Night very soon closed in around us and after another tiresome day I was very glad to seek repose in sleep.

Another day found me in Colorado with a good appetite for breakfast which we found in La Junta which seems to be an mining town surrounded mostly by what is called the desert. Desolation, starvation or anything that is terrible waste of country, scarcely a living thing can you see for hours. Riding on a fast train you must run over a great many miles of this barren ground in a day. Ground squirrels and cyoties seem to thrive and other things to starve and die. Cowhides adorn the railroad fences and then bones are strewn over the desert if you look afar and at the foot hills you will see herds of cattle and sheep grazing with here and there a tent or covered wagon for the herder and his dogs to live in. Tents for stables and houses is seen all along the way from Missouri to California. All through Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona and California you will find all along the Santa Fe line, the houses of Mexicans who work for the railroad company. The Mexicans are very dark and greasy looking (rightly named greasers). La Junta is a very pretty, place and Prinidad, I did not admire the mountains that Mr. Bayles also had an opportunity to go to Virginia to a good field, but he decided to remain in Michigan. Mr. Bayles will close his work here November 1 and begin at Muskegon the following Sunday.

MAJESTIC THEATRE CO.

Have Begun the Construction of a New Building.

W. S. Stoddard has secured a permit from the council and has let the contract for the construction of a new cement building on the ground occupied by the Laf-a-Lot, which is being torn down, Munyon & Lusk being the contractors.

Said building will be 85X35, with hollow cement walls 12 feet high, the lobby and lobby floor to be of cement, with a stage 18X20, with dressing room under the stage, the whole to be steam heated throughout.

Mr. Stoddard will operate the same under the name of the Majestic Theatre Co. and promises to give the people a high class place of amusement.

Robbers at Work.

Robbers have broken into several of the cottages on the Sequenota and Belvedere resorts carrying away many valuables. The officers have been so hot on their trail that they deserted their plunder which was found Saturday near Horton's Bay, and brought to this city today by Sheriff McWain.

CHANGES TO BE MADE

In Primary Election Law Next Winter

Will Cover all Parties and Offices—Spring Enrollment be Given in Fall.

As a result of the developments during the primary election campaign, the election and the recount, the Republicans of the state are discussing with much earnestness the changes which will be necessary to improve the primary law and make it fit better the conditions, as well as to correct evils which have appeared in the system as at present in force.

The principal change will be one that will provide for a better separation of parties, and an amendment is to be made which will require each voter to vote the same party ticket in the fall as he registered to vote in the spring. This will prevent, it is believed, wholesale flocking from one party to another when a hard contest is on for a nomination. The law may also be amended to provide for the county boards of canvassers to investigate charges of fraud, if the plans of certain state officials go through, they believing that such matters as well as recounts, should be taken up by counties, instead of state canvassing boards, in order that the recount will not need to be dragged along for an indefinite period, thus endangering the chances of the successful candidate being certified to the election boards.

While it is probable that the law will be made broader, to cover all party nominations for all parties, it is said, there will undoubtedly be some provision made for state and county conventions of political parties. The delegates to the recent state convention were earnest in their demands that party gatherings be continued, and whenever any speaker remarked that it might be the last convention of the party, there were immediately loud cries of "no, no" from all parts of the hall.

Another suggested change is that of providing a comprehensive synopsis of the law for the benefit of election officials, as the result of the late primary show plainly that the law is but little understood and that only indifferent attempts were made to go through the many sections and obtain a knowledge of all its requirements.

Session of Supervisors Nearing the End.

COUNTY ROAD SYSTEM TO BE VOTED ON

At the April Election—Blood Hounds to be Purchased.

All Old Officers but County Board of Canvassers are Re-elected—Report of Poor Superintendents.

Since our last issue the supervisors have been busy and much important business has been transacted.

Hon. L. E. Knowles appeared before the board Thursday and delivered an address on the new constitution, fully explaining the purposed changes to the satisfaction of every member.

Friday, the superintendents of the poor made their annual report the principal features of which were: Amount expended for relief of the poor, $7,547.72; number of persons who received aid during the year, 205; inventory of property on farm, hay, grain and produce, $816.37; live stock, $930.50; implements, $545.05. Secretary Meyer received a vote of thanks for the careful manner in which the accounts were kept.

The soldiers relief commission reported that they had expended $279.95 during the year and had a balance of $1064.13 in the treasury and would ask for no further appropriations.

The election of officers resulted in the choice of the following, all being chosen by unanimous vote: Superintendent of the Poor, G. A. Meyer, Boyne Falls; drain commissioner, E. S. Stacks, Charlevoix; member board of school examiners, W. H. Woodley, Charlevoix; county board of canvassers, A. L. Fitch, Charlevoix, George A. Houghton, Boyne City, A. B. Nicholas, Jr., East Jordan.

Sheriff McWain, Supervisors Coulter and Cambarn were appointed a special committee to purchase two bloodhounds for the use of the county.

Sufficient petitions having been received, the question of the adoption of the county road system will be submitted to the electors in the spring.

Many other important reports remain to be made up to the time of going to press.

CHARLEVOIX LEADS THE STATE

Carries Away First Premiums on Fruit at West Michigan Fair.

Charlevoix, Mich., November 19, 1908.

COURIER:

I noticed in last week's edition of the Charlevoix COURIER an article on the fruit prospects of the surrounding district and thought perhaps it would interest the readers of the COURIER to know what outside authorities think of the fruit produced in this region.

Mr. W. C. Grandy, living about eight miles from Charlevoix on the Boyne City road, is able to prove that this vicinity produced the best fruit in Michigan which is no small statement when you consider that Michigan is noted for its production of fruits. Early in the fall Mr. Grandy was asked to exhibit some fruit at the West Michigan Fair in Grand Rapids, which he did showing two or more kinds of apples, some pears and peaches, and in competition with the state carried off first premium, which proves beyond a doubt I think that Hayes township of Charlevoix county may be counted on when it comes to showing fine fruit.

Respectfully,

"Higher Standards" For The Saloon.

In view of the rising tide of prohibition sentiment all over the country and apropos of recent resolutions adopted by the brewers and other liquor men, the plan proposed by Collier's to create a "voluntary saloon commission" is calling forth considerable press comment. It is suggested that the commission include representatives of the wholesale liquor trade, of law-abiding retailers, and of the temperance movement; also students of social science, practical philanthropists and men conversant with the problems of municipal law-enforcement with regard to saloons; and it is argued by papers which have endorsed the plan that the trade itself, which in national and local conventions has denounced the lawless saloon, should take the first steps in this proposed cooperation.

And indeed why should not the manufacturers and the law-abiding liquor-sellers enter into the plan with alacrity? They are keen-witted enough to perceive with prohibitionists that the more "respectable" the saloon the longer-lived will it be, while the more obnoxious to good citizens it is the sooner will it go. The "high standard"—saloon fills the public conscience and tends to strengthen and perpetuate the lawlessness, while the groggery by its very vileness hastens the day of extermination.

Yet—we find these same people who would "elevate" the saloon strenuously objecting to its presence near their homes. We find many of them opposing saloons in any residential district. Not long ago a Chicago paper was calling attention to the "boulevard saloon". The boulevard, it asserted, should be kept free from anything so detrimental to the morals of the men, women and children who every summer evening come from the more crowded localities to enjoy the purer air and pleasanter sights of these great thoroughfares. "No matter how gilded a place may be where liquor is sold, no matter how quiet, apparently, it is an unfit place for a boulevard." Where then shall the high class saloon go? Unfit here, says the boulevard; no place for it in my block, says the down town business man; it must not come within a wide radius of me, says the church, the school, the home-owner. And the respectable saloon inquires upon its part, how can I maintain the required respectability if I am barred from all respectable neighborhoods? It really seems to us that the friends of the high standard saloon are lacking either in sincerity or in consistancy. But then we do not possess the legal male mind!

SIMPLE HOME RECIPE

Druggists Here in Town say They can Supply the Ingredients or Make up the Mixture.

Get from any prescription phamacist the following:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound Syrup Sarsaparilla, three ounces.

Shake well in a bottle and take a teaspoonful dose after each meal and at bedtime.

The above is considered as the most certain prescription ever written to relieve Backache, Kidney Trouble, Weak Bladder and all form of Urinary difficulties. This mixture acts promptly on the eliminative tissues of the kidneys, enabling them to filter and strain the uric acid and other waste matter from the blood which causes Rheumatism.

Some persons who suffer with the afflictions may not feel inclined to place much confidence in this simple mixture, yet those who have tried it say the results are simply surprising, the relief being effected without the slightest injury to the stomach or other organs.

Mix some and give it a trial. It certainly comes highly recommended. It is the perscription of an eminent authority, whose entire reputation, it is said, was established by it.

A druggist here at home, when asked, stated that he could either supply the ingredients or mix the prescription for our readers, also recommends it as harmless.

A Long Life.

Sir Walter Scott, while traveling in Ireland, was one day accosted by a beggar. He felt in his pocket for a sixpence, but, finding that he had nothing smaller than a shilling about him, gave it to the woman, with the words, "You must give me the change the next time we meet."

"I will, sorr," replied the grateful beggar, "and may yer honor live till ye get it."

fancy "s you, and I myself shall miss you when you go."

"You ask me to be your son's wife and you know nothing of my family," said Shirley.

"I know you. That is sufficient," he replied.

"No, no, you don't," returned Shirley, "nor do you know your son. He has more constancy, more strength of character, than you think and far more principle than you have."

"So much the greater the victory for you," he answered good humoredly.

"Ah," she said reproachfully, "you do not love your son."

"I do love him," replied Ryder warmly. "It's because I love him that I'm such a fool in this matter. Don't you see that if he marries this girl it would separate us and I should lose him? I don't want to lose him. If I welcomed her to my house, it would make me the laughing stock of all my friends and business associates. Come, will you join forces with me?"

Shirley shook her head and was about to reply when the telephone bell rang. Ryder took up the receiver and spoke to the latter downstairs:

"Who's that? Judge Stott? Tell him I'm too busy to see any one. What's that? A man's life at stake? What's that to do with me? Tell him"—

On hearing Stott's name, Shirley nearly betrayed herself. She turned pale and half started up from her chair. Something serious must have happened to bring her father's legal adviser to the Ryder residence at such an hour! She thought he was in Washington. Could it be that the proceedings in the senate were ended and the result known? She could hardly conceal her anxiety and instinctively she placed her hand on Ryder's arm.

"No, Mr. Ryder, do see Judge Stott. You must see him. I know who he is. Your son has told me. Judge Stott is one of Judge Rossmore's advisers. See him. You may find out something about the girl. You may find out where she is. If Jefferson finds out you have refused to see her father's friend at such a critical time, it will only make him sympathize more deeply with the Rossmores, and you know sympathy is akin to love. That's what you want to avoid, isn't it?"

Ryder still held the telephone, hesitating what to do. What she said sounded like good sense.

"Upon my word"— he said. "You may be right and yet"—

"Am I to help you or not?" demanded Shirley. "You said you wanted a woman's wit."

"Yes," said Ryder, "but still!"—

"Then you had better see him," she said emphatically.

Ryder turned to the telephone.

"Hello, Jorkins, are you there? Show Judge Stott up here." He laid the receiver down and turned again to Shirley. "That's one thing I don't like about you," he said. "I allow you to decide against me, and then I agree with you." She said nothing, and he went on looking at her admiringly. "I predict that you'll bring that boy to your feet within a month. I don't know why, but I seem to feel that he is attracted to you already. Thank heaven! You haven't a lot of troublesome relations. I think you said you were almost alone in the world. Don't look so serious," he added laughing. "Cyril is a fine fellow and, believe me, an excellent catch as the world goes."

Shirley raised her hand as if entreating him to desist.

"Oh, don't—don't—please! My position is so false! You don't know how false it is!" she cried.

At that instant the library door was thrown open and the butler appeared, ushering in Stott. The lawyer looked anxious, and his dishevelled appearance indicated that he had come direct from the train. Shirley scanned his face narrowly in the hope that she might read there what had happened. He walked right past her, giving no sign of recognition, and advanced direct toward Ryder, who had risen and remained standing at his desk.

"Perhaps I had better go?" ventured Shirley, although tortured by anxiety to hear the news from Washington.

"No," said Ryder quickly. "Judge Stott will detain me but a very few moments."

Having delivered himself of this delicate hint, he looked toward his visitor as if inviting him to come to the point as rapidly as possible.

"I must apologize for intruding at this unseemly hour, sir," said Stott, "but time is precious. The senate meets tomorrow to vote. If anything is to be done for Judge Rossmore it must be done tonight."

"I fail to see why you address yourself to me in this matter, sir," replied Ryder, with asperity.

"As Judge Rossmore's friend and counsel," answered Stott, "I am impelled to ask your help at this critical moment."

GROWTH OF WEALTH PER CAPITA.

Doctrine that the Poor Are Growing Poorer Shown to Be False.

(From the Los Angeles Times.)

In 1820 the savings banks of the United States held $1,138,576. This was a poor country then compared with now. The amount was only an average of 12 cents for the population of that time. That amount of average economy was very small.

Now the people of this country have $3,690,878,945 in savings banks. This is an average for the whole population of this time of over $12. The actual depositors have an average of $125 to their credit. In 1820 only 8,335 persons in the country were rich enough to have a savings bank account. Now there are 8,588,811.

When James Buchanan, the last Democratic President in a long line, went into office, there was about $100,000,000 in the savings banks of the United States. By 1870, after fighting out the great war, the people, under Republican rule for twenty years, had $550,000,000 in the savings banks. When the next Democratic President took his seat in 1883, the savings of the people had passed the billion point. By 1898 the savings had doubled again.

So there it is. In 1820 there were only about 8,000 people rich enough to have a savings bank account. Now there are over 8,000,000. In 1820 the savings were 12 cents per capita; now they are over $42.

That the poor grow poorer and the rich richer in this country is as true as any other Populistic notion.

In Des Moines Mr. Bryan talked free trade, in Indianapolis sailed into corporations, and in Topeka proclaimed the necessity of the guarantee of bank deposits. Mr. Bryan is geographically adjustable at a moment's notice, and never dismayed when one of his paramount issues blows up.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Henry Cassaway Davis, who was defeated with Parker four years ago, is wiser as well as older. He says he sees no hope for the Democracy, and thinks Parker is again wasting valuable time in making speeches.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Roosevelt on Taft.

I hope and believe that all far sighted citizens who wish to see this country prosperous in material things will support Mr. Taft, but above all I ask for support for him because he stands for the moral uplift of the nation, because his deeds have made good his words, and because the principles to which he is committed are of immeasurable consequence alike to the honor and interest of the whole American people.

Marion Center Grange, No. 956.

Marion Center Grange met in regular session October 16 and was opened in regular form, officers all present but overseer and lecturer. Three candidates were initiated in the third and fourth degrees. After which the regular order of business was taken up and further arrangements were made for the plowing match. The soliciting committee reported good success in securing finances for prizes.

Under good of the order, the lecturer furnished a program and the ladies served a good supper in the basement.

Ironton Grange No. 707.

Ironton grange was called to order at its last meeting by the Worthy Master with twenty-five members present. As Pomona will be held at Ironton October 29, a committee was consisting of Brothers Clarence and James Mitchell and Niels Lyngklip was appointed to look after the teams and to carry all the wood and water needed by the ladies.

Mr. Orvis was initiated in the first and second degrees.

Lecturer's hour consisted of readings, songs and stories. The lecturer urged all members to try and get something for the program next meeting.

The Worthy Master announced that Brother Ole Lyngklip was elected delegate to the state grange from district No. 2.

South Arm Grange No. 815.

South Arm Grange met October 17 with a very good attendance.

Brother Potts the insurance agent for the Patron's Mutual Fire Insurance company was present. Brother and Sister Nowland of Wilson Grange were also visitors at the meeting.

A lively discussion on fire insurance took place among several of the members.

The literary contest is coming on nicely. Each of the four captains took up twenty minutes time in rendering this program. Three very good essays were read, two short speeches were given, one on education and one on socialism. The rest of the program consisted of songs, readings and recitations. A bountiful supper was served.

Worthy Master Olney brought several fine large watermelons. Everyone enjoyed them greatly. The worthy master certainly knows how to raise melons.

Closed to meet October 31.

I believe our strong party with its great principles is only in its infancy. Our glory as a nation has but just begun. There are mighty problems yet to be solved, grave questions to be answered, complex issues to be wrought out, but I believe we can trust the Grand Old Party and its leaders to earn for the entire future of our Nation and of our people as it has cared for them so well in the past.—Hon. James S. Sherman.

DETAILS OF THE POSTAL SAVINGS PLAN

Prompt Performance of Republican Platform Promise Is Certain.

Postal Savings Banks Will Form Safe and Convenient System for Accumulating Savings.

A bill providing for the establishment of postal savings banks was favorably reported by the United States Senate Committee on Postoffices and Post Roads during the recent session of Congress, and is reasonably certain to be enacted into law during the coming session, thus adding prompt performance to the promise of the Republican national platform relative to this form of strengthening our national system of finance.

The bill reported provides for the establishment of postal savings depositories for depositing savings at interest with the security of the Government for the repayment thereof and designates the money-order post-offices and such others as the Postmaster-General may, in his discretion, from time to time designate as savings depositories to receive deposits from the public and to account and dispose of the same according to the terms of the act.

The depositories are to be kept open for the transaction of business every day, Sundays and legal holidays excepted, during the usual post-office business hours of the town and localities where the respective depositories are located, and during such additional hours as the Postmaster-General may designate.

Accounts may be opened by any person of the age of 10 years, and a married woman may open an account free from interference by her husband. A trustee may open an account for another person. No person can open more than one saving account except when acting as trustee for another person.

A depositor's pass book will be delivered to each depositor in which the name and other memoranda necessary for identification will be entered, and entry of all deposits shall be made.

One dollar or a larger amount in multiples of 10 cents will be necessary to open an account, but deposits of 10 cents or multiples thereof will be received after an account is opened.

Upon receiving a deposit the postmaster is required to enter the same in the pass book of the depositor and immediately notify the Postmaster-General of the amount of the deposit and the name of the depositor. The Postmaster-General, upon receipt of such notice, is required to send an acknowledgment thereof to the depositor, which acknowledgment shall constitute conclusive evidence of the making of such deposit.

Interest Allowed on Deposits.

Interest is allowed at the rate of 2 per cent per annum, computed annually, on the average deposit during each quarter of the year. One thousand dollars is the maximum deposit allowed to the credit of any one account, and interest will not be paid on any amount to the credit of an account in excess of $500.

Pass books must be forwarded to the Postmaster-General on the anniversary of the making of the first deposit for verification, posting, and credit of interest due. Withdrawals may be made under rules and regulations to be prescribed by the Postmaster-General. Deposits are exempt from seizure under any legal process against the depositor and they are also exempt from taxation by the United States or any state. The name of a depositor or the amount to his or her credit may not be disclosed unless by order of the Postmaster-General.

Postal savings funds are to be deposited by the Postmaster-General in national banks located as near as may be in the neighborhood where such deposits were received at a rate of interest not less than 2½ per cent per annum. If deposits can not be made in national banks at the specified rate of interest, the Postmaster-General may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury and the Attorney-General, invest the same in State, Territorial, county, or municipal bonds.

THEATRICAL

The figures of the attendance and receipts for the five seasons that "Quincy Adams Sawyer" has been upon the stage prove that nearly three million people have witnessed this great drama of New England rural life at that time. In view of this fact and because of the constantly growing prosperity of this attraction, it can be said with truth that this is a "play of a thousand." For there have been so few similar instances in the history of the American stage that they can be recalled readily by all theatrical men of experience.

"Quincy Adams Sawyer" is unique. Its telling qualities are found in its entire freedom from stage convention. There is no erring girl, no mortgage on the farm, no mourning or wailing and no villain. Yet strength is by no means sacrificed by this abandonment of familiar stage expedients. For there are substituted characters that are real, motives that are natural and a development of interest that holds because it appeals by its strong humanity.

When the famous rural drama is presented at the Charlevoix Theatre November 4 it will be found to be presented by an admirable company, every member of which has been selected with special regard for his or her fitness for the role played. The scenic environments of the drama is in perfect accord with its spirit and the entire entertainment is natural and enjoyable.

The Tide of Prosperity.

The tide of prosperity may ebb and flow, but the great waves of industrial wealth will continue to grow in volume with ever-increasing comfort and happiness to our contented people, who will soon number 100,000,000. And because of our intelligent and skillful labor, made so because of good wages and good living, we shall make better fabrics and build stronger structures—that in spite of their higher cost in the beginning will be cheaper in the end and will be wanted by the people in every corner of the earth. So that we shall capture the markets of the world in greater volume without ever sacrificing our home market, the foundation of our national wealth and progress.—Hon. James S. Sherman.

Sugar Beet and Potato Land

WHERE ALFALFA GROWS

I have 16,000 acres of sugar beet and potato land in the Big Horn Valley of Wyoming, for sale on easy terms at prices ranging from $15.00 to $60.00 per acre. The terms are $8.00 per acre cash and the balance in nine equal annual installments. Raw land produces on average of fifteen tons of sugar beets per acre, averaging an average of eighteen and one-half per cent sugar. It is a desert county, thoroughly irrigated by completed ditches, and the farmer has absolute control of his moisture. Alfalfa land will produce an average of twenty-five tons of sugar beets to the acre when properly irrigated. Worland is the principal town on the Hanover Canal Company's land. Not an acre of this land is over three miles from the railroad, and every acre of it is within five miles of a side-track or a shipping point. The sugar factory at Billings, Montana, is paying $4.50 per ton net for sugar beets delivered at Worland. The sugar company pays the freight. We are now prepared a factory when we have 6,000 acres in beets and the people to tend them. COME OUT AND SEE THE LAND.

This valley is also a fine potato country and produces big potatoes that are solid. The average crop is from 300 to 400 bushels per acre. The biggest crop I have ever seen in this valley was 836 bushels per acre. I have a pamphlet which I would like to send you. It has been carefully prepared and describes the country and its products accurately. Send for it and I will mail it to you promptly. Cheap rates will be made on the 8th and 20th of October, and on the 3rd and 17th of November. 41-43 J. L. LEWIS, Liggett Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

THE LION AND THE MOUSE.

By CHARLES KLEIN.

A Story of American Life Novelized From the Play by ARTHUR HORNBLOW.

COPYRIGHT, 1906, BY C. W. DILLINGHAM COMPANY.

CHAPTER XV.

It was now December, and the senate had been in session for over a week. Jefferson had not forgotten his promise, and one day, about two weeks after Mr. Bagley's spectacular dismissal from the Ryder residence, he had brought Shirley the two letters. She did not ask him how he got them, if he forced the drawer or procured the key. It sufficed for her that the precious letters, the absolute proof of her father's innocence, were at last in her possession. She at once sent them off by registered mail to Stolt, who immediately acknowledged receipt and at the same time announced his departure for Washington that night. He promised to keep her constantly informed of what he was doing and how her father's case was going. It could, he thought, be only a matter of a few days now before the result of the proceedings would be known.

The approach of the crisis made Shirley exceedingly nervous, and it was only by the exercise of the greatest self control that she did not betray the terrible anxiety she felt. The Ryder biography was nearly finished, and her stay in Seventy-fourth street would soon come to an end. She had a serious talk with Jefferson, who contrived to see a good deal of her, entirely unsuspected by his parents, for Mr. and Mrs. Ryder had no reason to believe that their son had any more than a mere bowing acquaintance with the clever young authoress. Now that Mr. Bagley was no longer there to spy upon their actions these clandestine interviews had been comparatively easy. Shirley brought to bear all the arguments she could think of to convince Jefferson of the hopelessness of their engagement. She insisted that she could never be his wife; circumstances over which they had no control made that dream impossible. It were better, she said, to part now rather than incur the risk of being unhappy later. But Jefferson refused to be convinced. He argued and pleaded, and he even swore—strange, desperate words that Shirley had never heard before and which alarmed her not a little—and the discussion ended usually by a kiss which put Shirley completely hors-de combat.

Meantime, John Ryder had not ceased worrying about his son. The removal of Kate Roberts as a factor in his future had not eliminated the danger of Jefferson taking the bit between his teeth one day and contracting a secret marriage with the daughter of his enemy, and when he thought of the mere possibility of such a thing happening he stormed and raved until his wife, accustomed as she was to his choleric outbursts, was thoroughly frightened. For some time after Bagley's departure, father and son got along together fairly amicably, but Ryder senior was quick to see that Jefferson had something on his mind which was worrying him, and he rightly attributed it to his infatuation for Miss Rossmore. He was convinced that his son knew where the judge's daughter was, although his own efforts to discover her whereabouts had been unsuccessful.

Sergeant Ellison had confessed absolute failure. Miss Rossmore, he reported, had disappeared as completely as if the earth had swallowed her, and further search was futile. Knowing well his son's impulsive, headstrong disposition, Ryder senior believed him quite capable of marrying the girl secretly any time. The only thing that John Ryder did not know was that Shirley Rossmore was not the kind of a girl to allow any man to inveigle her into a secret marriage. The Colossus, who judged the world's morals by his own, was not, of course, aware of this, and he worried night and day thinking what he could do to prevent his son from marrying the daughter of the man he had wronged.

The more he pondered over it the more he regretted that there was not some other girl with whom Jefferson could fall in love and marry. He need not seek a rich girl—there was certainly enough money in the Ryder family to provide for both. He wished they knew a girl, for example, as attractive and clever as Miss Green. Ah, he thought, there was a girl who would make a man of Jefferson—brainy, ambitious, active! And the more he thought of it the more the idea grew on him that Miss Green would be an ideal daughter-in-law and at the same time snatch his son from the clutches of the Rossmore woman.

Jefferson during all these weeks was growing more and more impatient. He knew that any day now Shirley might take her departure from their house and return to Massapequa. If the impeachment proceedings went against her father it was more than likely that he would lose her forever, and if, on the contrary, the judge were acquitted Shirley never would be willing to marry him without his father's consent, and this, he felt, he would never obtain. He resolved therefore to have a final interview with his father and declare boldly his intention of making Miss Rossmore his wife regardless of the consequences.

The opportunity came one evening alone in the library reading; Mrs. Ryder had gone to the theater with a friend; Shirley, as usual, was writing in her room, giving the final touches to her now completed "History of the Empire Trading Company." Jefferson took the bull by the horns and boldly accosted his redoubtable parent.

"May I have a few minutes of your time, father?"

Ryder senior laid aside the paper he was reading and looked up. It was unusual for his son to come to him on any errand, and he liked to encourage it.

"Certainly, Jefferson. What is it?"

"I want to appeal to you, sir. I want you to use your influence before it is too late to save Judge Rossmore. A word from you at this time would do wonders in Washington."

The financier swung half round in his chair, the smile of greeting faded out of his face, and his voice was hard as he replied coldly:

"Again? I thought we had agreed not to discuss Judge Rossmore any further?"

"I can't help it, sir," rejoined Jefferson, undeterred by his sire's hostile attitude. "That poor old man is practically on trial for his life. He is as innocent of wrongdoing as a child unborn, and you know it. You could save him if you would."

"Jefferson," answered Ryder senior, biting his lip to restrain his impatience, "I told you before that I could not interfere even if I would, and I won't, because that man is my enemy. Important business interests which you cannot possibly know anything about, demand his dismissal from the bench."

"Surely your business interests don't demand the sacrifice of a man's life!" retorted Jefferson. "I know modern business methods are none too squeamish, but I should think you'd draw the line at deliberate murder!"

"How dare you presume to judge my actions?"

Ryder sprang to his feet and for a moment stood glaring at the young man. His lips moved, but no sound came from them. Suppressed wrath rendered him speechless. What was the world coming to when a son could talk to his father in this manner?

"How dare you presume to judge my actions or to criticise my methods?" he burst out finally.

"You force me to do so," answered Jefferson hotly. "I want to tell you that I am heartily ashamed of this whole affair and your connection with it, and since you refuse to make reparation in the only way possible for the wrong you and your associates have done Judge Rossmore—that is, by saving him in the senate—I think it only fair to warn you that I take back my word in regard to not marrying without your consent. I want you to know that I intend to marry Miss Rossmore as soon as she will consent to become my wife—that is," he added, with bitterness, "if I can succeed in overcoming her prejudices against my family"—

Ryder senior laughed contemptuously.

"Prejudices against a thousand million dollars?" he exclaimed skeptically.

"Yes," replied Jefferson decisively, "prejudices against our family, against you and your business practices. Money is not everything. One day you will find that out. I tell you definitely that I intend to make Miss Rossmore my wife."

Ryder senior made no reply, and as Jefferson had expected an explosion, this unnatural calm rather startled him. He was sorry he had spoken so harshly. It was his father, after all.

"You've forced me to defy you, father," he added. "I'm sorry"—

Ryder senior shrugged his shoulders and resumed his seat. He lit another cigar and with affected carelessness he said:

"All right, Jeff, my boy, we'll let it go at that. You're sorry—so am I. You've shown me your cards—I'll show you mine."

His composed, unruffled manner vanished. He suddenly threw off the mask and revealed the tempest that was raging within. He leaned across the desk, his face convulsed with uncontrollable passion, a terrifying picture of human wrath. Shaking his fist at his son he shouted:

"When I get through with Judge Rossmore at Washington I'll start after his daughter. This time tomorrow he'll be a disgraced man. A week later she will be a notorious woman. Then we'll see if you'll be so eager to marry her!"

"Father!" cried Jefferson.

"There is sure to be something in her life that won't bear inspection," sneered Ryder. "There is in everybody's life. I'll find out what it is. Where is she today? She can't be found. No one knows where she is—not even her own mother. Something is wrong—the girl's no good!"

Jefferson started forward as if to resent these insults to the woman he loved, but, realizing that it was his own father, he stopped short and his hands fell powerless at his side.

"Well, is that all?" inquired Ryder senior, with a sneer.

"That's all," replied Jefferson, "I'm going. Goodby."

"Goodby," answered his father indifferently. "Leave your address with your mother."

Jefferson left the room and Ryder senior, as if exhausted by the violence of his own outburst, sank back limp in his chair. The crisis he dreaded had come at last. His son had openly defied his authority—and was going to marry the daughter of his enemy. He must do something to prevent it; the marriage must not take place, but what could he do? The boy was of age and legally his own master. He could do nothing to restrain his actions unless they put him in an insane asylum. He would rather see his son there, he mused, than married to the Rossmore woman.

Presently there was a timid knock at the library door. Ryder rose from his seat and went to see who was there. To his surprise it was Miss Green.

"May I come in?" asked Shirley.

"Certainly, by all means. Sit down."

He drew up a chair for her, and his manner was so cordial that it was easy to see she was a welcome visitor.

"Mr. Ryder," she began in a low, tremulous voice; "I have come to see you on a very important matter. I've been waiting to see you all evening, and as I shall be here only a short time longer I want to ask you a great favor, perhaps the greatest you were ever asked. I want to ask you for mercy—for mercy to"—

She stopped and glanced nervously at him, but she saw he was paying no attention to what she was saying. He was puffing heavily at his cigar, entirely preoccupied with his own thoughts. Her sudden silence aroused him. He apologized:

"Oh, excuse me! I didn't quite catch what you were saying."

She said nothing, wondering what had happened to render him so absent-minded. He read the question in her face, for, turning toward her, he exclaimed:

"For the first time in my life I am face to face with defeat—defeat of the most ignominious kind—incapacity—inability to regulate my own internal affairs. I can rule a government, but I can't manage my own family—my own son. I'm a failure. Tell me," he added, appealing to her, "why can't I rule my own household, why can't I govern my own child?"

"Why can't you govern yourself?" said Shirley quietly.

Ryder looked keenly at her for a moment without answering her question; then, as if prompted by a sudden inspiration, he said:

"You can help me, but not by preaching at me. This is the first time in my life I ever called on a living soul for help. I'm only accustomed to deal with men. This time there's a woman in the case, and I need your woman's wit"—

"How can I help you?" asked Shirley.

"I don't know," he answered with suppressed excitement. "As I told you, I am up against a blank wall. I can't see my way." He gave a nervous little laugh and went on: "I'm ashamed of myself—ashamed! Did you ever read the fable of the Lion and the Mouse? Well, I want you to gnaw with your sharp woman's teeth at the cords which bind the son of John Burkett Ryder to this Rossmore woman. I want you to be the mouse—to set me free of this disgraceful entanglement."

"How?" asked Shirley calmly.

"Ah, that's just it—how?" he replied. "Can't you think—you're a woman—you have youth, beauty—brains." He stopped and eyed her closely until she reddened from the embarrassing scrutiny. Then he blurted out: "By George! Marry him yourself—force him to let go of this other woman! Why not? Come; what do you say?"

This unexpected suggestion came upon Shirley with all the force of a violent shock. She immediately saw the falseness of her position. This man was asking for her hand for his son under the impression that she was another woman. It would be dishonorable of her to keep up the deception any longer. She passed her hand over her face to conceal her confusion.

"You—you must give me time to think," she stammered. "Suppose I don't love your son. I should want something—something to compensate."

"Something to compensate?" echoed Ryder, surprised and a little discomforted. "Why, the boy will inherit millions—I don't know how many."

"No—no, not money," rejoined Shirley. "Money only compensates those who love money. It's something else—a man's honor, a man's life! It means nothing to you."

He gazed at her, not understanding. Full of his own project, he had mind for nothing else. Ignoring therefore the question of compensation, whatever she might mean by that, he continued:

"You can win him if you make up your mind to. A woman with your resources can blind him to any other woman."

"But if he loves Judge Rossmore's daughter?" objected Shirley.

"It's for you to make him forget her, and you can," replied the financier confidently. "My desire is to separate him from this Rossmore woman at any cost. You must help me." His sternness relaxed somewhat, and his eyes rested on her kindly. "Do you know, I should be glad to think you won't have to leave us. Mrs. Ryder has taken a

SICK PEOPLE
SHOULD INVESTIGATE

I Know the Diseases of Both Sexes Like an Open Book. I have Been Curing Them for 49 Years. In fact, My Entire Life Has Been Devoted to Curing Where Others Have Failed.

I Have Changed Hundreds Upon Hundreds of Nervous Wrecks Into Fine, Strong Men and Women. I Accept No Case I Cannot Cure.

I ESPECIALLY invite all discouraged and dissatisfied ones who have been treated without a cure to write me fully and frankly about their case. It will cost you nothing to write me, and I will gladly tell you your condition, truthfully, honestly—accepting no case that I cannot cure—holding out no false promises. I have spent my whole life in the study and cure of chronic diseases, and my study and investigation have been blessed by the discovery of many new and marvelous methods of treating disease. Forty-nine years ago I graduated from the Western Homeopathic Medical College of Cleveland, O., for two years, Head Physician at the Alma Sanitarium, Alma, Mich. I have spent many long years as a specialist, treating chronic diseases of all kinds with wonderful success, and am now owner of one of the largest sanitariums in the country, giving my entire time to the treatment of Nervous Diseases of both sexes. I cure the worst forms of Epilepsy, St. Vitus Dance, Paralysis, etc.

Dr. Andrew B. Spinney
Specialist in Chronic Diseases.

My long experience in diagnosing cases and my understandings of the different diseases that I treat enable me in almost every case to prescribe by mail a perfect, thorough cure. All correspondence in plain envelopes and sacredly confidential.

I CURE NERVOUS TROUBLES—Wasting Away, Loss of Vitality in Both Sexes. Whether from excesses or overwork, I promptly and positively cure, no matter of how long standing.

I CURE BLOOD POISON—I cure Blood Poison in the first, second and third stages—driving the poison from the system, the taint from the blood; curing pimples, copper spots, sores in the mouth, tumors and ulcers.

I CURE FITS—Epilepsy, St. Vitus Dance, Paralysis, etc., by striking direct at the cause, restoring the diseased nerves to perfect health.

I CURE PILES—in 30 days to stay cured and to never return.

I CURE CONSUMPTION, the Great White Plague, in the first and second stages. Have made a special study of this disease for fifty years. Have cured hundreds given up by home Doctors. Those I cannot treat at home by acting or by mail, I will take to my Sanitarium, where best of medical skill, nursing and private rooms are given, for Ten Dollars a week.

I GUARANTEE TO CURE, to stay cured, liquor, morphine, cocaine, nicotine or cigarette habits. Most cases treated at home.

Call and see me or write to either Sanitarium as below.

No matter what disease you are suffering from, write me fully today. I will answer at once, and my advice, which costs you nothing, may be worth hundreds of dollars—life itself—to you. If I cannot cure you I will tell you so. WRITE TODAY.

Republican Managers' Confidence.

The recent poll by the New York Herald of New York state, showing the state for Taft by about 15,000 plurality; the decrease in the registration in New York city for the first three days of registration; the reported poll of Nebraska, evidencing an increase in the republican vote as compared with recent years, and, probably more than all else, the successful activity of the collecting agency of the Republican National Committee, seems to have given greater confidence to the Republican managers.

All these things of course, are to their advantage at this stage of the canvass, and they must imagine they have victory in sight or else they would not indulge in the, for this campaign, useless trip of Mr. Taft to the southern states.

The statement made that this visit will be of incalculable value in the coming years and aid in the breaks that will come in future campaigns of the Southern Electoral vote betokens a confidence that this campaign is already won for the Republican party. No other circumstances would justify this procedure, this leaving of the actual field of present battle, to visit, four or eight years in advance, the prospective scenes of future triumphs.

This devotion of five days of valuable time to states that cannot be carried by the republicans this year can be accepted by the voters of the country that the Republican chiefs are absolutely confident of a majority of the electoral votes of the republic.

It is the most significant event of the canvass.

Mr. Taft would not take five days from states no necessary to his election as Indiana, Ohio, West Virginia and New York if there was, in his opinion, the slightest doubt of the being carried by his party.

The Democratic platform and organs are again proclaiming the devotion of the Democratic party to the cause of direct nominations.

Whether one believes in the principle of direct nominations or not the fact remains that as sure as the sun will rise and set again, the principle is here to stay and the next legislature will enact a new primary law. With that knowledge who would you rather trust to enact legislation on that line, the Republican or Democratic party.

Compare the records of the two parties. In 1901, Mr. Ferris, the Democratic candidate, made a campaign on the issue of direct nominations, and cut so heavily into the Republican majority that the next Republican legislature, in response to what seemed to be the will of the people, enacted a law providing that in any locality where the people asked for the same, either party could nominate by the direct method. As it was largely in the nature of an experiment many imperfections was found in the law, when put into practice, but it still provided for nomination by the people direct; and at the next session some of the faults rectified and the republican party promises to still further amend the law.

From the time when the first law was passed until the present time, no democrat in Charlevoix county, and hardly in the state, has had an opportunity of voting for a candidate named by the people, until the present time when the candidate for governor, Mr. Hemans, was so nominated, after he had been selected as the candidate by the Democratic State committee, while the majority of the candidates on the Republican ticket have been chosen by the people direct.

Now who would you rather trust to enact this law, a Governor and legislature chosen by direct vote of the people, or the candidates chosen by the convention and committee system, by a party which has refused to nominate its candidates by direct vote, when the opportunity was given them without a cent of additional cost to the taxpayers?

The next legislature will have more important problems to deal with than any other legislature, of recent years, and among them will be many questions of particular interest to this county, such as the prevention of forest fires and the fishing interests.

In presenting to the voters of Charlevoix county the name of W. J. Pearson, as its candidate for representative, the Republican party has taken into consideration the kind of man needed at this time. A man who has a large acquaintance throughout the state, he will be recognized as a real leader from the first day of the session. By experience is he familiar with the problems to be presented, and we predict that Representative Pearson of Charlevoix, will reflect credit on himself and county.

THE city of Charlevoix presents two of the candidates on the Republican ticket. For register, Romeo A. Emrey is a candidate for a second term. During his first term he has proven his worth as an efficient public servant, whose administration of the office has been marked by uniform courtsey, accuracy and extreme carefulness.

Dr. A. M. Wilkinson for coroner, is an able physician, well fitted for the position he seeks.

It is a duty which every Republican owes to this city and his party to see that this city rolls up an immense majority for Emrey and Wilkinson.

AN OPEN MEETING

At Mehodist Church Friday evening October 23

Will be Held by Historical Society—Hon. L. F. Knowles Will Deliver Address.

Realizing the importance of the subject to the people of the state at the present time the Charlevoix Historical society have arranged for an open meeting which will be held at the Methodist church next Friday evening for the discussion of the purposed new constitution of the state.

The value of this meeting should not be over looked as no more important question will be submitted to the voters at the November election, than the one of the adoption or rejection of the constitution of our state.

Hon. L. F. Knowles of Boyne City, one of its builders, will be present and deliver the address, after which the time will be taken up with questions and discussion on the proposed abemment.

Mr. Knowles was one of the leaders of the Con-Con and it is a rare privilege for the voters and citizens of Charlevoix to have the opportunity of coming together and discussing the changes made with Mr. Knowles present to give a clear and lucid explanation of the benefits which the delegates hoped they would bring to the state. The program is as follows:

Piano solo, Miss Helen Smith
Address, The proposed New Constitution of Michigan, Hon. L. F. Knowles, Member Constitutional convention 1907.
Vocal Solo, Miss Loraine Washburn
Discussion on subject of evening by members of Historical Society.
Singing by audience, "Michigan my Michigan."

Home of my heart I sing of thee
Michigan, my Michigan.
Thy lake bound shores I long to see
Michigan, my Michigan.
From Saginaw's tall whispering pines
To Lake Superior's farthest mines
Fair in the light of memory shines
Michigan, my Michigan.
Thou gavest thy sons without a sigh
Michigan, my Michigan
And sent thy bravest forth to die
Michigan, my Michigan.
Beneath a hostile southern sky
They bore thy banner proud and high
Ready to fight but never fly
Michigan, my Michigan.
A grateful country claims them now
Michigan, my Michigan.
And deathless laurel binds each brow
Michigan, my Michigan.
And history the tale will tell
Of how they fought and how they fell
For that dear land they loved so well
Michigan, my Michigan.

Barn Burned Saturday.

Saturday morning the fire department was called out by a fire in L. W. VanDusan's barn on Antrim street and sparks set fire to the roof of the school house but it was quickly put out. The cause of the fire was boys smoking in the barn, which was a total loss.

We have heard many favorable comments on the efficient service which was rendered by the department in preventing a more serious fire.

C. H. S. NOTES.

Reid Hartzig who has been visiting friends in Detroit, has returned to school.

The foot ball boys will play Bellaire Saturday on the home grounds.

Mr. Bell, the superintendent of the Boyne City schools, called here October 11 on his way to East Jordan and was accompanied by Mr. Woodley who is on the examining Board of Teacher's Examination.

Guy Durgan who has been in the southern part of the state the last few weeks, returned October 9 and has started to school.

A vote for McWain and Nicholas means that the criminal affairs of the county will be conducted in an economical manner.

SHOT WHILE HUNTING

Ray Barker of Boyoe City, Seriously Injured

Wednesday of Last Week. While Near Horse Point, Pine Lake.

The first hunting accident of the season in this vicinity occurred Wednesday afternoon and resulted in the serious if not fatal injury to Ray Barker of Boyne city.

Barker who was out duck hunting on Pine Lake near Horse Point decided to go ashore and after pulling his craft on the beach reached into the boat for his shotgun. He got hold of the muzzle to bring it toward him when the hammer caught on the side of the boat or on the seat and discharged the weapon with deadly results at close range into his shoulder. He managed to walk a short distance and the noise of the shooting attracted the attention of two boys who helped him to walk a short distance, but the exertion proved to much for Barker so the boys got a rig and had him taken to Boyne City. Dr. Marshall dressed the wound and probed over a hundred pieces of bullets and wadding out of the shoulder and he still retains a few of the leaden pellets in his lungs, but it was thought best not to attempt to remove them at this time on account of the weak condition of the patient. He has rested quite comfortable since the time of the accident and there are hopes entertained for his recovery.

Neighborhood Notes

It is estimated that the recount demanded by Dr. J. B. Bradley cost the state more than $8000. The greatest expense was in bringing to Lansing 160 election clerks as guardians of the ballot boxes. One hundred were brought from the lower peninsula and sixty from northern Michigan. The average expense of each clerk from the upper peninsula was $40 and about 15 from the lower peninsula.

The three members of the board get $2.10 per day for their services. Two clerks receive $3 and the stenographer $5 per day. In addition there were a number of incidental expenses.

Taking advantage of Brudley's withdrawal of his recount petition the supreme court will not make a decision on the latest point submitted to it during the light. This was on whether or not the ballots marked with lead pencil instead of ink by the election inspectors were legal. Chief Justice Grant notified the court clerk that no decision would be forthcoming, the court having taken judicial notice of Dr. Bradley's withdrawel.

David Ahgosa, one of the best known Ottawa Indians in northern Michigan, died at his home at Omena Tuesday of last week, after a week's illness of pneumonia. He was 78 years old and leaves three sons, Paul and Jake of Omena, and Robert of this place.

David Ahgosa was a picturesque figure and stood out prominently among the men of his race. Born at Old Mission 78 years ago, his father being Chief Ahgosa the last chief of his family, who had been converted to the Christian religion from paganism, he was brought up in a religious atmosphere, although a child of the forest. More than half a century ago he moved to Old Mission, or Omena, as it is now called, where he has since resided, having settled on one of the original 40 acre tracts of land reserved by the Indians in the treaty of 1855 which was made at Detroit. His father was one of the five chiefs who signed the treaty.

Mr. Ahgosa has long been an elder in the Omena Presbyterian church, having joined the church at the time it was organized by Peter Dougherty, a missionary among the Omena Indians. He has been one of the most earnest workers in the organization, and at times spoke to the white people through an interpreter. Although he could speak the English language, he never made an address in English. He had a wealth of Indian legions which he loved to tell, but he could not tell them in English, always using an interpreter when called upon to tell the stories of myth and mystery.

surround the city, they are very bare and desolate and makes the city look as if it was walled in and make you feel as if you were imprisoned. As you travel up the mountain the air becomes cooler and you feel more like living again. The air in the desert is very hot and oppressive. We have two engines now and travel and travel a little slower as a train of twelve cars is rather slow progressing up the mountain road.

I finally found myself in New Mexico among the mountains, mines, Mexican, Italians, Spaniads, Japanese, Indians and Americans, such a jumble of people. Every town you pass through you notice that the people mostly travel on burros or horseback and I also noticed a good hard beaten road just away from the railroad track, no matter what part of the wilderness you were in, desert, mountain or valley. I saw some very fine cities in New Mexico, nevertheless I would rather loose myself in the woods of northern Michigan than take up my abode in New Mexico or Arizona. No doubt there is wealth in their mines, their houses, cattle, sheep and goats, also the mountain timber, but the good Lord deliver us, such places to live in, such ways of living and such fierce looking people to live among, give me the old Empire State or the shores of old Lake Michigan, Michigan my Michigan, or Charlevoix the beautiful (the cleanest little city anywhere) in preference to all their wealth if I have got to live and work in those places in order to possess it. When you look out over the states of Colorado, New Mexico, Arizona and California you feel that when God created the world he had to much rock, he did not know what to do with it so he just heaped it up wherever it was the handiest.

The Canyon Diablo is crossed by the Santa Fe and when you are crossing you feel (Diablo meaning devil) as though you were in close propinity with the evil one. In a few moments you cross the Johnson canyon and to one side you can see the bottomless pit. The petrified forest is near the Santa Fe line, there are five distinct deposits named the First, Second, Third, Blue and North Sigillaria forests. These forests are in Apache county, North Arizona. A mile above sea level the San Francisco Peaks near Flag Stuff are 14,000 ft. high. We change cars at Ash Fork and just at the close of Saturday evening we find ourselves taking supper at the Needles, California. (The town takes its name from the mountain peeks close by.)

We are now fairly in the California desert, the air is so hot, the themometor being 118 and 118 all the summer (on the porches) in the Joaquin valley. We are still in the desert when we reach Mojave. The desert has sage brush, cactus and spanish bayonets growing here and there and the soil is alkali, which resembles our marl at home (when it is dry). After passing Mojave we climb the mountains again, called the Tehachpie Peak, and in order to get on the level again we come around the mountain crossing our track forming a loop, then through a tunnel, then out and around part way and again through a tunnel and so on until we have passed through fourteen tunnels before we are on the level. When I was told it took ten years to decide and lay out this route I did not doubt their story, and made up my mind that the man or men who could find their way to Los Angeles and back to God's country over this route without losing their lives, deserve to be pensioned off by the Santa Fe railway company, with a pile of silver dollars as high as the San Francisco Peaks.

I have now reached Bakersfield where the oil fields are, the hottest place in California. I am within forty miles of my destination a little while and I will here the Sabbath bells ring in Tulare and they will be very welcome sounds.

Here I am at last. I step into an auto and soon found our residence and the best of all a good warm dinner. In my next letter to the COURIER I will tell of this place as I found it.

OUR COUNTY STANDARD BEARERS

Are all Men With a Record Behind Them

FROM REPRESENTATIVE TO CORONERS

Have Made Good in all Positions of Life

Do You Want to Indulge in Experiments
The Records of our Candidates

The Republicans of Charlevoix county present to the voters of this county a ticket which is well able to stand side-by-side with the splendid National and State tickets headed by Taft and Warner.

For Representative in the legislature of Michigan, they present the name of W. J. Pearson of Boyne Falls. A man who is known from one end of the state to the other, as a square man; a man who will represent all the diversified interests of this county; a man, who, from actual experience, understands the needs of the farmer and the lumberman; a man who stands pledged by vote of the convention, which nominated him, to look after the interests of the fisherman. A shrewd business man who has made a success of his own life; a tireless worker; a man who achieves whatever he goes after, the people of Charlevoix county next winter will know that they have a representative in the legislative halls.

WM. J. PEARSON.

Judge J. M. Harris is completing his second term as Judge of Probate. The office of Probate Judge is a peculiar one. In each case, which comes up, new problems are to be worked out. It requires a man of legal training, a man of tact, a man who has the confidence of the people and these peculiar qualifications Judge Harris possess beyond dispute and we have yet to hear an opponent say that during the past eight years he has not conducted the probate office with marked ability.

Frank McWain has demonstrated during the past two years that no mistake was made when the people asked him to preserve the peace of the county. He has done his duty honestly, fearlessly and ably. When expense could be saved Frank McWain has did so. A man who has done his duty, and did it well, we believe that Sheriff Mr. Wain will be found among the leaders when the votes are counted.

The first day that the writer of these lines was in the city he had occasion to call on the county treasurer for some information. The readiness, the trouble, the anxiety of D. S. Payton, at that time and ever since to give to the people full information in regard to county finances has proven his right to the title of the best county treasurer in Michigan, just as he will make a clerk that it will be hard to equal.

Richard Lewis brought to the office of county clerk years of experience as a township official and in the office of clerk has made good.

As the statute provides that Mr. Payton could no longer hold the office of treasurer, we regard it as a piece of good fortune, that a man who possesses the confidence of the people, to so large a degree as Mr. Lewis could be induced to accept the position, where his experience as a supervisor will again be brought into evidence.

Two years ago the Republicans of Charlevoix said to the voters of this county, we present to you, as our representative on the ticket, a worker, a man who has never hesitated to spend both time and money freely in the cause of Republicanism, and who possesses the necessary qualifications for the office of Register of Deeds. Two years has passed and Charlevoix again presents the name of R. A. Emrey backed up with his record of two years of efficient public service and again asks the Republicans of Charlevoix county to cast their votes for R. A. Emrey.

For six years Alfred B. Nicholas was prosecutor of Charlevoix county. The official records show that he made a remarkable record, winning nearly every case he prosecuted. Does that mean anything to you Mr. Taxpayer, it means that Mr. Nicholas made careful investigation before bringing a man to trial. It means that a vast lot of useless and expensive litigation is stopped. It means a saving of dollars to you at every term of court. Ponder this over when you go into your booth on election day.

Arthur G. Urquhart the present Circuit Court Commissioner is a candidate for reelection. Mr. Urquhart has made a good official and is entitled to the full votes of his party.

A. B. NICHOLAS.

E. A. Robinson for surveyor and Drs. Marshall and Wilkinson are able men and complete a splendid ticket.

Violin Instruction.

Miss Gregory, music teacher in the Charlevoix public schools, will give private lessons on piano, violin or mandolin. Phone 81 or address Miss G. M. Gregory.

THEIR WORK MEETS SUCCESS

Board of Commerse Succeed in Landing Great Industry.

GREAT LAKES PORTLAND CEMENT CO

Will be Shipping Cement from Charlevoix Next Summer

Will Employ 250 Men Every Day in the Year
Population of the City will be Doubled

After working on the proposition all summer, the board of directors of the board of commerce are able to announce that plans are practically completed to bring to this city the immense plant of the Great Lakes Portland Cement company now located at Marlborough.

As soon as the board of directors comply with certain agreements, to do which they will ask the assistance of every citizen, the Great Lakes Portland Cement Company agrees to erect on the shores of Pine Lake a cement factory having a capacity of 2500 hundred barrels of cement daily, the factory to be so constructed that this capacity can be doubled. The conditions which the company asks for are easy ones and will not in the long run cost any citizen of this city a single cent, all the board of commerce asks for is your earnest cooperation at this time.

The great factory which is to be moved here cost over one million and a half dollars and the intention is to begin moving operations and continue the work of construction all winter, so that the shipping of cement may begin next summer. To manufacture 2500 barrels of cement, which is made the minimum capacity of the factory, would mean the employment of a force of two hundred and fifty men, who with their families would increase the population of this city one third.

It would give such an impetus to business, that to take care of the needs of such a vast army of employees, would require an additional increase in the working force of all lines of business. The carpenters and mechanics that would be necessary to erect the vast amount of houses which would become necessary, the merchants to supply them with the materials of life and the farmer who produces the raw material.

The factory will never be idle but will be running seven days in the week, twenty-four hours in a day, every day in the year, which means from three to five thousand dollars every Saturday night to be divided among Charlevoix business men and workingmen. In all probability the building of this factory will mean the bringing here of other cement factories, as we have the raw material here to last a dozen factories for a century, and the use of cement is on the increase each year a demand which will never cease.

The reputation of Charlevoix as a summer resort is now firmly established, but what we want is something that will give us business the whole year around and with the raw material for cement, which has been placed by Providence at our doors, with shipping facilities which are unequalled by water, and with the exception of the Michigan Central railroad which would surely come with the establishment of these immense manufacturing plants, we would become the center of the cement industry of the world.

But some may object, saying that the dust will interfere with the resort property. This contingency was carefully looked after and the site is located on the shores of Pine Lake, where by no possible chance could a lot of dust reach any of the resort territory, as nearly all our prevailing winds would blow it the other way, and being heavy it would not reach them anyway.

This is the greatest opportunity ever presented to any city, for the least outlay. It is far superior to any wood-working institution, for once established it would remain perpetual as our supply of raw material is next in sight.

The securing of this great industry by the board of commerce, directors, took days of hard and anxious work. Assist them to keep their agreement and before another year the shipping of cement will be an assured fact.

HAD THEIR TROUBLES

Members of the Oddfellows' Lodge Trying to Make East Jordan

Last Friday night about a dozen of the Oddfellows of Charlevoix started for East Jordan in the big launch Minnie S. They were all in high spirits, thinking of the fine supper awaiting them in East Jordan. There was no east wind blowing, also a fog of smoke.

Capt. George Smith took his bearings from the railroad bridge and everything went lovely until they met the little steam barge Three Brothers, then the crew consisting of Bill Johnson,—Lon Hanshew, Andy McCall and Marshall Randall got scared and refused to work and the passengers became alarmed. All that prevented a panic on board was the Captain consenting to carry them back to Charlevoix. But alas, the wind had turned with the boat and came from the northwest, when Lon Hanshew and Bill Johnson became more frightened then ever, not knowing that the wind had changed, they declared that Smith was taking them to Boyne City. Then Henshew said the compass was wrong and tried to box it. Si Alcox thought the binicle was upside down. Then Charles Arnold tried boxing it when he slipped and fell up against the stanchion and got a box on the ear which made him see stars. After going up and down, back and forth, sometimes following the wind, sometimes by the compass, and sometimes by guess, they brought up on Paddocks point. One of the crew took a lantern and waded ashore and walked down to the end of the point. From the point they headed northwest by the north and a little to the windward and came up to the transfer dock. Here one of the crew took the lantern ashore and piloted them to the railroad bridge in safety. After taking their pedestrian pilot aboard they followed the shores of Round Lake back to their landing in safety, none the worse for their trip and not discouraged rather, for next Friday night they will try it again on the Minnie S. Come on boys and have some of the fun, starting at 6 p.m. sharp. The report is current that if Col. Hamilton had been along they would not have arrived home until morning.

CARNEGIE MEDAL

And $1000 Awarded to Ward W. Bennett

For Act of Heroism in Saving Harry Topon from Drowning, in December 1906.

The Carnegie Hero Fund commission, at its quarterly meeting in Pittsburg, Pennsylvania, last week, recognized 15 persons as having performed acts of heroism deserving recognition under the rules governing the fund provided for by Andrew Carnegie. Each of these persons was awarded a medal, bronze, silver or gold, and a number of them were also awarded cash for educational or other purposes. Among the ones recorded were a number from Michigan, and included in the list was a silver medal and $1000 in cash awarded to Ward W. Bennett, of this city.

The act of bravery which merited this distinction for Mr. Bennett was performed in December 1906. Ward W. Bennett, who has been attached to the Charlevoix Life Saving station for several years, saved a boy named Harry Topon from death by drowning.

The boy was skating at the Narrows in Glen Lake with several companions, when the ice broke, and he was carried by the current into the water and under the surface.

Mr. Bennett immediately plunged through the ice and discovered the boy on the bottom in about ten feet of water. He brought him to the surface with great difficulty, where with the assistance of his brother and several others rescued the unfortunate lad by forming a human chain from the solid ice to where the boy went through. The boy was unconscious and was revived after considerable difficulty. In the absence of a barrel upon which it is usual to roll a person who had suffered in that way, one of the men

IN NATION AND IN STATE

Does the Republican Party Present Leaders

WHO WILL BE CHOSEN NEXT TUESDAY

From Taft to Ming all are Splendidly Equipped

Dodds the Quiet, Forceful Gentleman, Governor Warner and his Colleagues Have Stood for the People's Interests

William H. Taft, for president is the best qualified man who ever became a candidate for the presidency. During the administrations of Presidents McKinley and Roosevelt there has never been a question of diplomacy to settle but what Taft was called upon and he always settled the same with credit to his nation and with added honors to himself.

It was Taft who pacified the Philippines. It was Taft who was sent to Panama, to adjust the difficulties in the way of the building of the canal. It was Taft who was sent to Cuba to teach them the science of self government. It was Taft who was sent to Japan with a message of friendliness and goodwill and it is Taft, the peacemaker, to whom the American people will say, on Tuesday next, we want you with your large experience to become the head of our nation.

James S. Sherman for vice president has had long experience as a member of the House of Representatives and is well trained for the position of presiding officer of the senate.

Francis H. Dodds, our candidate for congress, was chosen as the choice of the Republicans of this district by a splendid majority, and will go to Washington as the representative of all the people. A man who in his own city has made a reputation as a clean man, distinguished for his thoroughness in anything he undertook, he will be an honor to the district.

Governor Fred M. Warner was chosen as the choice of the Republicans of Michigan, for a third term, after he had went before them and gave an account of his stewardship and what he hoped to accomplish, if chosen again as chief executive of the state. Associated with him on the state ticket are men, who either are candidates for re-election by positions which they have filled

Mrs. Sam and Platt Webster of Hayes, were callers at I. S. Websters last Saturday.

Henry Barber estimates that he will have over sixty tons of beets off little over three acres of ground.

Mrs. George Bacott and Mrs. Lena Cram attended the plowing match at Marion last week and spent a very pleasant day.

Miss Eva Cram went to East Jordan Friday evening, with her school friend, and spent over Sunday, returning Monday morning.

A LIBERAL OFFER

The Ivy Drug Store Guarantees to Cure Dyspepsia—If they fail, the Medicine costs Nothing

To unquestionably prove to the people of Charlevoix that indigestion and dyspepsia is curable and that Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets will effect the cure, we will furnish the medicine absolutely free if it fails to give complete satisfaction to any one giving it a trial.

The remarkable success of Rexall Dyspepsia tablets is largely due to the new and successful method of manufacture, whereby the well known properties of Bismouth, Subnitrate and Pepsin have been combined with carminatives and their agents.

Bismouth, Subnitrate and Pepsin are recognized by the entire medical profession as specifics for acute indigestion and dyspepsia.

The Pepsin used in Rexall dyspepsia Tablets is manufactured by a new process which develops its greatest efficiency. Pepsin supplies to the digestive apparatus one of the most important elements of the digestive fluid, and exerts a tonic influence upon all the glands which supply all the other elements necessary to proper assimilation and digestion.

The carminatives add properties which promptly relieve the disturbances and pain caused by undigested food.

The perfect combination of these ingredients make a remedy absolutely incomparable and invaluable for the complete cure of indigestion and dyspepsia.

We are so positively certain of this that we sell Rexall Dyspepsia tablets on our own personal guarantee that they will either cure you or cost you nothing.—The Ivy Drug Store, A. B. Fleischer, proprietor.

COUNTY NORMAL NOTES.

Ruth Bowdish was absent from school last Thursday on account of sickness.

Miss Hines received letters from Bessie Cramer and Grace Hamlin. Both girls are teaching and say they enjoy their work.

The East Jordan boat was disabled and Miss Lewis and Miss Purfield were unable to get to their school on Monday so Jessie Durance and Florence Sheldon took their places.

Thursday afternoon a Mesopotamian missionary, by the name of Rev. John Adams, visited the normal room and gave the class an interesting talk about his native country. The people where Mr. Adams came from are Mohammedans. He is in America for the purpose of getting subscriptions of money to build christian churches and orphanages in Mesopotamia.

Wednesday the normal class, accompanied by Miss Hines and Supt. Woodley, visited the morning session of the board of supervisors. After the board had adjourned candy and nuts were served to the class. Then the class, under the guidance of Supervisors W. D. Gallagher and Gratf, visited the jail and county offices. County Treasurer Payton gave a talk concerning the paying and computation of taxes.

Happiness.

Human happiness, according to the most received notions, seems to consist of three ingredients—action, pleasure and indolence. And though these ingredients ought to be mixed in different proportions, according to the particular disposition of the person, yet no one ingredient can be entirely wanting without destroying in some measure the relish of the whole composition.

W. C. T. U. DEPARTMENT

Vote for Principle.

Naturally no man likes to lose his vote in a presidential election. This is why a good many temperance people—so they say—do not vote the Prohibition ticket. They really believe their vote will be of no account. The Abolitionists of the last century never came into power as a political party; they never elected a candidate; but no one will claim that they ever threw away a vote. As has been aptly said, "their votes were holes in the public conscience as drops of water wear holes in the solid earth." They voted for principle for fifty years, or until anti-slavery became the paramount issue before the country. With the help of voting prohibitionists sentiment the anti-liquor issue is ripening fast, and soon the people are going to solve the drink problem as they solved the slavery question—by abolishing it.

C. H. S. NOTES.

Margery Washburne who was absent last week on account of sickness, is back in school again.

Mr. Woodley visited Mr. Bell of the Boyne City schools last Thursday and Friday.

On Wednesday evening, October 21, the high school football team played some of the old Charlevoix stars and after a very exciting game was defeated 6 to 0.

Last Thursday, October 22, the high school students began work at 8 a.m. in order to have all the classes in the morning. In the afnoon the majority of the students attended the plowing match.

The football boys went to Petoskey last Saturday in spite of the rain and played their team. The boys were defeated 9 to 2 after a close game. The Petoskey team is coming to play here Saturday on a special train with three hundred and fifty rooters, so every one should turn out and help the boys win.

The program Monday morning consisted of a vocal solo by Miss Hubbard, piano selection by Miss Clare Finncan, and a presentation speech by H. L. Iddings, in which he presented to the senior class of 1909, a picture of Washington offering his commission to the feet of Columbia.

A Story of American Life Novelized From the Play by ARTHUR HORNBLOW.

COPYRIGHT, 1906, BY C. W. DILLINGHAM COMPANY.

CHAPTER XV—Continued.

"The matter is in the hands of the United States senate, sir," replied Ryder coldly.

"They are against him!" cried Stott. "Not one senator I've spoken to holds out any hope for him. If he is convicted it will mean his death. Inch by inch his life is leaving him. The only thing that can save him is the good news of the senate's refusal to find him guilty."

Stott was talking so excitedly and loudly that neither he nor Ryder heard the low moan that came from the corner of the room where Shirley was standing listening.

"I can do nothing," repeated Ryder coldly, and he turned his back and began to examine some papers lying on his desk as if to notify the caller that the interview was ended. But Stott was not so easily discouraged. He went on:

"As I understand it, they will vote on strictly party lines, and the party in power is against him. He's a marked man. You have the power to help him." Heedless of Ryder's gesture of impatience, he continued: "When I left his bedside tonight, sir, I promised to return to him with good news. I have told him that the senate ridicules the charges against him. I must return to him with good news. He is very ill tonight, sir." He halted for a moment and glanced in Shirley's direction, and, slightly raising his voice so she might hear, he added, "If he gets worse, we shall send for his daughter."

"Where is his daughter?" demanded Ryder, suddenly interested.

"She is working in her father's interests," replied Stott, and, he added significantly, "I believe with some hope of success."

He gave Shirley a quick, questioning look. She nodded affirmatively. Ryder, who had seen nothing of this byplay, said with a sneer:

"Surely you didn't come here tonight to tell me this?"

"No, sir, I did not." He took from his pocket two letters—the two which Shirley had sent him—and held them out for Ryder's inspection. "These letters from Judge Rossmore to you," he said, "show you to be acquainted with the fact that he bought those shares as an investment—and did not receive them as a bribe."

When he caught sight of the letters and he realized what they were, Ryder changed color. Instinctively his eyes sought the drawer on the left hand side of his desk. In a voice that was unnaturally calm he asked:

"Why don't you produce them before the senate?"

"It was too late," explained Stott, handing them to the financier. "I received them only two days ago. But if you come forward and declare"—

Ryder made an effort to control himself.

"I'll do nothing of the kind. I refuse to move in the matter. That is final. And now, sir," he added, raising his voice and pointing to the letters, "I wish to know how comes it that you had in your possession private correspondence addressed to me?"

"That I cannot answer," replied Stott promptly.

"From whom did you receive these letters?" demanded Ryder.

Stott was dumb, while Shirley clutched at her chair as if she would fall. The financier repeated the question.

"I must decline to answer," replied Stott finally.

Shirley left her place and came slowly forward. Addressing Ryder, she said:

"I wish to make a statement."

The financier gazed at her in astonishment. What could she know about it, he wondered, and he waited with

"You have the power to help him."

curiosity to hear what she was going to say. But Stott instantly realized that she was about to take the blame upon herself, regardless of the consequences to the success of their cause. This must be prevented at all hazards, even if another must be sacrificed, so, interrupting her, he said hastily to Ryder:

"From my son!" exclaimed Ryder, starting. For a moment he staggered as if he had received a blow. He was too much overcome to speak or act. Then, recovering himself, he rang a bell and turned to Stott with renewed fury.

"So," he cried, "this man, this judge whose honor is at stake and his daughter, who most likely has no honor at stake, between them have made a thief and a liar of my son! False to his father, false to his party! And you, sir, have the presumption to come here and ask me to intercede for him!" To the butler, who entered, he said: "See if Mr. Jefferson is still in the house. If he is, tell him I would like to see him here at once."

The man disappeared and Ryder strode angrily up and down the room with the letters in his hand. Then, turning abruptly on Stott, he said:

"And now, sir, I think nothing more remains to be said. I shall keep these letters, as they are my property."

"As you please. Good night, sir."

"Good night," replied Ryder, not looking up.

With a significant glance at Shirley, who motioned to him that she might yet succeed where he had failed, Stott left the room. Ryder turned to Shirley. His fierceness of manner softened down as he addressed the girl:

"You see what they have done to my son"—

"Yes," replied Shirley, "it's the girl's fault. If Jefferson hadn't loved her you would have helped the Judge. Ah, why did they ever meet! She has worked on his sympathy and he—he took these letters for her sake, not to injure you. Oh, you must make some allowance for him! One's sympathy gets aroused in spite of oneself. Even I feel sorry for—these people."

"Don't," replied Ryder grimly; "sympathy is often weakness. Ah, there you are!" turning to Jefferson, who entered the room at that moment.

"You sent for me, father?"

"Yes," said Ryder senior, holding up the letters. "Have you ever seen these letters before?"

Jefferson took the letters and examined them. Then he passed them back to his father and said frankly:

"Yes, I took them out of your desk and sent them to Mr. Stott in the hope they would help Judge Rossmore's case."

Ryder restrained himself from proceeding to actual violence only with the greatest difficulty. His face grew white as death, his lips were compressed, his hands twitched convulsively, his eyes flashed dangerously. He took another cigar to give the impression that he had himself well under control, but the violent trembling of his hands as he lit it betrayed the terrific strain he was under.

"So!" he said, "you deliberately sacrificed my interests to save this woman's father—you hear him, Miss Green? Jefferson, my boy, I think it's time you and I had a final accounting."

Shirley made a motion as if about to withdraw. He stopped her with a gesture.

"Please don't go, Miss Green. As the writer of my ideography you are sufficiently well acquainted with my family affairs to warrant your being present at the epilogue. Besides, I want an excuse for keeping my temper. Sit down, Miss Green."

Turning to Jefferson, he went on:

"For your mother's sake, my boy, I have overlooked your little eccentricities of character. But now we have arrived at the parting of the ways—you have gone too far. The one aspect of this business I cannot overlook is your willingness to sell your own father for the sake of a woman."

"My own father," interrupted Jefferson bitterly, "would not hesitate to sell me if his business and political interests warranted the sacrifice!"

Shirley attempted the role of peacemaker. Appealing to the younger man she said:

"Please don't talk like that, Mr. Jefferson." Then she turned to Ryder senior: "I don't think your son quite understands you, Mr. Ryder, and, if you will pardon me, I don't think you quite understand him. Do you realize that there is a man's life at stake—that Judge Rossmore is almost at the point of death and that favorable news from the senate tomorrow is perhaps the only thing that can save him?"

"Ah, I see," sneered Ryder senior. "Judge Stott's story has aroused your sympathy."

"Yes, I—I confess my sympathy is aroused. I do feel for this father whose life is slowly ebbing away—whose strength is being sapped hourly by the thought of the disgrace—the injustice that is being done him! I do feel for the wife of this suffering man!"

"Ah, it's a complete picture!" cried Ryder mockingly. "The dying father, the sorrowing mother—and the daughter, what is she supposed to be doing?"

"She is fighting for her father's life," cried Shirley, "and you, Mr. Jefferson, should have pleaded—pleaded—not demanded. It's no use trying to combat your father's will."

"She is quite right, father. I should have implored you. I do so now. I ask you for God's sake to help us!"

Ryder was grim and silent. He rose from his seat and paced the room, puffing savagely at his cigar. Then he turned and said:

"Its removal is a political necessity. If he goes back on the bench every petty justice of the peace, every petty official will think he has a special mission to tear down the structure that hard work and capital have erected. No, this man has been especially conspicuous in his efforts to block the progress of amalgamated interests."

"And so he must be sacrificed?" cried Shirley indignantly.

"He is a meddlesome man," insisted Ryder, "and"—

"He is innocent of the charges brought against him," urged Jefferson.

"Mr. Ryder is not considering that point," said Shirley bitterly. "All he can see is that it is necessary to put this poor old man in the public pillory, to set him up as a warning to others of his class not to act in accordance with the principles of truth and justice—not to dare to obstruct the car of Juggernaut set in motion by the money gods of the country!"

"It's the survival of the fittest, my dear," said Ryder coldly.

"Oh," cried Shirley, making a last appeal to the financier's heart of stone, "use your great influence with this governing body for good, not evil! Urge them to vote not in accordance with party policy and personal interest, but in accordance with their consciences—in accordance with truth and justice! Ah, for God's sake, Mr. Ryder, don't permit this foul injustice to blot the name of the highest tribunal in the western world!"

Ryder laughed cynically.

"By Jove! Jefferson, I give you credit for having secured an eloquent advocate!"

"Suppose," went on Shirley, ignoring his taunting comments, "suppose this daughter promises that she will never—never see your son again—that she will go away to some foreign country!"

"No!" burst in Jefferson. "Why should she? If my father is not man enough to do a simple act of justice without bartering a woman's happiness and his son's happiness, let him find comfort in his self justification!"

Shirley, completely unnerved, made a move toward the door, unable longer to bear the strain she was under. She tottered as though she would fall. Ryder made a quick movement toward his son and took him by the arm. Pointing to Shirley, he said in a low tone:

"You see how the girl pleads your cause for you! She loves you, my boy!" Jefferson started. "Yes, she does," pursued Ryder senior. "She's worth a thousand of the Rossmore woman. Make her your wife, and I'll"—

"Make her my wife!" cried Jefferson joyously. He stared at his parent as if he thought he had suddenly been bereft of his senses.

"Make her my wife?" he repeated incredulously.

"Well, what do you say?" demanded Ryder senior.

The young man advanced toward Shirley hands outstretched.

"Yes, yes, Shir—Miss Green, will you?" Seeing that Shirley made no sign, he said: "Not now, father. I will speak to her later."

"No, no; tonight—at once!" insisted Ryder. Addressing Shirley, he went on: "Miss Green, my son is much affected by your disinterested appeal in his behalf. He—he—you can save him from himself. My son wishes you—he asks you to become his wife! Is it not so, Jefferson?"

"Yes, yes, my wife!" advancing again toward Shirley.

The girl shrank back in alarm.

"No, no, no, Mr. Ryder, I cannot; I cannot!" she cried.

"Why not?" demanded Ryder senior appealingly. "Ah, don't—don't decide hastily"—

Shirley, her face set and drawn and keen mental distress showing in every line of it, faced the two men, pale and determined. The time had come to reveal the truth. This masquerade could go on no longer. It was not honorable either to her father or to herself. Her self respect demanded that she inform the financier of her true identity.

"I cannot marry your son with these lies upon my lips!" she cried. "I cannot go on with this deception. I told you you did not know who I was, who my people were. My story about them, my name, everything about me is false, every word I have uttered is a lie, a fraud, a cheat! I would not tell you now, but you trusted me and are willing to entrust your son's future, your family honor in my keeping, and I can't keep back the truth from you. Mr. Ryder, I am the daughter of the man you hate. I am the woman your son loves. I am Shirley Rossmore!"

Ryder took his cigar from his lips and rose slowly to his feet.

"You? You?" he stammered.

"Yes—yes, I am the Rossmore woman! Listen, Mr. Ryder. Don't turn away from me. Go to Washington on behalf of my father, and I promise you I will never see your son again—never, never!"

"Ah, Shirley!" cried Jefferson, "you don't love me!"

"Yes, Jeff, I do. God knows I do! But if I must break my own heart to save my father I will do it."

"Would you sacrifice my happiness and your own?"

"No happiness can be built on lies, Jeff. We must build on truth or our whole house will crumble and fall. We have deceived your father, but he will forgive that, won't you?" she said, appealing to Ryder, "and you will go to Washington—you will save my father's honor, his life, you will?"—

They stood face to face—this slim, delicate girl battling for her father's life, armed against a cold blooded, heartless, unscrupulous man, deaf to every impulse of human sympathy or pity. Since this woman had deceived him, fooled him, he would deal with her as with every one else who crossed his will. She laid her hand on his arm, pleading with him. Brutally, savagely, he thrust her aside.

SICK PEOPLE
SHOULD INVESTIGATE

I Know the Diseases of Both Sexes Like an Open Book. I have Been Curing Them for 49 Years. In fact, My Entire Life Has Been Devoted to Curing Where Others Have Failed.

I Have Changed Hundreds Upon Hundreds of Nervous Wrecks Into Fine, Strong Men and Women. I Accept No Case I Cannot Cure.

I ESPECIALLY invite all discouraged and dissatisfied ones who have been treated without a cure to write me fully and frankly about their case. It will cost you nothing to write me, and I will gladly tell you your condition, truthfully, honestly—accepting no case that I cannot cure—holding out no false promises. I have spent my whole life in the study and cure of chronic diseases, and my study and investigation have been blessed by the discovery of many new and marvelous methods of treating disease. Forty-nine years ago I graduated from the Western Homeopathic Medical College of Cleveland, O., for two years. Head Physician at the Alma Sanitarium, Alma, Mich. I have spent many long years as a specialist, treating chronic diseases of all kinds with wonderful success, and am now owner of one of the largest sanitariums in the country, giving my entire time to the treatment of Nervous Diseases of both sexes. I cure the worst forms of Epilepsy, St. Vitus Dance, Paralysis, etc.

Dr. Andrew B. Spinney
Specialist in Chronic Diseases.

My long experience in diagnosing cases and my understandings of the different diseases that I treat enable me in almost every case to prescribe by mail a perfect, thorough cure. All correspondence in plain envelopes and secredly confidential.

I CURE NERVOUS TROUBLES—Wasting Away, Loss of Vitality in Both Sexes. Whether from excesses or overwork, I promptly and positively cure, no matter of how long standing.

I CURE BLOOD POISON—I cure Blood Poison in the first, second and third stages—driving the poison from the system, the taint from the blood; curing pimples, copper spots, sores in the mouth, tumors and ulcers.

I CURE FITS—Epilepsy, St. Vitus Dance, Paralysis, etc., by striking direct at the cause, restoring the diseased nerves to perfect health.

I CURE PILES—in 30 days to stay cured and to never return.

I CURE CONSUMPTION, the Great White Plague, in the first and second stages. Have made a special study of this disease for fifty years. Have cured hundreds given up by home Doctors. Those I cannot treat at home by seeing or by mail, I will take to my Sanitarium, where best of medical skill, nursing and private rooms are given, for Ten Dollars a week.

I GUARANTEE TO CURE, to stay cured, liquor, morphine, cocaine, nicoline or cigarette habits. Most cases treated at home.

Call and see me or write to either Sanitarium as below.

No matter what disease you are suffering from, write me fully today. I will answer at once, and my advice, which costs you nothing, may be worth hundreds of dollars—life itself—to you. If I cannot cure you I will tell you so. WRITE TODAY.

BEFORE the next issue of the COURIER the election will be over and the people will have again made choice of their officials for another term. In nation, state and county the Republicans await the decision with perfect confidence that the verdict of the people will be, well done.

Their candidate for president was chosen not as a candidate of any faction, but as the choice of the whole party, who would listen to the naming of no other man,

Their candidates for congress, governor, lieutenant governor and state senator, were named direct by the people at a primary election.

In Charlevoix county every man who was named on the Republican ticket announced his candidacy before a single delegate was elected to the county convention, and the delegates thought they were so well qualified for the positions to which they aspired, that not a single vote was recorded against them in convention. Since then they have repeatedly challenged their opponents to bring forth a single reason why they should not be chosen, and have been met only by glittering generalities. They have asked that if the opposition had any reasons why a change should be made such reasons should be given before this, and have been met with silence. Any reasons given now should be taken by the people at their proper value and we believe they will be.

THE securing of the cement factory, the details of which only remain to be worked out is a great victory for the board of directors of the board of commerce. One can hardly imagine what the securing of this great factory will bring to Charlevoix. Only think what it means to have an immense sum of money expended in this city every week; what it means to hear the song of the saw and hammer erecting buildings to house a doubling of our population, and the making of Charlevoix the seat of the largest cement factory in the world.

These are the results of the untiring work of the board of commerce and having did their part they ask that you do yours.

VOTERS! ATTENTION!

Next Tuesday at the regular election precincts you will have an opportunity to vote for the adoption of the new constitution. This you should do regardless of your political affiliations. It makes no difference whether you are Republican, Democrat or Prohibitionist.

The changes as recommended in the new revision are such as will be beneficial to all parties and classes of people. It will save the state annually, several thousands of dollars. It does away with the obnoxious two-thirds rule in the legislature. It extends to women the right to vote on all matters of taxation where they are property owners, grants to the people a conservative initiative on all matters, as well as a referendum on all bills passed by the legislature. This means that in all legislative matters of doubt the people have the supreme power to decide for themselves by their own vote.

Over the entire state is established the so-called 'home rule.' This means that all municipalities, either large or small, can make their own laws instead of being governed by the legislature. It compels telegraph telephone and express companies to pay the same tax as it does the small property owner. The additional revenue that this alone will bring to the people of the state of Michigan, will amount to thousands of dollars. Snap legislation and any opportunity for lobbying to the legislature is absolutely prohibited.

Never before in the history of the state had an opportunity to secure to themselves such a great benefit. It is therefore absolutely necessary that you as a voter, should vote 'yes' for the adoption of the new constitution. It is more important than the election of every candidate on your state ticket. You are therefore urged by the recommendation of all political parties, by the recommendation of all state papers, by the recommendation of all organizations, associations including grangers, and farmers' associations to cast your ballot for the new revision.

If the inspector neglects to hand you this ballot, call his attention to the fact and insist on voting on this proposition.

It is a good rule never to acquire corns.

They are painful, very much in the way, and by no means ornamental.

But when you do get them, remember we have a positive cure in the form of

Corn Solvent

Simply paint it on and watch the troublesome little callouses disappear. Hard or Soft Corns promptly and painlessly removed in a few hours. Guaranteed to cure or money refunded.

Having a Jolly Time.

The Misses Margaret Bowman of East Jordan, Marion Harris, Antoinette Chalonpka, Lulu Jackson, Linda Cook, Bernice Sherman, Mary Kirschner, Mory Finncan, Gertrude Dodge, Sarah Levinson, Pearl and Ruby Emory are holding a house party at the Meech cottage on Dixon avenue this week. From the reports brought from there by their boy friends whom they entertained one evening they are having a jolly good time.

The ladies of White Rose Hive No. 113 will give supper at Maccabee hall, Friday evening, October 30, from 5 to 8. In the evening a Hallowe'en program will be rendered, after which the balance of the evening will be spent in dancing. Bill for supper 25c. Dance 50c. Everybody invited. 42-42

Weedy Thoughts.

Kill the small weeds and you will never have large ones.

A dead weed never goes to seed.

Mustard is better in the kitchen than in a wheatfield. Pull it up by the roots.

Persistence brings reward with Canada thistles, but it takes lots of persistence. Don't let the thistles seed. Sometimes it is well to salt them after cutting.

The best time to cut sweet clover is when it is in blossom. It is hard upon your tools, but harder upon the clover.

Better hoe a cornfield four times when the weeds are small than once when they are big. It's cheaper.

It doesn't pay to cut burdocks with a hoe. Use a spade and cut deep

Dragging corn either when it just comes up or at three or four inches will save lots of trouble later. Use a spike tooth harrow.

Do unto your weeds as you would have your neighbor do unto his.—Farm Journal.

Milk Powder.

The manufacture of milk powder has now reached a stage where the process is considered a success in a business way, and the trouble is to find a satisfactory market for the product. The greatest field seems to be in the sale of the powder made from separated milk from large creameries. The skimmilk can be bought at a price which brings the milk powder to a very low cost. For wholesale purposes it can be packed in bags like flour at very little cost for handling and light cost for transportation as compared with the liquid milk. Large quantities are expected to be used by the biscuit and cracker manufacturers; also by the bakers and confectioners in the manufacture of milk bread, cakes and pies and such products. As it will keep for any length of time, it should find a market on shipboard and for other uses where a supply of fresh milk cannot be had. It is believed that a large business can be built up without interfering to any great extent with the market for fresh milk.

Couldn't See Any One.

"Bridget," cautioned the mistress one afternoon, "if any one calls to see me tell her I'm out. I'm too tired to see any one."

Accordingly a little later a very dear friend who appeared at the front door received this incomprehensible answer to her inquiry if Mrs. Blank were in:

"No, she ain't, mum, an' what's more she says she's so tired she wiot blind."—Exchange.

Geraldine—I hear that you made a bet that I would accept you.

Sugar Beet and Potato Land
WHERE ALFALFA GROWS

I have for sale acres of sugar beet and potato land in the Big Horn Valley of Wyoming, for sale on easy terms at prices ranging from $15.00 to $40.00 per acre. The terms are $8.00 per acre cash and the balance in nine equal annual installments. Raw land produces an average of fifteen tons of sugar beets per acre, carrying an average of eighteen and one-half per cent sugar. It is a desert county, thoroughly irrigated by completed ditches, and the farmer has absolute control of his moisture. Alkali land will produce an average of twenty-five tons of sugar beets to the acre when properly irrigated. Worland is the principal town on the Hanover Canal Company's land. Not an acre of this land is over three miles from the railroad, and every acre of it is within five miles of a side-track or a shipping point. The sugar factory at Billings, Montana, is paying $4.50 per ton net for sugar beets delivered at Worland. The sugar company pays the freight. We are promised a factory when we have 6,000 acres in beets and the people to tend them. COME OUT AND SEE THE LAND.

This valley is also a fine potato country, and produces big potatoes that are solid. The average crop is from 300 to 500 bushels per acre. The biggest crop I have ever seen in this valley was 800 bushels per acre. I have a pamphlet which I would like to send you. It has been carefully prepared and describes the country and its products accurately. Send for it and I will mail it to you promptly. Cheap rates will be made on the 8th and 20th of October, and on the 3rd and 17th of November. 41-43 J. L. LEWIS, Liggett Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

ANNUAL PLOWING MATCH

Held Thursday under Auspices of Marion Center Grange

Large Crowd Present and Fun all day Long – Official Score of Plowing.

Thursday the annual Charlevoix county plowing match was held at the farm of James Cook in Marion township, under the auspices of Marion Center grange. This is looked forward to as a great annual event in this county and this year proved no exception, early in the morning the crowds commencing to arrive until by noon several hundred were present to take in the chicken pie dinner served by the ladies' auxiliary of Marion center grange, which is always one of the great features.

The plowing took place in the forenoon, there being several contestants in each class, viz. Sod, general purpose, jointer and boys. The business men and politicians contributed liberally and over one hundred and forty dollars was hung up in prizes.

Besides the great advantage these matches have been in improving the foundation of successful farming—plowing—it serves another purpose in bringing together the farmers and dwellers in town, all going in together for a good time, which they certainly have.

The afternoon was taken up with field sports the whole concluding with a dance in the evening.

The sports resulted as follows:

Business man's race, Lynn Purdy 1st, W. E. Hampton 2nd.

Womans race, Lottie Cohen.

Potato race, Elmer Meggison.

Three legged race, George Withers and Ainslee Mayne.

Shoe race, Floyd Black 1st, Arthur Sherwood 2nd.

Chicken catching contest, Josephine Orlowski.

Tug of war, O. D. Hammonds' side.

Score of fourteenth annual plowing match.

"You say that you have advocated more radical measures against private monopolies than either I or my party associates have been willing to undertake. You have, indeed, advocated measures that sound more radical, but they have the prime defect that in practice they would not work. I should not in this letter to you discuss your attitude on this question if you did not yourself bring it up, but as you have brought it up, I answer you that in my judgment the measures you advocate would be wholly ineffective in curing a single evil, and so far as they had any effect at all, would merely throw the entire business of the country into hopeless and utter confusion. I put Mr. Taft's deeds against your words. I ask that you be judged both by the words you wish remembered, and by the words that seemingly you and your party now desire to have forgotten. . . . I hold it entirely natural for any great law-defying corporation to wish to see you placed in the Presidency rather than Mr. Taft. Your plans to put a stop to the abuses of these corporations are wholly chimerical. — Theodore Roosevelt."

ODDFELLOWS GRAND LODGE

Was Largest in the History of the Fraternity

Next Year's Meet Will be at Sault Ste. Marie—Flynn Grand Master.

The Oddfellows of Michigan held their Grand lodge at Lansing last week.

Reports of the committees of the order show that it is in a flourishing condition. During the year receipts were $45,581. There is now in the general fund $30,794 and in the home fund $1,929. The total Oddfellow membership is about 50,000 and the Rebekahs have a membership of 28,908. The total net gain in membership in the Oddfellows is 1,774. Five new halls were dedicated during the year.

James W. Flynn of Detroit, was chosen as Grand Master for the coming year. Myles F. Gray of Lansing, as grand herald which puts him in line for promotion. The next session will be held at Sault Ste. Marie.

The Daughters of Rebekah held their state assembly at the same time and the election of officerf resulted as follows.

President, Hannah Baillargeon, Port Huron; vice president, Emma Neimagn, Bay City; warden, Hattie Jackson, Detroit; secretary, Ida M. Davis, Hamilton; treasurer, Clara Strover, Grandville.

The meeting was attended by 770 accredited delegates to the grand lodge and 363 to the Rebekah assembly, besides many others and the attendance was the largest in the history of the fraternity.

DOUBLE ATTRACTION

At the Charlevoix Theatre Next Tuesday Evening, November 3.

The first and big one will be "Quincy Adams Sawyer" one of the finest plays ever given in Charlevoix.

3700 people was the attendance Saginaw one day last week. Don't miss this opportunity of seeing the best show that will visit northern Michigan this season. The second attraction will be the election returns given after every act right hot off the wires, from Maine to California.

The Opera house will remain open until Taft is elected.

Catherine Henry, leading actress with the West Henry Company, has repeatedly appeared with some of the leading productions made in New York City and is probably now the highest salaried leading lady in the country. Miss Henry is a handsome young woman possessing a beautiful form and an artist to her finger tips. "It was a mighty hard job to induce this lady to sign a contract to head this company," says Managers Roberts, "but it is the best stroke of business I ever did, even though her salary is big. Our company plays only the better class plays and nowadays the public expects a good deal, and I have found Miss Henry's acting a perfect revelation to audiences who were accustomed to seeing the usual lack of ability shown by some actors and actresses. I predict that some day she will be classed as one of the most intelligent actresses on the American stage." Will be at the Charlevoix Theatre, November 6 and 7.

Neighborhood Notes

The Kalkaska board of supervisors evidently are in favor of local option. At its session last week a petition was presented asking that the proposition of local option be submitted at the spring election. Of the eleven supervisors on the board, ten voted for and one against submission. There were more signers to the petition placed before the board asking for the submission of the question to the voters in the spring than there were votes cast at the last election. There are four saloons in Kalkaska and one in Rapid City.

Some of the Democratic newspapers recognize the situation well enough to begin already to pick out Cabinet officers for President Taft, but that is something that President Taft can do much better himself.—Philadelphia Press.

DEMOCRATS CANNOT SUPPORT BRYAN

Leaders in the Party All Over the Country Quit the Nebraskan Office-Seeker and Come Out for Taft.

"Cleveland Democrats" Refuse to Be Whipped Into Line and Organize to Fight the Man Who Disrupted the Party—Solid South Shows Signs of Breaking Up.

One of the best indications that the Taft and Sherman ticket will sweep the country in November is found in the continued numerous defections of heretofore prominent Democrats from that party. Practically all of them give as a reason that they cannot support the thrice offered candidate and his changeable and instable theories of government. They simply cannot bring themselves to be identified with Bryan

Perhaps the most mortifying incidents which the Democrats have experienced in the present campaign were in Massachusetts, where two big men named as Democratic presidential electors declined to serve on the ground that they were unable to support Mr Bryan and greatly preferred Mr Taft These men were Ferdinand Straus and C. H. P. Gould, of Lyons Falls, both business men of the Bay state. Mr. Straus, especially, has been prominent in the Massachusetts Democracy for a long time. Their declination to serve as Bryan electors caused a sensation in the old Bay State and throughout the country.

Democratic Congressman for Taft

Eugene Walter Leake, Democratic Representative in Congress from New Jersey, called at Republican National Committee headquarters early this month to offer his services on the stump for William H. Taft. Though he has been a stanch Democrat all his life, he is bitterly opposed to William Jennings Bryan and because he believes that the election of Bryan to the Presidency would mean the greatest calamity to the country since the civil war, he is ready to exert himself to the utmost to aid the election of Judge Taft. He is speaking at Republican rallies throughout the Eastern States.

Democrats Organize to Fight Bryan.

That the sentiments felt by these men are shared by many in New York is shown in the organization of the "Cleveland Democracy," an association whose principles are anti-Bryan, and which has been formed, according to the articles of incorporation, "To revive the true spirit of Democracy among the voters of Harlem and of the whole city." Headquarters have been opened and the club is doing active work, as it is almost unnecessary to say, in the interests of the continuous Nebraska office seeker.

John H. Dos Passos, a leading New York lawyer and author, who has always been a Democrat, has come out in a long statement announcing his allegiance to Taft and denouncing Bryanism and the remnants of the party which Bryan controls. "I am a Democrat," he says, "I expect to cast my vote for Mr Taft." William B. Davenport, a well-known Brooklyn Democrat, for many years Public Administrator of Kings County, has denounced the Democratic platform and is now a vice president of the Taft-Sherman Lawyers' Club.

Anti-Bryan Sentiment Widespread.

Former Special City Judge Irving K. Baxter, of Utica, N. Y., who has always been a Democrat, and was elected on that ticket, not only has repudiated Bryan, but will take the stump and advocate the election of Taft and Sherman. Even up in Maine, where the members of the Democratic minority are supposed to be hopelessly hidebound, there is defection.—W. H. McLaughlin, of Scarboro, for instance, announces that he has become so disgusted with Bryan in the Haskell controversy that he has swung over to the Republican party.

After hearing Judge Taft speak at St. Louis, J. D. Houseman, of Denver, Colo., a well-known railroad builder, announced his conversion to the Republican party and its candidates. Mr. Houseman had been a loyal Democrat for many years. This incident of course, is a direct tribute to Judge Taft's powers as a campaigner, of which many evidences were produced on his new famous western trip.

"Conversions" in the West.

At St. Joseph, Mo., one of the features was the "conversion" of W. F. Davis, a prominent Democrat, who went to a meeting at the stock yards to see Mr. Taft. After sizing up the latter Mr Davis declared: "I thought I would vote for Mr. Bryan, but this man surely looks good to me." Another Missouri Democrat, E. B. Haywood, a Burlington Railroad conductor of St. Louis, evidently was similarly impressed; at any rate, he has announced that Taft will get his vote. Noticeable among the vice presidents at the Taft reception at St Louis were James E. Smith, head of the St. Louis Business Men's League, and Frederick N. Judson, well-known lawyer, both Democrats who have declared their intention of supporting Taft.

Some readers will remember that in 1900 Webster Davis, former mayor of Kansas City, and assistant secretary of the interior under McKinley, bolted McKinley to take the stump for Bryan. Well, Webb Davis now lives in Los Angeles, and is back in the Republican fold, this time to stay, he declares. He says Taft is going to win and he is boosting him all he can.

In Chicago the Business Men's Taft and Sherman Club has been doing strong work in the campaign. Two of the organizers of the club were former Democrats. They are Franklin MacVeagh, wholesale grocer, and Frank H. Jones, secretary of the American Trust and Savings Bank.

Antagonism to Bryan in South.

A former mayor of Birmingham, Ala., spoke to a correspondent for the Baltimore American, as follows: "I can give you the names of 100 prominent men in this community who hope for Bryan's defeat. They are not going about beating drums or proclaiming their intentions from the housetops, but they mean to vote the Republican ticket. They are tired of supporting a candidate who has always some fad to offer that is fundamentally wrong and foolish."

A special correspondent of the New York Evening Post, writing from Atlanta, Ga., says: "There is every evidence on the surface now that the Republican vote in Georgia will be the largest ever cast."

Jerome Hill, a Tennessee capitalist and cotton broker, well known in the South, writes to the Chattanooga Star saying that he has abandoned Democracy and will vote for Taft. "A man like myself," he declares, who was four years in Lee's army and for forty years a Jeffersonian Democrat, fails to see in this modern mongrel Democracy anything to appeal to him as a patriot or for the best interests of himself or his people. From sea to sea this country is prosperous. The question is, Shall we destroy this most healthy condition by the election of Mr. Bryan, with his many theories and impracticable suggestions?" He answers that he will support Taft. He says there are thousands of former Confederates in Tennessee who are with him

William Weems, a lifelong Democrat of Frederick, Md., has announced that he will not support Bryan at the election. "Bryan is too rhetorical in his views for the chief executive of a great nation," says Mr. Weems.

John R. Horsey, of Baltimore, vice-president of the William H. Hooper & Son Company, manufacturers of cotton duck, is another of the many Baltimore Democrats who have come out warmly for Taft

Gen. Simon Buckner, who ran with Palmer on the gold Democratic presidential ticket, in an interview in Baltimore, said that Bryan was not a Democrat and that he intended to vote for Taft "Bryan is a populist and a socialist," said the general.

These examples are only a few of a countless number all over the country which could be enumerated Yet they serve sufficiently to show the popular state of mind.

THE ADMITTED SUPREMACY OF AMERICA.

is chiefly due to the fact that its workmen are better fed than those of any other country.

In the Spanish-American War it was "the man behind the gun" who made the American victory so quick and decisive.

And it is due to "the man behind the gun" in the factory—the workman—that American manufacturing is capturing the markets of the world

The American workman can do more work and better work than any other workman because he is full of energy and vim—because of his better food, clothing and home conditions.

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY has protected him against the cheap labor of Europe.

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY has by wise and far-seeing laws built up American trade in such an extent that the American workman is paid almost three times the wages of European workmen.

If the working men of the United States want these conditions to continue they will vote for the party which has created high wages, namely

THE REPUBLICAN PARTY.

Function of Next Administration.

(Judge Taft at St. Louis, October 8.)

"The function of the next administration is not to be spectacular in the enactment of great statutes laying down new codes of morals, or asserting a new standard of business integrity, but its work lies in the details of furnishing men and machinery to aid the hand of the Executive in making the supervision of the transactions so close, so careful, so constant, that the business men engaged in it may know promptly when they are transgressing the line of lawful business limitations and may be brought up standing whenever this occurs and may be prosecuted where the violations of law are flagrant and defiant, and promptly restrained and penalized."

One of the rocks of the island of St. Helena bears a distinct resemblance to the great Napoleon, so distinct, indeed, that in the old pre-Suez days passengers on ships bound from India to England were wont to crowd the decks at sunset in the hope of catching a glimpse of the marvelous likeness of the emperor whose facial contour used to appear every evening clear cut in the last rays of the sun.

TELLS HOW TO MIX IT

Directions to Prepare a Simple Home Mixture

Tells you how to Overcome Rheumatism with Simple Recipe, Which is easily Mixed.

A well known authority on Rheumatism gives the following valuable, though simple and harmless, perscription, which anyone can easily prepare at home:

Fluid Extract Dandelion, one-half ounce; Compound Kargon, one ounce; Compound syrup of Sarsaparilla, three ounces.

Mix by shaking well in bottle, and take a teaspoonful after each meal and at bedtime.

He states that the ingredients can be obtained from any good prescription pharmacy at small cost, and, being of vegetable extraction, are harmless to take.

This pleasant mixture, if taken regularly for a few days, is said to overcome almost any case of Rheumatism. The pain and swelling, if any, diminishes with each dose, until permanent results are obtained, and without injuring the stomach. While there are many so called Rheumatism remedies, patent medicines, etc., some of which do give relief, few really give permanent results, and the above will, no doubt, be greatly appreciated by many sufferers here at this time.

Inquiry at the drug stores of this neighborhood elicits the information that these drugs are harmless and can be bought separately, or the druggists here will mix the prescription for our readers if asked to.

H. D. Smith of Bellaire has plans completed for the winter's cruise in a seventeen foot launch. He will cross Lake Michigan, then down the drainage canal and Mississippi River to the gulf, thence along the shore and around the Florida keys and up the Atlantic coast to New York; thence up the Hudson river and Erie canal to Buffalo, and from there through Lake Erie, Detroit river, Lake St. Clair and St. Clair river, Lake Huron and the straits of Mackinaw and down Lake Michigan to Elk River and through the inland lakes home. The trip will be made in the interest of a magazine and will consume several months.

Courier Grange Column

Barnard Graoge No. 986.

Barnard Grnnge met in regular session October 21 with some of the officers absent. Master filled the vacancies by appointments. Letters were read from the state grange. Recess was declared by the Master after which there was a general visit. Grange was called to order in the fourth degree and a lively discussion arose on fire insurance. It was decided that some of the by laws could be amended.

Meeting closed in due form to meet again November 2.

Wilson Grange No. 719

Wilson grange met in regular session October 29 with a large attendance.

After a short business session two brothers were initiated in the third and fourth degrees, by the degree team, after which an excellent program was rendered.

The result of the hunt was not satisfactorily decided but afforded a good supper, nevertheless.

Wilson grange is rather proud that two candidates for important county officers belong to our grange. Both were present and got their share of the good things to eat, although Brother Lewis did not arrive until the last dog was dying.

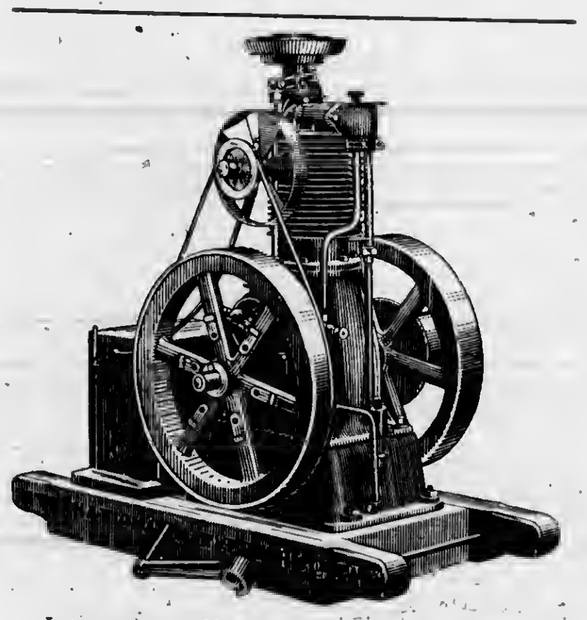
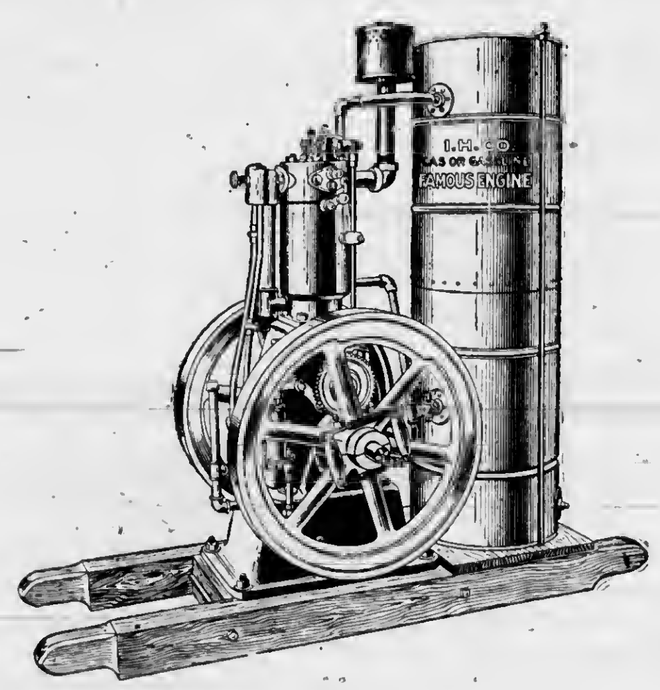
This is the season of the year when a good reliable power is needed for cutting the winter's supply of wood, grinding the feed for the stock and many other purposes.

This machine will grind your feed while you wait and as you want it.



International Harvester Company's gasoline engines are backed up by the largest manufacturers of tools in the world.



Don't waste time by sawing your wood with a buck-saw, but let us furnish you with one of our Labor Saving Engines, one that is all right, runs right and sells right.

This engine will grind your feed, water your stock or anything else that requires the use of power on a farm.

We have a full line of Engines, Grinders, Buzz Sawing and Drag Sawing Machines, etc. A few second hand engines at a great bargain.

EVERYTHING FOR TAFT AND SHERMAN

Elected President and Vice President Tuesday

RESULT ON GOVERNOR IS CLOSE

Warner Will Probably Win by a Small Plurality

Entire Republican County Ticket Elected by Majorities Ranging From 1000 to 1700.

Not withstanding the pleasant weather election day the vote in Charlevoix city was light, although a heavy vote was polled throughout the state and nation.

Immediately after supper those interested gathered at the K. P. hall where free telephone and telegraph service was furnished by the American Telegraph and Telephone company, in connection with the Michigan State Telephone company.

Bulletins were issued, as received, from different parts of the nation, as well as the state, all showing a tremendnous vote for Taft, until at ten o'clock, it became evident that there was no doubt of his election.

Hemans continued to make enormous gains over Warner, as the returns from the large voting centers came in and it will take the vote from the rural districts to decide the contest, although Warner will probably have a small majority. Dodds and Ming will be elected by large majorities.

The county returns were slow in coming in, owing to the many split tickets for governor, and the failure of somebody being ready to send them in. It soon became evident however, that the entire county ticket would be elected by large majorities, and as complete returns came in, it showed them ranging from 1000 to 1700.

Notwithstanding the game light put up by the opponents of Sherill McWain and Register Emrey they won out by splendid majorities, Lewis and Pearson lead by upwards of 1500 votes ahead of their opponents.

Governor Warner was cut quite heavy and in addition the prohibitions voted for Hemans in large numbers.

At this writing it is impossible to give the vote of the minor parties and on the constitutional revision although the latter has probably carried by a large vote.

LARGEST IN THE NORTH

Was the Republican Meeting at Boyne City, Wednesday.

Banquet Followed the Meeting—Many Distinguished Guests.

The republican meeting held at Boyne City Wednesday night was the largest political meeting ever held in northern Michigan, three large halls being packed at all times to hear the distingnished speakers, Senator Burrows, Governor Warner, Ex-governor Rich, Hon. Francis H. Dodds and Hon. A. E. Sleeper.

About one hundred went from Charlevoix as guests of the Charlevoix business men's association, while all the surrounding towns contributed their quota to swell the enormous crowd. With the Charlevoix crowd went the Charlevoix Glee Club composed of Drs. A. M. and F. H. Wilkinson, S. A. Marting, and Galo Hines, who in their songs, written for the occasion by W. E. Hampton, made a decided hit.

The speeches made were what were expected, each of the gentlemen being inspired with spirit of the occasion. After the meeting a banquet was served at the Odd Fellow Hall which was most beautifully decorated. The banquet was a fine tribute to the skill of the caterer, Mr. Isbell. The following toasts were replied to by the guests of the evening, Dr. Marshall acting as toastmaster.

Our Country—Senator Julius Ceaser Burrows.

Our State—Governor Fred M. Warner.

Our District Hon. Francis H. Dodds.

Our County Hon. J. M. Harris,

Our Party—Hon. John T. Rich.

The Ladies—Hon. Joseph H. Grensel.

No better gentlemen could have been found to respond to these toasts each having the subject which lies nearest their hearts and right well did they perform their parts.

As the distinguished party was entering the opera house a section of the walk gave way letting a mass of people down, but the kindly fate which was present prevented anyone receiving any serious injury. Senator Burrows received a slight sprain, but not enough to prevent him presenting a vigorous speech for Republicanism.

For Next Number of Lecture Course Wednesday, November 11.

Wednesday evening, November 11 is the date of the second number on the lecture course. Elias Day and Oranne Truitt-Day will give of their high class entertainments consisting of character sketches, impersonations and readings. Their program is varied and interesting throughout, and each number is of the highest class.

The Iowa City Press speakes us follows of the entertainment given on the state University Course of that city last season.

"One of the most thoroughly delightful entertainments ever presented in the Caldren was that given by Mr. Elias Day and Mrs.

Oranne Truitt-Day. Without costumes, Mr. Day depends upon facial make-up and expression and achieves his ends superbly. Whether he impersonates the Cockney bailiff, the Kentuckey Colonel, the ardent lover, the loquacious Hoosier store lounger, or any other one of the dozen characters, he is as near perfection as possible. He plays upon the heart strings, and the most tender impulses of humanity are awakened by his emotional acting—for his readings in the field of sentiment are trully worthy of the stronger word. To the Bureau our thanks are due for a program so unusually excellent."

A CALIFORNIA FAIR

As Described by Our California Correspondent

Differeol Towns in County Have their Special Day—A Good Plan

Tulare, Cal., October 8 1908.
EDITOR OF THE COURIER:

Thinking, possibly, some of the readers of the COURIER, would like to know how the Tulare county fair was conducted, I will write it up while fresh in my mind, as I had never seen an eastern fair coudnected the same as this one. An army of workers were buzzing around the fair grounds for days the week before. As the fair opened on Monday evening, the track, which is kite shape, had been undergoing treatment for weeks, as the races were expected to be ahead of anything ever pulled off in that line in the county.

Happy Jack had been eugaged to put on "specialtys between acts," the bronco riding of Jack and his men prevented the time from dragging while the horses were on the track, he brought his bucking bull as well as the bronco's. Band concerts and stage entertainments were given every afternoon at the amphitheatre and pavilion besides numerous side entertainments. Prof. E. J. Wikson, of the State University, opened the fair with an address, after which there was a program of band music, several selections by local people and two vandeville artists, employed for the week. There was an immense crowd.

There was about one hundred horses in the exhibit and was well worth going to see. There was horses of all classes and grades, some weighing from 1650 to 2200 and some of the finest cattle I ever set my eyes upon. There were imported dutch belted Herefords, Holstein, Jerseys, Guinseys Polled Durham and Short Horned durham. The Holstein and Jerseys were in the butter fat contest, the Holstein being the winners; there were sixteen varieties of chickens besides the turkeys, ducks, geese and pigeons. There were only two different hogs, Berkshire and Poland China and but very few of them. There were no sheep in the exhibit although there are thousands of them here.

Thursday was the big day at the fair grounds, the attendance being very large and everything moving along with life and energy, it was Tulare and Alta district day and quite a number came from the northern part of the county. Tulare turned out in great numbers, nearly every place of business closing in the afternoon. The great majority of those in the grand stand were ladies, and the scene presented was a bright and pretty one. Hundreds viewed the races from their carriages ranged along the fence. Even during the races many remained in the pavilion and at times that structure was thronged, the races were good, though no records were broken. Between heats Happy Jack did several stunts of bronco busting all of which were lively and interesting, and one of, which came near ending seriously. One of the bronco mounted by the renowned rider made a dash through through the fence, being the grand stand and fell in a heap with its rider, fortunately, Jack threw his body clear, but one of his legs was caught under the horse and it was moments before he could be extricated. He arose unhurt and proceeded with his riding. Nothing fiercer in the way of bucking could be expected or imagined and the way he stuck to the saddle when riding the bucking bull elicited the heartiest applause.

Many persons visited the machinery building where pumps were used in irrigation and all kinds of ranch machinery used here was exhibited, besides all manner of dairy supplies. At the pavilion the agricultural products of the soil were displayed, the displays demonstrated the resources of the county more emphatically than pages of assertion. The wide range in variety was apparent to the most careless observer. To the resident of Tulare county the display was a source of pride and satisfaction. The fair was not only an exposition of the resources of the county but was a great educational affair and brought the constantly growing population of the region into acquaintance with better ways to work, with better things to work with.

I must say I never before saw as fine a display of grapes, 185 varieties, raisin wine and table grapes. I could not begin to tell the different names for them all but I will say some of the clusters were from twelve to eighteen inches in length and would weigh from three to six pounds.

Every evening there was a blue ribbon sale held under the electric lights, horses were sold one evening, cattle the next and so on until hogs as well as the fruit, vegetable and grains were sold. All animals sold were registered stock. The live stock parade was more than fine. This fair gave all the towns in the country a chance to take part in the exhibits and home talent

MILLER-KORTH

Two of Charlevoix's Popular Young People Married Last Week.

A very quiet wedding took place at the home of Mrs. W. M. Miller last Wednesday evening, the contracting parties being Miss Luella Miller and Rudolph Korth. Miss Miller is one of Charlevoix's young and popular girls. Mr. Korth came here about three years ago and has made many friends. A very few friends were present at the ceremony, after which a supper was served.

The young people start out with the best wishes of a large circle of friends. They went to housekeeping at once and are pleasantly domiciled in their home on south State street. The COURIER extends congratulations.

TWENTY-FIFTH ANNIVERSARY

Mr. and Mrs Bowdish Celebrate Saturday Night.

A reunion of the Bowdish family occurred Saturday evening at the home of Mr. and Mrs. M. S. Bowdish on Hulbert avenue, in honor of the twenty-fifth anniversary of their marriage, twenty-five relatives and friends being present.

A bountiful supper was served, followed by an evening which brought back the good old times and which will long be remembered by those present.
